Publisher's note

We feel privileged to be able to place before the legal fraternity the 5th edition of Soonavala's Supreme Court Criminal Digest, a comprehensive work covering all aspects of criminal law from the earliest days of the Indian Supreme Court to the present day — 1950 to 2010.

The decisions of the Supreme Court over the last 6 decades have had an immense impact on every branch of criminal law and are of course binding on all the Courts of the land. The law as interpreted by the highest court is the guiding force for every practitioner and court in the criminal law jurisdiction. The continuous interpretation and evolution of law has resulted in settling major principles and the unsettling of others. One of the consequences has also been that new questions have been raised and new issues brought into focus. Such developments require regular chronicling and updating of judgments in works such as this one. We have endeavored to make this digest the most reliable, user friendly, and organized work in its field.

The case law has been brought up-to-date by including all cases collected till 31st December, 2010. The editors have taken steps to re-arrange the case law in a more orderly fashion. Many distinctive new topical headings have been formulated for this new edition. The present fifth edition covers nearly 30,000 case references, as almost 7500 new references have been added.

We are confident that the present new edition will prove to be an indispensable tool to a wide range of legal professionals as well as the Bench.

preface
to the fourth edition

This work is meant to be a complete digest on the decisions of the Supreme Court on Criminal Law from the time of its inception in the year 1950. We all know that the law, as declared and interpreted by the Supreme Court, is binding on all the Courts of the land. The exercise by the Court of this power of authoritative interpretation has made an immense impact on every branch of criminal law. The continuity and uniformity of interpretation which has been introduced has resulted in gradually dissolving and setting at rest the prevailing conflict of opinion on various aspects of the law, so that once the law relating to any subject is decided by a judgment of the Supreme Court, it becomes profitless labour to delve into the earlier cases covering the same field of conflict.

It has, therefore, become essential for judges and lawyers alike to have ready at hand a comprehensive digest containing between its two covers all the decisions of the Supreme Court on the entire range of criminal law, and it is this need which this book is intended to serve. It contains every decision of the Court till date on every aspect of criminal law, and covers every criminal enactment which has come under the scrutiny of the Court. Its sole purpose is to enable the reader to find the authority on any proposition as to any law which he requires at minimum expenditure of time and energy, and the new scheme of arrangement which is adopted is meant to serve that end.

In compiling the present edition, the editors have taken the liberty of re-arranging the material alphabetically topic-wise, case-law had to be re-arranged, new topics created and some of the old topics re-arranged. This arrangement has been conceived for the purpose of convenience to the readers and in view of the bulk of case-law that has come up under each of the major topics, each of them deserving separate treatment in a topic by itself. Further, each topic has been divided into several headings and sub-headings or division of the subject into various headings, heads and sub-heads with alphabetical letters considering the convenience for easy references.

All the references available in various journals are given underneath the name of the case itself. It is hoped that the new arrangement will be appreciated and found more useful as it also caters to the readers getting only local law journals. The contents have been made thoroughly exhaustive so as to contain every heading in the text of the book.

The case-law has been brought up-to-date by including all cases collected till the work was sent to the press. Thus, this work covers case-law of more than five decades from the inception of the Supreme Court of India in 1950 till 2006. No pains have been spared to make this publication as useful as its predecessor, to the Bench and the Bar.

Although we have spared no pains in bringing and arranging the case-law up-to-date, we are conscious that there may be some scope for improvement and any criticism suggesting such improvement will be most welcome.

It is definitely going to be a tribute to the great author, late Shri J.K. Soonavala, who enlightened for the first time in such a fashion with great deal of labour to put before readers, extracts with his valuable commentaries and notes on all the cases decided by Supreme Court of India on the subject of Criminal Law.

14th December, 2006 —EDITORS

to the third edition

The publishers of this edition were pleased to entrust to us the revision of this monumental work for bringing out its third edition and we accepted the same considering the fact that we have to collect the case-law rendered by the Supreme Court during the last 22 years after the previous edition, on all the criminal enactments in India, both Central and State. It took us five years to do the same while attending to our other appointments and assignments.

Subsequent to the previous edition of this work of 1968, the Code of Criminal Procedures, 1898 was repealed by the Code of 1973 consolidating and amending the law relating to Criminal Procedure. So much so that, the provisions of the old Code regarding committal enquiries in police cases have been repealed, some sections omitted altogether, chapters re-arranged, and new sections enacted. It has therefore become our duty to give corresponding sections of the 1973 Code for the old sections wherever they are noticed in this work and wherever they are available. Further, new Central Acts like MISA, NASA, FERA, COFEPOSA, etc., have been enacted after the previous edition and a huge amount of case-law has come up under those enactments.

In compiling this edition, case-law had to be re-arranged, new chapters and topics created and some of the old topics re-arranged or omitted. Further, we took the liberty of changing the method of dividing the work into "Parts" as in the previous edition into "Volumes" and re-arranging them into 3 Volumes. Now, Volume I deals with the 'The Constitutional Principles of Criminal Law' and 'Indian Penal Code'; Volume II with the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Law of Evidence; Volume III with other Criminal enactments, Central and State, and Interpretation of Statutes. This arrangement has been conceived for the purpose of convenience to the readers and in view of the bulk of case-law that has come up under each of the major Acts and constitutional principles, each of them deserving separate treatment in a volume by itself. Further, each volume has been divided into several chapters and each chapter sub-divided into various topics or the division of the subject in the previous edition into various headings, heads and sub-heads with alphabetical letters is considered to be not convenient for easy references.

But the old method of dealing with the subject has been maintained almost throughout this edition also. A major departure from the previous edition has, however, been made with regards to giving corresponding references for each case noticed in this edition. Now all the references available in various journals are given underneath the name of the case itself. It is hoped that the new arrangement will be appreciated and found more useful as it also caters to the readers getting only local law journals. Another departure from the previous edition is, deletion of Part V thereof dealing with "Criminal Appeals to the Supreme Court" covering Articles 132 to 136 of the Constitution, and including them in Volume I itself dealing with "Constitutional Principles" wherein the serial order of the concerned Articles and a Note has been appended in Volume II on the Cr.P.C. to refer to that portion of Volume I to have a complete idea of appeals in criminal matters.

The case-law has been brought up-to-date by including all cases collected till the work was sent to the press. Thus, this work covers case-law of almost four decades from the inception of the Supreme Court of India. No pains have been spared to make this publication at least as useful as its predecessor if not more, to the Bench and the Bar.

preface to the third edition (contd.)

Another new feature to this edition is that at the end of each volume the reader will find a subject index which has been prepared as exhaustive as possible with profuse cross referencing if such topic/point is involved in any other case. This systematic index provided in each volume will prove a boon to the readers for locating any point of their need in minutes. The subject index is arranged alphabetically and at places act-wise and topic-wise covering each and every subject-matter and point involved in each of the particular case-law covered in each volume.

It is definitely going to be a tribute to the great author, late Shri J.K. Soonavala, who enlightened for the first time in such a fashion with great deal of labour to put before readers extracts with his valuable commentaries and notes on all the cases decided by Supreme Court of India on the subject of Criminal Law.

Y. RAMA RAO

preface to the second edition

I had the honour to be associated with my late esteemed friend Shri J.K. Soonavala, the learned author of this book when the first edition of this book was published. The first edition received tremendous response and was highly appreciated by the members of the Bench and the Bar with the result that all the copies were sold out in a couple of months. Shri Soonavala's style and novel method of arranging the subject-matter in a systematic way has distinguished this book from other books on the same subject. The learned author, himself being a senior counsel knew the difficulties of the Bench and the Bar and evolved a new method whereby authorities could be picked up with minimum time and effort.

The success and the popularity gained by the first publication prompted the publishers M/s. N.M. Tripathi Pvt. Ltd., Bombay, to request him to write a book on Industrial Law adopting the same method. This work was by no means an easy task, but late Shri J.K. Soonavala spared no pains in also mastering this branch of law and completed the said book "Supreme Court on Industrial Law", which also has proved to be as popular as his previous publication.

The publishers Messrs. N.M. Tripathi Pvt. Ltd., Bombay, on seeing the success of the "Supreme Court on Criminal Law" requested him to compile the second edition of the book. The late Shri J.K. Soonavala readily agreed and undertook the strenuous job of writing both the books simultaneously. He worked round the clock for both the books in his usual way. But as fate would have it, he was not to see his work published as he suddenly passed away in December 1965, when his book "Supreme Court on Industrial Law" was in press nearing completion. He had also prepared the manuscript of this edition bringing the case-law up to June 1965.

His wife, Smt. Nargis J. Soonavala, though bereaved by the sudden and untimely death of her husband being impelled by her devotion towards him and to his masterpiece work, undertook to complete both the books of her husband with great determination. Her experience in assisting her husband in his work helped her in this matter. She speedily set herself to this hard and laborious task of collecting and reading through the huge mass of manuscript pages and sending the same to the press after giving her careful attention to the minutest details such as arranging and placing the case-law in their proper order, the preparation of the different indexes and reading the proofs. It is only because of her ability and industry that both these books could be published in time. Her daughter-in-law Smt. Vera P. Soonavala has ably assisted her during all the stages in the preparation of this edition.

I had the honour and privilege in completing the supplement for the year 1965 to his book "Supreme Court on Industrial Law". I was then entrusted with the work of bringing out this edition by adding case-law up to December 1967. The late Shri J.K. Soonavala's first edition of this book had already laid the solid foundation on which the edifice of the present edition could be built. Our patrons will note that I have closely followed in his footsteps in keeping the same arrangement and meticulously bringing the case-law up-to-date and enhancing its utility. The addition of 406 Cases of the Supreme Court to the present edition had necessitated publishing this edition in two volumes. Although we have spared no pains in bringing and arranging the case-law up-to-date, we are conscious that there may be some scope for improvement and any criticism suggesting such improvement will be most welcome.

to the second edition (contd.)

I express my deep sense of gratitude to Smt. Nargis J. Soonavala and her sons Shri P.J. Soonavala and Shri N.J. Soonavala in reposing their fullest confidence in me by giving me an opportunity to compile this edition. I am indebted to all my colleagues who encouraged me in completing the manuscript of this book.

Lastly, I thank Shri A.G. Rajadhyaksha, I.G. of Police, Maharashtra State (the then Commissioner of Police, Greater Bombay) and Shri J. V. Rajadhyaksha, the Chief Police Prosecutor, Greater Bombay, for readily granting me permission which enabled me to complete this work.

Note:—

I have to record here with much grief the sorrowful death of my husband Shri J.K. Soonavala on 4th December 1965, while he was preparing and compiling the second edition of this reference book. As written in the above preface his good friend Shri V.D. Nayak, B.Sc. LL.M., very willingly agreed to our request to complete this massive edition. I have to express my sincere thanks to Shri Nayak for undertaking and completing, so ably, this responsible task, in spite of his official duties.

Lastly, I also wish to thank my sons Parviz and Navroze and my daughter-in-law Vera and Freni for helping me in the preparation of this book and particularly in reading the proofs of this voluminous book.

NARGIS J. SOONAVALA

preface
to the first edition

This work is meant to be a complete reference-book on the decisions of the Supreme Court on Criminal Law from the time of its inception in the year 1950.

We all know that the law, as declared and interpreted by the Supreme Court, is binding on all the Courts of the land, and that even during the relatively short period of a little over a decade, the exercise by the Court of this power of authoritative interpretation has made an immense impact on every branch of criminal law. The continuity and uniformity of interpretation which has been introduced has resulted in gradually dissolving and setting at rest the prevailing conflict of opinion on various aspects of the law, so that once the law relating to any subject is decided by a judgment of the Supreme Court, it becomes profitless labour to delve into the earlier cases covering the same field of conflict.

It has, therefore, become essential for judges and lawyers alike to have ready at hand a comprehensive reference-book containing between its two covers all the decisions of the Supreme Court on the entire range of criminal law, and it is this need which this book is intended to serve. It contains every decision of the Court till date on every aspect of criminal law, and covers every criminal enactment which has come under the scrutiny of the Court.

Its sole purpose is to enable the reader to find the authority on any proposition as to any law which he requires at minimum expenditure of time and energy, and the scheme of arrangement which is adopted is meant to serve that end. The text has been divided into seven parts, each comprising a main branch of criminal law, and each part has been divided into appropriate heads. The decisions of the Court are classified subject-wise. All the cases relating to each subject are first set down in their chronological order under the head covering that subject, and then follows an analysis of each case in the same order. Great care has been taken in the notes to bring out in bold relief the principles of law laid down in each case and the reasoning on which each enunciated principle is founded, and wherever the facts of the case serve to illustrate the application of a principle enunciated therein, such facts have been briefly given. The effort has been to present in an easily assimilable form the continuity and development of interpretation on each subject in successive judgments of the Court.

A simple scheme of reference has been adopted. The contents have been made thoroughly exhaustive so as to contain every heading in the text of the book, and further, two indexes are given, one a chronological and comparative index, and an alphabetical index containing all the page numbers of each case in the text. The chronological index has been made as comprehensive as was feasible and contains a reference to four different series of Law Reports. In the body of the text, citations from the Law Reports at the bottom of each page of the cases annotated on that page, as is usually done, has been avoided, and instead, against the name of each case, its serial number in the chronological index is given, so that when the citation of any case is required, it could be picked up by referring to its serial number in that index. The scheme of reference thus is that when an authority on a particular subject is sought for, the reader has only to refer to the contents and trace the approprite heading covering that subject, and then to look up the same heading in the body of the text where all the cases relating to the first edition (contd.)

to that subject are grouped together, with their serial numbers indicating their citations in the Law Reports. It is hoped that such combined use of the contents, the text, and the indexes will serve the purpose of quick and easy reference within a few minutes to all the authorities on a required subject.

The necessity of including in a book on criminal law, a Part dealing with constitutional principles needs no stress. The Constitution is the paramount law which has laid down for our country a scheme of governance under which a balance has been struck between the rights and freedoms of the citizen and the State's power of social control, and to that end, new tests have been forged for judging the constitutionality of all laws. Hence, after the advent of the Constitution, no study of criminal law can be complete without a thorough understanding of the basic principles of the Constitution as explained and enunciated in the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Interpretation of criminal statutes is a subject in itself, and it comprises important aspects of criminal jurisprudence, such as, basic rules of construction, use of ancillary aids, the effect of the repeal of expiry of statutes, etc. The Court has laid down a large number of principles on this subject, which, however, are interspered. An effort has been made to collect these principles and present them in a classified form, and for that purpose a final Part has been added.

The law relating to several important subjects has now become crystallised as a result of a large number of decisions of the Supreme Court. The principles laid down by the Court as to various aspects of these subjects have been classified under special heads, in the hope that they might be found useful when dealing with cases in which questions as to any of these matters arise. These subjects to which special attention is invited are:

1. Law as to Circumstantial Evidence;
2. Law as to Confessions;
3. Law as to Sufficiency and Corroboration; and
4. Law as to the Effect of contraventions of mandatory rules of procedures.

Appeals to the Supreme Court have been assigned a Part to themselves, and the subject-matter has been classified under headings, such as, principles governing the issue of a Certificate under Article 134, principles as to interference on questions of fact and law with different kinds of orders made by the High Court, rules as to when a new point would or would not be allowed to be urged, the discretion of the Court in the matter of sentence or order, etc.

Finally, all the criminal laws other than the major ones have been dealt within Part VI, under separate main heads, and each main head is sub-divided into sub-heads covering the different principles laid down by the Court as to the different provisions of each enactment.

I have only to add that, though no effort has been spared to present the entire subject-matter in a systematic and classified form, I am conscious of the scope for improvement in its arrangement, and any suggestion or criticism aimed at such improvement will be most welcome.

preface to the first edition (contd.)

I have to convey my thanks to a number of my friends for their encouragement in this endeavour, and particularly to Mr. V.D. Nayak, B.Sc., LL.B., Mr. K.S. Kamath, B.Sc., LL.B., Mr. H.M. Joshi, B.A., LL.B., and to my wife, for their assistance in reading the proofs.

COGNIZANCE

[7028] ● Taking cognizance on interlocutory order.—The mere fact that a Magistrate has applied his mind to a case is not enough for saying that he has "taken cognizance" of that case. The question whether a Magistrate has "taken cognizance" of any offence depends upon the purpose for which he has applied his mind to it and the stage at which he has done so.

If the purpose for which a Magistrate looks into the papers of a case is only for making some interlocutory order at a stage when the matter is under investigation, which is required as a step in the investigation, it cannot be said merely on that account that he has "taken cognizance". On the other hand, if he applies his mind to a case after receiving a police-report or a complaint of an offence, and does so for the purpose of proceeding with the case, he must be said to have "taken cognizance" of that case.

Application of a Magistrate's mind to a case does not amount to "taking cognizance" within the meaning of that expression as used in the Code if it has been done only for the purpose of making any of the following orders which are only steps in the investigation of the case :

1. an order under Section 155(2) or 156(3) directing an investigation to be made by a police officer in any case, or
2. an order under Section 96 issuing a search-warrant for any document or thing, or
3. an order under Section 167(2) remanding an accused to custody, or
4. an order under Section 496 or 497 (now Section 436 or 437) granting or refusing bail.

On the other hand, application of a Magistrate's mind to a case amounts to "taking cognizance", if it has been done for any of the following purposes :

1. examination of the complainant under Section 200, or
2. directing an inquiry under Section 202, or
3. issue of an order under Section 207-A (no new section), or
4. taking the plea of an accused under Section 242 (now Section 251), or
5. taking any action under Section 251-A (now Section 238).

An order under Section 5-A of the Prevention of Corruption Act authorising an officer below the rank designated in that section to investigate an offence referred to in the Act, is only an interlocutory order which precedes the taking of "cognizance" of that offence within the meaning of Section 190 of the Code, or Section 6 of the Act, and the legality of such an order is not open to question merely because sanction for prosecution under Section 6 of the Act, which is a prerequisite of cognizance of such offences, has not been granted at the date when the order under Section 5-A is made by the Magistrate. R.R. Chari

v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1951 SC 207 : 1952 CrLJ 775 : 1951 SCJ 302.

[7029] ● Legality of trial not to be questioned on invalidity of cognizance.—All that Section 173(1) of the Code requires is that as soon as an investigation of an offence by the police is complete, they should forward to the Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence, a report in the prescribed form and containing the details mentioned in that section. If a report so received by a Magistrate is a complete report in the prescribed form which sets out all the particulars required by Section 173(1), the Magistrate has the power under Section 190(1)(b) to take cognizance of the case, and a cognizance so taken is valid cognizance. In such a case, even though the police themselves later on call the report sent by them an "incomplete" report, that in itself cannot alter its character or affect the validity of the cognizance of the offence already taken. The Court can examine the report for itself, irrespective of what the police say, and if it finds it to be complete, the Court has the power to take further proceedings in the case on the strength of the cognizance it has taken. Further, if in such a case the police put in one or more supplementary reports subsequent to the date on which the Magistrate has taken cognizance and name therein further witnesses, that fact cannot affect the validity of the cognizance which the Magistrate has taken at an earlier date. In other words, if a cognizance taken by a Magistrate is perfectly valid and according to law when it was taken, it continues to be valid, whatever may be done thereafter by the police, and the legality of a trial cannot be questioned on the ground of any invalidity in the taking of cognizance. Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441 : 1952 CrLJ 1491 : 1951 SCJ 518.

[7030] ● Cognizance on a private complaint.—Section 195(1)(a) prohibits the prosecution for an offence under the Penal Code referred to therein, except upon the written complaint of the public servant concerned. Therefore, when it is alleged against an accused that he gave a false information to a police officer with a view to such officer taking any action against an innocent person, and the offence charged is one under Section 182 of the Penal Code, cognizance of that offence can be taken by a Magistrate only when the officer concerned or his superior makes a complaint of such an offence as required by Section 195(1)(a), CrPC. But the operation of Section 195(1)(a) stops there and does not extend to any other distinct offence which is committed by the accused in the course of giving such false information.

Therefore, if an information given by the accused to a police officer has a double aspect, so that it is not only false but also defamatory, so as to constitute not only an offence under Section 182 but also an offence under Section 500 of the Penal Code, it is open to the person so defamed to institute criminal proceedings against the accused under a private complaint made under Section 200, CrPC, and the accused cannot be allowed to plead that Section 195(1)(a) operates as a bar against such a complaint, merely because the defamatory statement which forms the basis of the charge was contained in a false information given to a police officer.

The two offences committed by the accused in such a case, the one under Section 182 and the other under Section 500, even though they be committed by the same act of giving a report to a police officer, are yet quite distinct and separate in their character, the former being against the administration of law by the State, and latter being against the rights of a private individual.

When therefore a single act of an accused is of such a character as to amount to two distinct offences, one which is covered by Section 195(1)(a) and the other which is not, it is open to the person aggrieved thereby to lodge a private complaint of the latter offence, and cognizance of that offence under Section 190, CrPC, is not barred by the operation of Section 195(1)(a). To hold otherwise would amount to adding to the language of that section in the guise of interpretation, and that is something which a Court of law is not allowed to do.

At the same time, a Court should not countenance an evasion of a mandatory rule of procedure which goes to the very roots of its competence, and if it finds that primarily and essentially the offence committed was one for which a complaint under Section 195(1)(a) was required, and that its garb or label was purposely changed by resorting to a device or camouflage., it must hold that Section 195(1)(a) applies so as to bar the cognizance of the case upon a private complaint.

There was nothing illegal in the cognizance of an offence under Section 500, Penal Code, taken upon a private complaint. Section 195(1)(a), CrPC, was no bar to the taking of such cognizance since the two offences, one under Section 182 and the other under Section 500 of the Penal Code, were distinct and separate offences, even when they arose out of the same act of giving a false information to a police officer. Bashir-ul-Huq v. State Of West Bengal, AIR 1953 SC 293 : 1953 CrLJ 1232 : 1953 SCJ 405 : 1953 SCR 836 : 1953 SCA 1062.

[7031] ● Cognizance in contravention of sanction to prosecute.—A sanction, whether under Section 197, CrPC, or under Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, is not required to be in a particular form. All that is necessary is that the sanction must state that it is for the prosecution of the public servant concerned under a particular offence, and must set out the facts which constitute that offence.

The officer before whom the papers of a case are placed for such sanction must clearly set out in the order the facts on the strength of which he gives such sanction, so that the order itself shows that the sanctioning authority has applied his mind to the facts of the case. In other words, the order of sanction must itself disclose on its face that the sanctioning authority has considered all the facts on the strength of which the sanction is accorded, and must state the offence which such facts constitute.

However, if a sanction order is defective by reason of an omission to state therein the particulars so required, it cannot be contended that such an error in the sanction renders it null and void so as to render cognizance of the offence taken by a criminal Court entirely incompetent. The only effect of such an error is that the burden falls on the prosecution to prove by extraneous evidence that all the facts complained of were placed before the sanctioning authority and that it granted the sanction asked for only after fully considering those facts.

It is only when a sanction order is on the face of it defective by reason of the absence of the particulars required to be stated therein, and the prosecution is unable to produce any satisfactory extraneous evidence to show that the sanction was properly given, that the validity of that sanction can come into question, and cognizance taken by a Court could be assailed as being in contravention of the requirements of Section 197, CrPC. Biswabhusan Naik v. State of Orissa, AIR 1954 SC 359 : 1954 CrLJ 1002 : 1954 SCA 928 : 1955 SCJ 537.

[7032] ● Defect or omission does not disclose validity of sanction for prosecution.—If the sanction given under Section 197, CrPC does not disclose that all the facts constituting the offences of which the accused is to be charged were placed before the sanctioning authority, or does not state the time and place of the occurrence of the transactions covered by it, or the names of persons in agreement with whom the accused committed the offence of criminal conspiracy of which he is charged, it has to be held that the sanction order is undoubtedly defective in its content. However, such defect or omission is not fatal to the validity of the sanction, if the lacuna has been remedied in the course of the trial by producing the specific evidence required in that behalf. The question of considering the effect of such a lacuna on the validity of the sanction arises only when no such evidence has been produced by the prosecution, and the question whether the sanctioning authority had applied his mind to all the facts constituting the offence for the prosecution of which sanction was given, has remained in doubt. Gopalan M.K. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 362 : 1954 CrLJ 1012 : 1954 SCA 557 : 1954 SCJ 534 : (1954) 2 MLJ 76 : 1954 MWN 564 : 1954 AWR (HC) 392 : 1955 SCR 168.

[7033] ● Sanction not required if offence not committed in discharge of official duty.—In the present case, the accused who was any army officer, was charged in 1942 along with a local contractor, under Section 120-B read with Sections 161 and 420, Penal Code. The prosecution case was that an amount, in excess by Rs. 56,000 of what was actually due, had been paid out by the Government to the private contractor for the construction of certain buildings, and that when the excess payment became known and a refund was demanded of him, the two accused entered into a conspiracy to defraud the Government, whereunder the officer prepared a false order for the construction of approach roads and on the strength of the order the contractor prepared a false bill for "additional work" which was passed by the officer, and that as a consideration for passing that bill the officer obtained from the contractor a bribe of Rs. 18,000. The two accused were jointly tried on the above charges and were convicted. There was no order from the Government sanctioning their prosecution, and the main question in appeal was whether the prosecution was bad for want of the sanction under Section 197. On the facts of the case, the offence of which the accused was charged was not committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, and hence, the sanction under Section 197 was not necessary for the prosecution of the accused for that offence. Conviction was upheld. Ronald Wood Mathews v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1954 SC 455 : 1954 CrLJ 1161 : 1954 SCJ 649 : 1955 SCR 216.

[7034] ● Expedient to hold inquiry.—Relying upon the word "ordinarily" in Section 195(3), it was contended that since a right of appeal to the Supreme Court is not an ordinary right of appeal, but only a limited and circumscribed right which is exercisable only under the special circumstances set out in the Constitution, Section 195(3) could not apply for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court from an order directing a complaint to be made, which was made by the Division Bench of a High Court under Section 476, and that the powers under Section 476-B could not at all be exercised by the Supreme Court when a complaint for an offence falling under Section 195(1)(b) was made by the High Court. This contention could not be accepted because it completely ignored the word "appealable" in Section 195(3). The only Court to which appeal lies from the appealable decrees and orders of a Division Bench of a High Court is the Supreme Court and hence the Supreme Court is the only Court to which appeals from orders of a Division Bench of a High Court will ordinarily lie. The Supreme Court was competent to entertain an appeal under Section 476-B of the Code from an order of a Division Bench of a High Court making a complaint against an accused for an offence falling under any of the sections of the Penal Code which are covered by Section 195(1)(b), CrPC.

The appeal so made is perfectly competent. The Court then proceeded to consider the matter on its merits, for the purpose of seeing whether, as required by Section 476, "it was expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made" in the offence of which those officers were charged, as held by the High Court. After considering the facts of the case, the Court held that such inquiry was expedient, and dismissed the appeal. M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397 : 1954 CrLJ 1019 : 1954 SCJ 458 : 1954 SCA 576.

[7035] ● Validity of sanction before cognizance of offence.—A sanction is valid only when it has been given before cognizance of the offence for the prosecution of which it is given is taken by any criminal Court, and further when it is given after the sanctioning authority has applied its mind to the facts of the case and those facts bear out the offence for the prosecution of which sanction is given. The burden of proof of the requisite sanction lies on the prosecution, and that burden is adequately discharged either if the sanction order itself discloses on the face of it that the sanction has properly been given or if the prosecution is able to satisfy the Court by producing extraneous evidence that the material facts were placed before the sanctioning authority and were considered by it before granting the sanction. A sanction given under Section 197, CrPC can be held to be invalid only when the prosecution fails to discharge its burden in either of the two aforesaid ways.

Substance is always more important than the form, and in this matter Courts should not take a too technical view, so that, all that is required for upholding the validity of a sanction is that the Court must be satisfied that the sanctioning authority has applied its mind to the facts of the case and has given the sanction in respect of an offence which is constituted by those facts. If it is so satisfied, a mere defect in the form or contents of the sanction order cannot affect the validity of the sanction.

In the present case, the sanction order was signed, not by the sanctioning authority himself, but only by his personal assistant purporting to act on his behalf. When the validity of the sanction was assailed, the prosecution put in the original draft which carried the signature of the sanctioning authority below the word "approved" Though the sanction order was not in the correct form, it was not illegal or invalid because it showed that the sanction had been given by the proper authority and that it had been given after he had applied his mind to the facts of the case. Madan Mohan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 637 : 1954 CrLJ 1656.

[7036] ● Application for sanction in purported discharge of duty.—Section 197 of the Code must not be construed too narrowly, because if it is so construed, it can never be applied at all. It is no part of an official's duty to commit an offence and never can be, and in considering whether Section 197 applies to a case, it is not the duty one has to examine so much as the act, because an official act can be performed in the discharge of official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The Section has content and its language must be given meaning.

The offence of criminal breach of trust under Section 409 is composed of several elements, (a) that there was an entrustment, (b) that the entrustment was 'in his capacity of a public servant', (c) that there was a 'disposal' of the entrusted property, and (d) that such disposal was done 'dishonestly'.

In a case like the present, it is evident that whether the disposal is lawful or unlawful, there could be no disposal save by an act done or purporting to be done in an official capacity. The act complained of, namely the disposal, could not be done in any other way. If it was innocent, it was an honest official act, and if it was dishonest, it was a dishonest official act. But in either case, the act was one which was done in an official capacity, and there was no other way in which the accused could have permitted the release of the goods out of the depot. Whatever the intention behind the act of 'disposal' may have been, the physical part of it remained the same, and it was equally 'in his official capacity as a public serrant' whether the intention was honest or dis- ionest. In the first event, the act of disposal vould be done in the discharge of an official duty, nd in the other, in the purported discharge of it. or these reasons it must be held that Section 197 of the Code applied to the present case. Shree Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCR 177 : 1955 SCA 283.

7037] ● Absence of sanction for prosecu- ion.—A defect in a trial arising from the absence of a sanction for prosecution which under the law a pre-requisite of cognizance is fatal to the trial. uch a defect goes to the very root of the compe- ence of the trial Court to exercise jurisdiction ver the case, and cannot be cured (by Section 37, CrPC) (now Section 465). The absence of he necessary sanction vitiates the trial from its ery start, so that the whole proceeding must be uashed, and if it has resulted in the conviction of he accused, such conviction has to be straightway et aside.

In such a case, the proper course for the ourt of Appeal is to discharge, and not acquit, he accused, leaving it to Government either to rop the matter or to institute fresh proceedings fter the required sanction is granted. Shree Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCA 83 : 1955 SCJ 233.

7038] ● Sanction essential for taking cogni- ance.—In a case in which Section 197. CrPC, pplies, and sanction for the prosecution of a ublic servant for an offence committed by him is ssential for taking cognizance of that offence, the bsence of such sanction is fatal to the main- ainability of the prosecution. In such a case, if the rial has resulted in the conviction of the accused, he whole proceeding must be quashed, and the onviction must be set aside. Amrik Singh v. State f Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309 : 1955 CrLJ 865 : 955 SCA 368 : 1955 SCJ 334 : 1955 SCR 1302 : 955 MWN 322 : 57 PunLR 295 : 1955 1 MLJ SC) 198 : 1955 AWR (Supp) 72 : ILR (1955) atiala 145.

7039] ● Cases in which sanction for prose- ution not necessary.—1. Sanction under Section 97 is not necessary in every case in which a ublic servant is prosecuted for an offence, and he question whether such sanction is necessary or ot has to be determined in each case after scertaining from the facts of the case the nature f the act complained of.

2. It is not correct for the accused to contend hat every offence committed by a public servant necessarily involves the employment of his official capacity and that therefore sanction under Section 197 is required for every offence committed by a public servant while he holds a public office. At the same time, it is also not correct for the prosecution to contend that criminal misappropriation by a public servant could under no circumstances be an act done by him in virtue of his office, and that therefore sanction under Section 197 is never necessary when the offence charged is one under Section 409, Penal Code.

3. It is the nature of the act complained of which determines the question whether sanction under Section 197, CrPC, is or is not necessary, and for that purpose the Court must first determine whether the act done was or was not directly connected with the duties attached to the office of the accused. In other words, the test is—could the accused reasonably claim that what he did was done by virtue of his office. If the act done is so connected with the duties attached to the office of the accused that he could reasonably claim that it was done by virtue of his office, sanction under Section 197 is absolutely essential to his prosecution for that act. On the other hand, if the act done is not of such a nature, such sanction is not necessary.

4. If the act done is of such a nature that on the application of the above test sanction is not required, it is of no consequence at all that it was the official position of the accused which furnished him the occasion or the opportunity for the doing of that act, and it is equally unimportant that during the period when that act was done, the accused was engaged in the performance of his official duties.

5. On the other hand, if, on the application of the above test, the act done by the public servant is found to be of such a nature that sanction for prosecution is required by reason of its being done in virtue of his office, it is entirely immaterial to consider whether he did it in the proper discharge of his duties or only in abuse of his official position. Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309 : 1955 CrLJ 865 : 1955 SCJ 334.

[7040] ● Act connected with official duty.—In the present case, the accused, who was a public servant working in the PWD was charged under Sections 409 and 465, Penal Code. The prosecution case was that he had been entrusted with money for disbursement of the wages of workmen in the department, and that he misappropriated an amount of Rs. 51 after making a false entry on the pay-roll showing that the amount was paid to one P, and putting a forged thumb-impression on the roll against the name of P, showing receipt of that amount of P. The act done by the accused was clearly connected with his official duty and fell within its scope, and was of such a nature that, if questioned, he could reasonably claim that it was done by virtue of his office, and hence, sanction under Section 197 was essential for his prosecution. Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309 : 1955 CrLJ 865 : 1955 SCJ 334.

[7041] ● Necessity of sanction to prosecute.—The offence of fabricating false evidence punishable under Section 193 of the Penal Code falls under two parts, the first being one which relates to that offence when committed in or in relation to a judicial proceeding, and the other to the same offence when committed 'in any other case'. Section 195(1)(b), CrPC, applies only when the offence committed falls under the first part of Section 193, and not when it falls under its second part. Therefore even when the offence of fabricating false evidence is committed before a tribunal which is quasi-judicial in character, and not merely administrative or ministerial, the offence is not one to which Section 195(1)(b), CrPC, can apply, because such a tribunal is not a "Court" within the meaning of that expression as used in Section 195. A tribunal is a "Court" only when it has the statutory power to decide as between rival claims and give a definitive and enforceable judgment.

The question as to when sanction under Section 197 is essential for the prosecution of a public servant was considered by the Court in all its aspects, in Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, after reviewing the earlier authorities on this subject. The principles relating to this question which result from these decisions may be summarised as under :

The question whether sanction of the appropriate Government under Section 197 of the Code is or is not necessary for the prosecution of a public servant for an offence alleged to have been committed by him, has to be determined by the application of the following test in each case as it arises, after considering all the facts of that case. The test is—was there or was there not a reasonable connection between the act complained of and the discharge of the official duty of the officer concerned, that is, whether the act complained of and his official duty were so inter-related that the accused could reasonably claim that what he did was done by virtue of his office. If such a claim is reasonable, and not merely pretended or fanciful, sanction is necessary; otherwise, it is not. If the claim is reasonable, it is entirely immaterial whether the officer acted in excess of his duty and went beyond the needs of the situation in what he did, and sanction is necessary even though the officer may have acted in excess of his duty.

In the present case, a private complaint was lodged in the Court of a Magistrate against certain officers under Sections 323 and 342, etc., of the Penal Code on the ground that when they were resisted in an attempt to carry out a search for certain books of account, they forcibly broke open the doors of the place to be searched after beating and causing injuries to the persons who resisted them in such a search, and tying them with ropes, and locking them up for some hours. During the trial the accused raised the objection of want of sanction under Section 197, CrPC.

Even assuming that the officers had acted in the present case in excess of their duty and that their belief as to their rights under a search-warrant was mistaken, it could not be said that their acts were necessarily mala fide and entirely unconnected with the discharge of their duty. The accused could reasonably claim that what they did was in virtue of their official duty. It is immaterial in such a case whether the claim is ultimately found to be well-founded or not. For these reasons, sanction for prosecution of the accused under Section 197, CrPC, was necessary, and the High Court was right in affirming the order of the trial Court discharging the accused for want of such sanction. Appeal was dismissed. Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : 1956 SCA 22.

[7042] ● Maintainability of private complaint.—The Returning Officer reappointed under the Act of 1951 was not a "Court" within the meaning of Section 195, CrPC, though he discharged quasi-judicial functions, and hence the offence under Section 193 of the Penal Code which was committed before him was not an offence "in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court" within the meaning of Section 195(1)(b), CrPC. That being so, the complaint made by the Returning Officer was only a private complaint under Section 200, CrPC, and not one made under Section 476, CrPC and hence no appeal to the High Court under Section 476-B could lie against such a complaint. Under the circumstances, the order of the High Court rejecting V's appeal under Section 476-B, and treating the complaint made against him as being one under Section 200 and not under Section 476, was perfectly justified and proper. Virendra Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : 1956 SCA 410 : 1956 SCJ 138 : 1955 2 SCR 1013.

[7043] ● Discretion not violative of Article 14.— Section 197 applies to the class of public servants and distinguishes them from other citizens in the matter of cognizance by criminal Court. Such a classification is perfectly reasonable because public servants acting in the discharge of their duties have to be protected against uncalled for harassment resulting from reckless litigation, and the requirement of Government sanction acts as a safeguard against groundless proceedings initiated by interested private persons.

Further, it cannot be urged that the discretion vested in the Government to grant a sanction against one officer while refusing it against another, amounts to discrimination between persons placed in the same situation. Exercise of such discretion cannot be said to be a distinction between individuals placed in the same class; it only makes a distinction between the facts of one case and the facts of another, so that while the facts of one case may justify sanction under Section 197, quite different facts of another may not. Abuse of that discretion by the Government concerned cannot be assumed for the purpose of questioning the constitutionality of that section. Section 197, CrPC, does not contravene Article 14 of the Constitution. Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : 1956 SCA 22 : 1956 SCJ 110 : 1955-2 SCR 925 : 1955-28 ITR 941 : 1956-I MLJ (SC) 79.

[7044] ● Necessity of sanction.—The question as to the necessity for sanction under Section 197, CrPC, may arise at any stage of the proceeding before the trial Court, and the Court is bound to consider and pass the necessary order on that point at any stage of the proceeding as soon as facts are placed before the Court which make the determination of the question imperative. Facts which establish the necessity for sanction may come to light at any later stage in the proceeding after cognizance of an offence of which a public servant is accused has been taken by the Court on a private complaint. Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : 1956 SCJ 110 : 1955-2 SCR 925.

[7045] ● Objection not taken at initial stage.—It may well happen that when a complaint against a public servant is presented, the complaint may be so framed as to show that the act complained of had nothing to do with the discharge of his office and hence taking cognizance of the offence charged may appear to the Court to be quite proper even though the want of sanction may be brought to the notice of the Court. And yet if during the cross-examination of the prosecution witness facts are brought out which show that the act complained of falls within the purview of Section 197, it is the duty of the Court at that stage to take notice of those facts, and discharge the accused for want of such sanction, even though objection on that score had not been taken by the accused at the initial stage of the proceeding. Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : 1956 SCJ 110 : 1955-2 SCR 925.

[7046] ● Trial Court's competence to take cognizance without sanction.—There was no reason to interfere with the order of the High Court. In a case in which, on the facts of the case, it is clear that the offence in question was committed by the accused while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, previous sanction of the Government is essential under Section 197 for the prosecution of the accused, and the trial Court has no competence to take cognizance of the offence without the requisite sanction and has no option except to discharge the accused if the sanction has not been obtained. Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : 1956 SCJ 110.

[7047] ● Power of Court to make complaint.—The combined effect of Sections 195(1)(b) or (c), 476, 476-A, 195(3), CrPC is that the power to make a complaint required by Section 195(1)(b) or 195(1)(c) may primarily be exercised by the Court concerned, and if it has not done so, that power can be exercised only by the Court of the lowest grade to which appeals ordinarily lie from the decree or orders of the Court concerned. The power to make such a complaint cannot be exercised by any other Court. In determining the proper appellate Court which is competent to make such complaint, one has to find to which Court of lowest grade appeals lie in the ordinary way, keeping aside special notifications or laws which lift that question in a particular case out of the general class.

The Senior Subordinate Judge was not the appellate authority contemplated by Section 476-A, read with Section 195(3) of the Code, because his appellate jurisdiction was exercisable only under a special notification, and was not a Court to which appeals would 'ordinarily' lie, within the meaning of Section 195(3), from the orders of the Subordinate Judge. The District Court was the Court of inferior jurisdiction to which such appeals would ordinarily lie, and that Court alone was the proper authority for the exercise of powers under Section 476-A or 476-B. The High Court itself had no power to make the complaint applied for, and it had no jurisdiction, in the exercise of its powers in revision, either to make an order making a complaint or to restore the original order making such a complaint, because the High Court was not the Court contemplated for that purpose by Section 476-A or 476-B or 195(3). All that the High Court was authorised to do in the exercise of its powers of revision was to send the case back to the District Court for disposal according to law.

In the exercise of its extraordinary powers under Article 136 of the Constitution, this Court makes an order remitting the original application under Section 476 of the Code to the District Judge for disposal according to law in the exercise of his powers under Section 476-A with a direction that he should apply his mind to the question whether it was expedient in the interest of justice to make the complaint applied for. Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 391 : 1956 SCC 455 : 1956 CrLJ 781 : 1956 SCR 125.

[7048] ● Offence of criminal breach of trust.— There is quite a large body of case-law in which it has been held that ordinarily when a public servant commits the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of property or funds belonging to the Government under his charge, he does not act in his capacity as a public servant, and that sanction under Section 197, CrPC for his prosecution under Section 409 of the Penal Code is not required. Om Prakash Gupta v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 458 : 1957 CrLJ 575 : 1957 SCA 337.

[7049] ● Cognizance of offence by public servant barred for want of sanction.—In a case in which by reason of the provisions of any statute, cognizance of an offence committed by a public servant is barred if the previous sanction of the appropriate authority for the prosecution for that offence is absent, the very competence of the Court to exercise jurisdiction over the case in which the accused is charged of such an offence does not exist if the required sanction is wanting, and the whole proceeding is null and void. In such a case, the trial Court must discharge the accused as soon as the defect is brought to its notice, and if in spite of the defect it has convicted the accused, the appellate Court must set aside the conviction and discharge him.

When the whole proceedings has been vitiated by reason of such an illegality, it is null and void, whichever be the Court by which the accused is discharged, and it is open to the State to prosecute the accused again for the same offence of which he was originally charged, or on the same facts for any other offence, after obtaining the required sanction. Article 20(2) or Section 403, CrPC, cannot be pleaded as operating as a bar against such subsequent trial. Baij Nath Preasad Tripathi v. State of Bhopal, AIR 1957 SC 494 : 1957 CrLJ 597 : 1957 SCA 459 : 1957 SCJ 405 : 1957 SCR 650 : 1957 MPC 390 : 1957 BLJR 479 : 1957 ALJ 569 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cr) 362 : 1957 JabLJ 759 : 1957 AWR (HC) 491.

[7050] ● When sanction is made condition precedent to taking cognizance.—When by any statute sanction for the prosecution of any person for an offence is made a condition precedent to the taking of cognizance of that offence by a criminal Court, prosecution of that person without the requisite sanction makes the entire proceeding ab initio null and void. In such cases, the sanction is not a mere formality but is an essential safeguard against frivolous prosecutions by giving the authority concerned the statutory discretion to decide whether in view of all the circumstances of the case the application for grant of sanction be refused or acceded to. Therefore, when a sanction required by law for any prosecution is wanting, the absence of such sanction makes the entire trial incompetent from its very commencement, and if such a trial has resulted in conviction, such conviction must be straightway set aside by the appellate Court. Kapur Chand Pokhraj v. State of Bombay, AIR 1958 SC 993 : 1958 CrLJ 1558.

[7051] ● Application of principles.—The intention of the legislature in making previous sanction of an appropriate Government or authority a prerequisite of a prosecution of a public servant and a condition precedent to the taking of cognizance of an offence committed by him, obviously was to serve the accepted principle of efficient governance that a public servant acting in the discharge of his duties should be safeguarded against harassment, and that prosecution should be sanctioned only when the Government is satisfied on facts that a prima facie case exists. The very purpose of such protection ceases to exist if that person has ceased to be a public servant at the time when he is threatened with prosecution.

But even apart from that, a section has to be construed according to the plain meaning of its language, and when the general power of a criminal Court to take cognizance of offences is restricted under a provision which is in the nature of an exception to that power, the limitation imposed by that provision must be so construed as to confine it strictly to the very terms of the provision.

A plain reading of Section 6 of the Act shows that it can operate only when both the following conditions exist, namely, that the person concerned is a public servant and that he is not removable from his office save under the sanction of the appropriate Government or authority. The question of removability cannot possibly arise in the case of a person who has already ceased to be a public servant at the relevant time.

For these reasons it must be held that sanction for prosecution is required only when the person concerned is still a public servant at the time when cognizance of a criminal Court is asked for, and is not required if he has ceased to be one at that time. S.A. Venkataraman v. State, AIR 1958 SC 107 : 1958 CrLJ 254.

[7052] ● Sanction not a mere formality but a valid requirement.—Note : This decision expressly relates to sanction required under Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, but its principles would presumably apply with equal force to sanction under Section 197, CrPC.

A sanction for prosecution of a public servant is not a mere formality, and the sanction can be held to be valid only when the requirements of a valid sanction have been observed with complete strictness. When considering whether a sanction applied for should be granted or refused, the sanctioning authority must carefully apply his mind to all the facts of the case, and in order to satisfy the Court which takes cognizance of the case on such sanction that the requirements of a valid sanction have been complied with by the sanctioning authority, the order of sanction must be clearly worded so as to make it evident on the face of it that those requirements were before the mind of the sanctioning authority at the time when the sanction order was made. For that purpose, the order must briefly set out the facts of the case and the particular section of the Penal Code or the Act under which prosecution has been sanctioned, and if those facts disclose the commission of more than one offence, all those sections must be mentioned in the order of sanction. Jaswant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 124 : 1958 CrLJ 224 : 1958 SCA 407 : 1958 SCJ 355.

[7053] ● Sanction should disclose offence with which accused is charged.—In the present case, the sanction was in the following words—"whereas I am satisfied that J (the accused) has accepted an illegal gratification of Rs. 50 and whereas the evidence discloses that he has committed an offence under Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, I hereby sanction his prosecution under Section 5 of the act". On this sanction the accused was charged under Sections 5(1)(a) and 5(1)(d) of the Act. It may be noted that Section 5(1)(a) defines an offence arising only from habitual acceptance of bribes by a public servant. In the trial Court the accused was convicted under both sections. On appeal, it was contended by the accused that even though the evidence on record had established that he had been receiving bribes habitually, his conviction under Section 5(1)(a) was bad because the sanction order had not referred to facts disclosing habitual acceptance of bribes and was confined only to one act of accepting a bribe of Rs. 50 and hence even though the order sanctioned prosecution "under Section 5" it must be taken that what was in fact sanctioned has only prosecution under Section 5(1)(d). It was further contended that as a result the trial was wholly void and without jurisdiction and his conviction even under Section 5(1)(d) was illegal and was required to be set aside. The High Court upheld the first contention and set aside the conviction under Section 5(1)(a) of the Act, but it rejected the second contention and upheld the conviction of the accused under Section 5(1)(d). The High Court is perfectly right in reversing the conviction under Section 5(1)(a) of the Act, because cognizance could be taken only of the very offence disclosed in the order, and not of any other offence. Further, merely because the trial Court had taken cognizance of two offences, one as to which there was a proper and valid sanction, and the other as to which there was none, the whole trial was not vitiated on that account, and trial of the accused on the charge as to which there was a valid sanction remained perfectly competent and within jurisdiction. Since the offence charged under a valid sanction had been proved, conviction of the accused on that charge was quite proper. For these reasons, the High Court was right in rejecting the contention that the trial was wholly void and in confirming the conviction under Section 5(1)(d) of the Act. Conviction under Section 5(1)(d) of the act was upheld. Jaswant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 124 : 1958 CrLJ 224 : 1958 SCA 407 : 1958 SCJ 355.

[7054] ● Conditions for valid sanction.—A sanction purporting to be given under Section 197, CrPC, or Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, is valid only when all the following conditions are fulfilled, namely—

1. that the sanction is given by the appropriate Government or authority competent to give it,
2. that it is given before cognizance of the offence in respect of which it is given is taken by any criminal Court,
3. that is contains all the required particulars, and shows on the face of it that the sanctioning officer had applied his mind to all the facts of the case and was satisfied, after considering those facts, that in the interest of justice the public servant concerned should be prosecuted.

However, for the purpose of the validity of a sanction it is not necessary that the sanctioning officer must personally inquire into the truth of the facts placed before him or the merits of the case, nor is it necessary that he should call for the records from his own office for the purpose of such satisfaction. It is enough if all the required material is placed before him by the investigating police-officer, and he is satisfied as to the necessity of the prosecution after considering such material and the report made by the investigating officer. Of course, when the validity of the sanction is challenged, the onus lies on the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the sanctioning authority applied his mind to the facts of the case before giving his sanction, but that onus can be discharged either by the language of the sanction order itself, or when the sanction order contains any omissions in that behalf, by producing evidence aliunde showing that sanction was in fact given after a due consideration of all the facts of the case. In the present case, the sanction order had been drafted by the police officer and had been placed by him before the sanctioning authority along with the case record and his own report. The sanctioning authority had placed his signature on that draft after considering the papers placed before him, but without calling for any record from his own office.

Though the sanction so given was not quite in the correct form, it was perfectly valid, because it could not be assumed that the sanctioning authority did not apply his own mind to the facts of the case, merely because he had accepted the draft prepared by another. Indu Bhusan Chatterjee v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1958 SC 148 : 1958 CrLJ 279 : 1958 SCA 348 : 1958 SCJ 581.

[7056] ● Application of mind.—A Magistrate can be said to have 'taken cognizance' of an offence only when both the following conditions are satisfied, namely, (a) that he has applied his mind to that offence upon receiving either a complaint of it under Section 200 or a police report relating to it forwarded to him under Section 173(1), and (b) that he has so applied his mind to that offence for the purpose of proceeding with the case in respect of it in one of the ways mentioned in the subsequent provisions of the Code, such as, transfer of the case for inquiry or trial to another Magistrate under Section 192, or sending it for inquiry and report to a subordinate Magistrate or police officer under Section 202, or issue of a process against the accused under Section 204.

On the other hand, the Magistrate may have to apply his mind to any case for some purpose or at a stage other than the one mentioned above, such as, for an order under Section 155(2) or 156(3) directing an investigation to be made by a police officer, or for an order under Section 96 issuing a search-warrant, or for an order under Section 167(2) remanding an accused to custody, or for an order under Section 496 or 497 releasing an accused on bail. In all these cases, the Magistrate has to apply his mind to the case for making the required order, but merely on that account it can not be said that his act amounts to 'taking cognizance of the offence' within the meaning of that expression as used in the Code. In other words, the question whether or not a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence depends upon the stage at which and the purpose for which he has applied his mind to it, and not merely upon the fact of his applying his mind to it.

In the present case, the accused, who was caught on 7-9-1952 when he was about to board a plane leaving India with undeclared Indian currency, was charged for offences under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, and the Sea Customs Act. Thereafter, when authority to initiate criminal proceedings against him was obtained from the Reserve Bank, the police applied to the District Magistrate on 16-9-1952 for the issue of a search-warrant against the accused under Section 19(3) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, for permission to investigate the case, and for arrest of the accused, and the application was granted. Three days later, on 19-9-1952, the accused was arrested and was released on bail. Since the order made on 16-9-1952 had directed that the investigation be completed and a report thereon be made on 19-11-1952, and the said investigation could not be completed by then, the police officer applied on 19-11-1952 for further time for investigation till 2-1-1953, and that application was granted, and on 2-1-1953 the time was further extended till 2-2-1953. On 2-2-1953 a complaint was filed against the accused, after the authority to file such a complaint as required by Section 23(3)(b) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, was obtained from the Reserve Bank on 27-1-1953. The authority so received was for a prosecution of the accused on charges under Section 8(2) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act read with Section 19 of the Sea Customs Act :

(i) The orders passed by the Magistrate on 16-9-1952, 19-9-1952, 19-11-1952 and 2-1-1953 were only orders which were steps in the investigation of the case. An order of a Magistrate authorising the police to investigate non-cognizable offence, or issuing a search-warrant or directing arrest, or releasing an accused on bail, or extending the time for the investigation, could not be held to amount to "taking cognizance" within the meaning of Sections 190 and 200 of the Code. Such orders have to be passed under the Code by a Magistrate while investigation by the police into a non-cognizable offence is in progress, for the purpose of it being effectively carried out, and they do not amount to "taking cognizance" of an offence.

(ii) Cognizance in the present case was taken on 2-2-1953 when the complaint was filed by the police officer in the Court of the Magistrate, and since on that date the requisite authority of the Reserve Bank for filing the complaint had already been given, there was no legal bar on that date to the taking of cognizance of the offence of which the accused was charged.

(iii) Even when it is required by any statutory provision that cognizance of an offence shall not be taken except upon a previous complaint or sanction of an appropriate authority, there is nothing illegal in commencing or carrying out an investigation into such offence or in a Magistrate issuing necessary orders which are steps in such investigation even before the requisite authority for the cognizance of such offence has been obtained.

(iv) The cognizance in the present case had been taken in due compliance with the provisions of law in that behalf and no such illegality in the proceedings had been shown as would vitiate the trial. Narayandas Bhagwandas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1959 SC 118 : 1959 CrLJ 1368.

[7057] ● Cognizance of offence of defamation.—The provisions of Section 198 are mandatory, and cognizance of an offence of Defamation under Section 500, Penal Code, can be taken only when both the following conditions are satisfied, namely, (a) that the complaint is made by the person aggrieved by the defamation, and (b) that the very offence disclosed by the facts stated in the complaint is made out by the prosecution evidence.

In a case in which the accused is charged under Section 500, Penal Code, if the facts stated in the complaint are not made out by the prosecution witnesses, the Court must discharge the accused, even though the Court is of opinion that on their evidence another but quite different offence of defamation has actually been made out, and it must be left to the complainant to file, if he so chooses, a fresh complaint on the basis of the facts made out in such evidence. In other words, Section 198 operates as a bar against the framing of a charge of defamation on facts as to which no grievance has been made by the person aggrieved in the complaint made under Section 200 on which cognizance has been taken.

In the present case, a Magistrate wrongly framed a charge under Section 500, Penal Code, on evidence which made out a prima facie case under that section against the accused, though the facts which came out in that evidence had not been stated in the complaint which was based on entirely different facts. Later on, he realised his mistake, and after stating in his order that he had no jurisdiction to frame the charge which he had framed, he made an order acquitting the accused. The complainant moved the High Court in revision against this order, but his application was dismissed. He then appealed to the Supreme Court against the decision of the High Court. Since the trial Magistrate had no jurisdiction to frame the charge which he had framed, the order of acquittal made thereafter must be regarded as a nullity. When he discovered his error, he should have brought the matter to the notice of the High Court for getting the error corrected. When the error was brought to the notice of the High Court in revision, it should have set the wrong order of acquittal aside. In an appeal before it, the Supreme Court can do what the High Court could have done. Accordingly, the appeal was allowed, the order of acquittal made by the Magistrate was set aside, and that order was replaced by an order discharging the accused in the case. Abdul Rehman Mohomed Yusuf v. Mohomed Haji Ahmad Agbotwala, AIR 1960 SC 82 : 1960 CrLJ 1581.

[7058] ● Private visit cannot be an act in performance of official duty.—To do so by a police officer, therefore, when the accused went to the house of the complainant with the police, they had gone in their private capacity like any other person called upon to act as a panch witness, and it could not be claimed that they had acted or had purported to act in the performance of their official duties.

Further, even if it could be said that witnessing a search is an act done in the performance of official duty, it could not possibly be said that the offences alleged to have been committed by the accused had any connection with the act of witnessing a search. The presence of the accused in the house of the complainant, even though it be held to be in an official capacity, only gave them an opportunity to commit the offences complained of, and it could not be said that the criminal acts done by them were done while acting or purporting to act within the scope of their official duty.

For these reasons, it must be held that the Courts below had erred in holding that Section 197 applied and that sanction of the Government was required for the prosecution of the offences of which the accused had been charged. Dhananjay Ram Sharma v. M.S. Uppadaya, AIR 1960 SC 745 : 1960 CrLJ 1153.

[7059] ● Tests for sanctioning prosecution of public servant.—It is now well settled that the test for determining the question whether sanction under Section 197 for the prosecution of a public servant is necessary is this—is the act complained of such as to lie within the scope of his official duties, so that he could reasonably claim that what he did was done in virtue of his office, that is, does the act done directly bear on the duties which he has to discharge in his official capacity. The mere fact that an opportunity to commit an offence is furnished by the official duty is not such a connection of the offence with the performance of such duty as to justify even remotely the view that the act complained of is within the scope of the official duty of the accused. Dhananjay Ram Sharma v. M.S. Uppadaya, AIR 1960 SC 745 : 1960 CrLJ 1153.

[7060] ● Sanction for prosecution not required for offence of cheating.—The accused in the present case who were both railway servants were charged under Sections 342, 379 and 403, Penal Code. The case against them was that they had been taken by the police as panch witnesses to a raid on the house of a railway employee, and that during the search they had confined the person whose house was searched in a room and had removed cash and other articles from his trunks and boxes in another room. During the trial it was contended that sanction under Section 197 was necessary for the prosecution of the accused, and that in the absence of such sanction the Magistrate had no competence to take cognizance of the cases. Accepting this view, the Magistrate discharged the accused for want of sanction under Section 197, and on application in revision, the High Court affirmed the order of discharge. The complainant in the case appealed to the Supreme Court against this order. The scope of the official duties of the accrued obviously did not extend to acting as panch witnesses to search made by the police and helping them in such searches. No doubt, there was in force a Home Office Memorandum which stated that whenever the Special Police Establishment made a request to any Ministry to depute its officers to witness a police-trap, the Ministry should ‘extend its co-operation in the matter’. No such request had been made in the present case, and all that had happened was that the accused had gone as witnesses to the search on being called upon. It is now well settled that Section 197 can apply only when the act done bears such a relation to the official duties of the public servant concerned that he can lay a reasonable, and not merely a pretended and fanciful, claim that the act complained of was done by him in the course of performance of his official duty and not otherwise. If there is no necessary connection between the offence committed by him and his performance of his official duties, and all that he can prove is that his official status furnished him the occasion or the opportunity for the commission of the offence of which he is charged, Section 197 cannot be invoked and it cannot be claimed that sanction of the appropriate Government was necessary for his prosecution for that offence. An act of cheating or an act of abetment of cheating is of its very nature such that there cannot be any reasonable connection between it and the discharge of the official duties of the accused, and hence, Section 197 does not apply to the prosecution for an offence under Section 420, or Section 420 read with Section 109, Penal Code, and sanction for such prosecution is not required. Satwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 266 : 1960 CrLJ 410 : 1960 SCJ 863.

[7061] ● Trial not affected in absence of sanction for prosecution.—In the present case, S, a private contractor, and H, a public servant, were jointly tried, S on the charge under Section 420, and H on the charge under Section 420/109. The case against them was that S had obtained from the Government payments of moneys under false claims, and that H had falsely certified those claims as true, knowing that they were false. Both the accused were convicted as charged. There was no sanction under Section 197 for this prosecution. It was contended that the trial was bad and had been vitiated from its start by the absence of the requisite sanction under Section 197, and it was urged that the act of H, which consisted of the issue of a false certificate, was necessarily an official act done while he purported to act in the discharge of his official duty. H having been prosecuted for an offence of abetment of cheating, and not for any offence concerning the issue of a false certificate, it could not be said that the trial was for an offence committed while he was acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. That being so, Section 197 did not apply and the validity of the trial was not in any way affected by the absence of a sanction for prosecution. Satwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 266 : 1960 CrLJ 410 : 1960 SCJ 863.

[7062] ● Power of Magistrate to proceed for trial in warrant case after discharge in summons case.—When a Magistrate takes cognizance of a case under Section 190(1)(b) on a police report, the cognizance so taken is in respect of every offence disclosed in that report, whether it is triable as a warrant-case or as a summons-case, and only in respect of offences enumerated in the report; in other words, the cognizance taken is of the whole case and not only of a particular part of it. Thereafter when the stage under sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 251-A has been reached, it is quite clear from the language of these sub-sections that in deciding what action should be taken, the Magistrate has to form an opinion whether or not there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under Chapter XXI (now XIX). Therefore, when an order of discharge is made in the exercise of the powers under Section 251-A(2), the discharge is not in respect of all the offences which the facts mentioned in the police report make out, but only in respect of such of the offences mentioned in the report as are triable under Chapter XXI.

In such a case, if the facts mentioned in the charge-sheet constitute, not only one or more offences triable under Chapter XXI as warrant-cases, but also one or more other offences ordinarily triable under Chapter XX as summons-cases, the order of discharge, which is only in respect of the former class of cases, does not affect in any way the position as regards offences triable under Chapter XX as to which also charges are contained in the police report, and the Magistrate has the power to proceed with the trial in respect of such other offences. In such a case, it cannot be contended that the cognizance which the Magistrate had taken on the police report was only of offences triable as warrant-cases, and hence a fresh complaint in respect of such other offences triable under Chapter XX has to be made before the Magistrate can take cognizance of them, and then alone would he have the power to proceed with their trial. Such an argument is based on a false assumption as to the nature of the cognizance taken by a Magistrate under Section 190(1)(b) upon a police report. That cognizance having been of all the offences constituted by the facts mentioned in the report, and not only of such of those offences as are triable as warrant-cases, there is nothing in law to prevent the Magistrate from proceeding against the accused in the same trial in respect of offences triable as summons-cases which are constituted by the facts mentioned in the report after he has made an order of discharge in respect of the offences triable as warrant-cases.

The facts stated in the police report on which cognizance was taken by the Magistrate necessarily constituted only not an offence under Section 332 of which the accused was discharged, but also the minor offence under Section 323; when the Magistrate took cognizance he did so in respect of both these offences, and not only in respect of the offence under Section 332. Consequently, even after the accused was discharged of the offence under Section 332, the minor offence under Section 323 of which also he had taken cognizance remained for trial, and the Magistrate was right in proceeding with the trial in respect of that offence after following the procedure under Chapter XX of the Code. Conviction was upheld and the appeal was dismissed. Pramatha Nath Mukherjee v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1960 SC 810 : 1960 CrLJ 1165 : 1960 SCJ 926.

[7063] ● Sanction not necessary if offence committed by person ceased to be Magistrate.—The words "any Magistrate" in Section 197(1) mean 'any person who is a Magistrate', and the words "when any Magistrate is accused of any offence" mean 'when an accusation of an offence is made against a person who is a Magistrate at the time when the accusation is made'. The question of taking cognizance arises only at a stage when a complaint is made or a police report submitted to the proper criminal Court for taking action, and what Section 197 requires is that if at that stage the person accused is a Magistrate, the Court shall take cognizance of the offence only if previous sanction for the prosecution has been given by the appropriate Government. Previous sanction for prosecution under Section 197 is not necessary for taking cognizance of an offence committed by a Magistrate while he was acting as a Magistrate, if he has ceased to be a Magistrate at the time when the complaint is made or the police report is submitted to the Court, that is, at the stage when the Court takes cognizance of the offence. It is immaterial for this purpose to consider whether the accused was a Magistrate at the earlier stage when the allegation about the offence was made against him when a complaint was made to his superiors or to the police, or at the time when a departmental enquiry was held against him. Keshavlal Mohanlal Shah v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 1395 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 571 : 1961 (2) SCJ 649.

[7064] ● Special procedure for trial of defamation case.—Section 198-B provides for a special procedure for the trial of the offence of defamation of certain classes of persons specified in that section, and prescribes several conditions precedent to a trial of an offence falling within that section. These conditions are—

1. that the defamation is not by spoken words,
2. that the defamation is alleged to have been committed against some person specified in that section,
3. that the defamation is in respect of such person's conduct in the discharge of his public functions,
4. that a complaint of such an offence is made with the previous sanction of the appropriate authority specified in sub-section (3),
5. that the complaint is made by the Public Prosecutor, and,
6. that the complaint is made within six months from the date on which the alleged offence is committed. P.C. Joshi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 387 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 566 : 1961 (2) SCA 334 : 1961 (2) SCJ 48.

[7065] ● Complaint by Public Prosecutor.—Sub-section (13) of Section 198-B CrPC is enacted with a view to state ex abundanti cautela that the right of a party aggrieved by publication of a defamatory statement to proceed under Section 198 is not taken away by Section 198-B. The expressions "in addition to" and "not in derogation of" mean the same thing that Section 198-B is an additional provision which is not intended to take away the right of a person aggrieved even if he belongs to the class specified in that section, to file a complaint, if he so elects, in the manner provided by Section 198. The context in which sub-section (13) occurs, clearly shows that what was intended was that the remedy of the person aggrieved provided in Section 198 is not impaired by the provision of Section 198-B. Section 198-B does not provide that the complaint shall be signed by any person other than the Public Prosecutor. In terms it requires only a complaint in writing by the Public Prosecutor. In the absence of any compelling reasons, it would be an unwarranted addition to sub-section (1) of the section to hold that the complaint shall also be signed by the person aggrieved. It must therefore be held that the complaint under Section 198-B is required to be signed only by the Public Prosecutor and there is no requirement that it must also be signed by the public servant who has been defamed. P.C. Joshi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 387 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 566 : 1961 (2) SCA 334 : 1961 (2) SCJ 48.

[7066] ● Application of mind by sanctioning authority.—Even when the sanction for prosecution is given by the proper authority under Section 198-B(3), it is not enough merely to produce a document setting out the name of the person to be prosecuted and the provisions of the statute alleged to be contravened. The grant of a valid sanction is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the criminal Court, and the Court is invested with the jurisdiction to try the offence only when there is a proper sanction showing that the sanctioning authority has applied his mind to all the material facts of the case. Mere production of a document under the signature of the sanctioning authority would not satisfy the requirements of Section 198-B(3). If the facts which constitute the offence do not appear on the face to the sanction, it must be established by extraneous evidence that those facts were placed before the sanctioning authority and that the authority had applied his mind to those facts before giving the sanction. P.C. Joshi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 387 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 566 : 1961 (2) SCA 334 : 1961 (2) SCJ 48.

[7067] ● Sanction necessary in cases of conspiracy.—Section 196-A(2) (now Section 196) provides that in a case in which the object of the conspiracy is to commit any non-cognizable offence, or a cognizable offence not punishable with imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards, cognizance of the offence of criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B, Penal Code, can be taken by a Court only when the competent State Government, or the District Magistrate empowered in this behalf has consented to the initiation of the proceeding by order in writing. Offence under Sections 466 and 467 of the Penal Code are non-cognizable offences, and therefore sanction of the Government is necessary for the prosecution of the accused on the charge under Section 120-B where the alleged object of the conspiracy is to commit offences under Sections 466 and 467. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Kandimalla Subbaiah, AIR 1961 SC 1241 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 302.

[7068] ● Sanction necessary in cases of conspiracy.—The question whether Section 196-A(2) applies in a case in which the main object of the conspiracy is to commit the offence of cheating under Section 420, Penal Code and the offences under Sections 466 and 467 are only the means to that end, so as to require the sanction of the Government for the prosecution for the class of criminal conspiracy was left undecided in this case, because the case was being sent back to the trial Court for other reasons and thus there was time enough for the Government to consider whether it should give sanction to the prosecution for the non-cognizable offences alleged to have been committed by the accused in pursuance of the conspiracy. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Kandimalla Subbaiah, AIR 1961 SC 1241 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 302 : 1961 (2) SCJ 686.

[7069] ● Transfer of case before taking cognizance is an administrative order.—The transfer of a case by a District Magistrate to a subordinate Magistrate contemplated by Section 192, CrPC, is only transfer of a case in which cognizance of an offence has been taken. When a complaint is presented before a District Magistrate instead of presenting it before a Magistrate before whom it should ordinarily have been presented, the District Magistrate has the power, without taking cognizance of the case, to send it for disposal to the Magistrate before whom it should ordinarily have been filed. In such a case, the order of the District Magistrate is only an administrative order, and the action taken by him is not "transfer of a case for inquiry or trial" within the meaning of Section 192.

(Note : The significance of the difference lies in this that when a case is transferred by the District Magistrate under Section 192, he does so only after judicial cognizance of the case has already been taken by him for the purpose of inquiry or trial as the case may be, and in such a case there is no scope for the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred to send the case to the police for investigation in the exercise of his powers under Section 156(3). On the other hand, when the District Magistrate forwards a case "for disposal" to a subordinate Magistrate in the exercise of his administrative powers, as no judicial cognizance of the case has been taken, the Magistrate to whom the case is sent has the discretion to direct the police under Section 156(3) to investigate the case and report thereon before proceeding to hold the inquiry or trial.). Gopal Das Sindhi v. State of Assam, AIR 1961 SC 986 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 39 : 1961 (1) SCJ 573.

[7070] ● Meaning of "taking cognizance".—What is meant by the words "take cognizance" in Section 190(1) of the Code is now well settled. Before it can be said that a Magistrate has "taken cognizance" of any offence under Section 190(1), he must not only have applied his mind to the complaint or the police report presented before him, but he must have done so for the purpose of proceeding in a particular way under the subsequent provisions of the Code which lay down the procedure for commencing an enquiry or trial into the offence. When the Magistrate applies his mind to the complaint or report, not for any such purpose, but only for the taking action of some other kind, for instance, for ordering an investigation under Section 156(3), or for making an order of bail, or for issuing a search warrant, he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence. Gopal Das Sindhi v. State of Assam, AIR 1961 SC 986 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 39.

[7071] ● Appeal against order of single Judge lies to High Court.—The decrees of a single judge of the High Court exercising civil jurisdiction are ordinarily appealable to the High Court under clause 10 of the letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court. It is true that the decision of a single Judge of the High Court is as much a decision of the High Court as the decision of a Division Bench. But Section 195(3) creates an artificial judicial subordination, and in view of its provisions the single judge of the High Court has to be deemed to be subordinate to the Division Bench to which appeals from his decrees and orders would ordinarily lie, for the purposes of an appeal under Section 476-B of the Code against an order of the single judge made under Section 476 or 476-A. Section 476-B not only provides for an appeal against the order of a single judge of the High Court refusing to file a complaint against any person for an offence under the Penal Code referred to in Section 195(1), CrPC, but further it also determines the forum to which the appeal shall lie.

It must therefore be held that an appeal from the order made by a single Judge of the High Court under Section 476, CrPC lies to the appellate Bench of the High Court, and not to the Supreme Court. The decision in Sheriff, M.S. v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397 : 1954 CrLJ 1019 : 1954 SCR 1144, cannot be relied upon for contending that the appeal lies to the Supreme Court, because the question which was considered in that case was as to the forum of appeal from the orders of a Division Bench of a High Court, and as no appeal lies to the High Court against the decision of a Division Bench of the High Court, it was held that the appeal under Section 476-B would lie in such a case to the Supreme Court. Further, in view of the specific provisions of Section 476-B, the provisions of Article 132 of the Constitution can be of no assistance in deciding the forum of appeal in such a case. Narain Das v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 181 : 1961 (1) SCJ 375.

[7072] ● Validity of sanction for prosecution.—What is relevant for the purpose of deciding as to who should give the sanction is the question as to which is the Government under whom the public servant is employed at the relevant time. If he is employed in connection with the affairs of the Federation (now, the Union), the sanction must be given by Governor General (now, the Central Government), and if he is employed in connection with the affairs of the State, by the Governor (now, the State Government). When the person is employed in connection with the affairs of the Federation, the sanction given must be by the Governor General even when such employment is only temporary and is the result of the services of the public servant having been loaned by a State Government to the Government of India, and it cannot be contended that the question as to which is the Government by which sanction under Section 197 must be given is determined by the permanent employment of the public servant.

In the present case, the accused was permanent employee in a gazetted post under the Government of Assam, but at the time when the alleged offences were committed by him his services were lent to the Government of India. The sanction for his prosecution was given by the Government of India. At the date when the sanction was given, the accused was on leave and he had applied to the State Government for extension of his leave. The accused was a "person employed in connection with the affairs of the Federation". Within the meaning of Section 197(1)(a) (as it stood before its amendment in 1950) and the sanction granted by the Governor General was valid. R.R. Chari v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1573 : 1962 CrLJ 510.

[7073] ● Cognizance of offence of criminal conspiracy.—Section 196-A (now Section 196) of the Code provides that no Court shall take cognizance of the offence of criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B of the Penal Code except upon the complaint made or order of consent by the State Government or by some authority empowered by the State Government mentioned in the section. The mandatory provisions of Section 196-A cannot be evaded by resorting to a mere device or camouflage. The test whether sanction under Section 196-A is or is not necessary does not depend upon mere as triteness of drafting the petition of complaint, The question whether Section 196-A applies has to be decided, not merely by considering the offences mentioned in the heading or the body of petition of complaint, but by examining the actual allegations made in the petition of the complaint. The test is whether the allegations made disclose primarily and essentially the offence of criminal conspiracy as defined in the Penal Code. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770.

[7074] ● No bar to taking cognizance without sanction.—The further question which arises is what is the position when some of the offences disclosed do not require any sanction while others require sanction. Where distinct offences are committed in the course of the same transaction, some of which require sanction and some do not require sanction, there is no bar against cognizance being taken without sanction of the offences which do not require sanction. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770.

[7075] ● Distinct offences—Cognizance not barred.—The offences under Sections 467 and 471 of the Penal Code are distinct from the offence of criminal conspiracy and Section 196-A, CrPC does not apply to them. Therefore, even in a case in which criminal conspiracy is alleged, if the complaint discloses the actual commission of offences in pursuance of the conspiracy is alleged, if the complaint discloses the actual commission of offences in pursuance of the conspiracy, then, even in the absence of any sanction or consent under Section 196-A, the Court is not barred from taking cognizance of the case in so far as it relates to the commission of such offences other than criminal conspiracy. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770.

[7076] ● Distinction between abetment of conspiracy.—The exact position in law is this. The gist of the offence of criminal conspiracy is in the agreement to do an illegal act, or to do an act which is not illegal by illegal means. When the agreement is to commit an offence, the agreement itself becomes the offence of criminal conspiracy. Where, however, the agreement is to do an act which is not an offence, but is to do such act by illegal means, some act besides the agreement is necessary. The distinction between the offence of abetement by conspiracy under Section 107. Penal Code and the offence of criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B, lies in this. In the former offence a mere combination of persons and agreement between them is not enough, and an illegal act or omission must take place in pursuance of the conspiracy and in order to the doing of the thing conspired for. But in the offence of criminal conspiracy, the mere agreement or plot to commit an offence is an offence by itself. Where the complaint discloses that offences were actually committed in pursuance of the conspiracy, it is open to the Court to take cognizance of those offences, even though they were committed in pursuance of the criminal conspiracy and consent or sanction under Section 196-A has not been given. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 896 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770.

[7077] ● Sales Tax Officer not a "Court".— Merely because these instrumentalities of the State employed for the purpose of taxation have, in the discharge of their duties, to perform certain quasi-judicial functions, they are not converted thereby into Courts. They remain the instrumentalities of the State and are within the definition of "State" in Article 12. No doubt, they have certain powers which are similar to the powers exercised by Courts, but that would not make them "Courts" as understood in Section 195 of the Code. Under the Sales Tax act, a Sales Tax Officer is only an assessing authority and the scheme of the Act shows that the Sales Tax Officer cannot be equated with a Court.

In 1923, Section 195(2) was amended and by the amendment the word "includes" was substituted for the word "means". The amendment was no doubt intended to enlarge the definition of "Court" so as to include all Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts. But it cannot be said that a Sales Tax Officer is a Revenue Court, or that by the said amendment the definition of the words "Revenue Court" was enlarged so as to include officers whose function mainly is assessment and collection of taxes.

When a question arises as to whether an authority created under any special Act is a "Court" or a "quasi-judicial tribunal", the test for determining that question is whether having regard to all the provisions of the Act that authority is charged with a duty to decide disputes and declare the rights of the parties in a definitive judgment. It is only when the authority is charged with such duty that it could be said that it possesses the attributes of a Court. The mere fact that an administrative authority is vested with what have been called "the trappings of a Court" would not make that authority a Court. Merely because a duty is cast on the executive or authority to conform to the norms of judicial procedure in performing some acts in its exercise of its exclusive power would not make it a "Court".

A Sales Tax Officer is not a Court within the meaning of Section 195, CrPC and therefore a complaint by a Sales Tax Officer is not necessary for prosecuting any person for an offence under the Sales Tax Act, or the Penal Code committed in or in relation to a proceeding before such officer. Jagannath Prasad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 416 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 330 : 1963 (2) SCJ 120.

[7078] ● General authorisation to file complaint.—The appellant was the editor of a daily newspaper, "Matrubhumi". In an issue of the newspaper he published extracts from a speech by a political leader wherein he made certain defamatory statements against the Governor of the State. The Home Secretary to the State Government made order purporting to be a sanction under Section 198-B of the Code for the prosecution of the appellants for offences under Sections 500 and 501, Penal Code. On the basis of the order, the Public Prosecutor lodged a complaint. Under Section 198-B(3)(a) two restrictions are placed upon the power of the Public Prosecutor to lodge a complaint with respect to the defamation of the Governor. The first is that the Secretary to the Government must have given the sanction to lodge the complaint, and the second is that the Secretary must have been authorised by the Governor in this behalf. This means that the Governor has first to consider for himself whether the alleged defamatory statement is of a kind of which he should take notice and seek to vindicate himself or whether the defamatory statement should be ignored as being either of a trivial nature or made by an irresponsible person. This decision whether a complaint should be lodged or not has to be taken by the Governor himself and he cannot leave it to some other person or an authority like the Government.

In the present case, the Governor himself gave evidence in the case and in his evidence he stated that he did not authorise the Government to start the case or gave any specific directions in that behalf, and had left it to the Government to take such action as it deemed proper. The inference, therefore, must be that the Governor was personally indifferent whether a complaint was lodged or not. In the circumstances it could not be said that the Governor had authorised the lodging of the complaint made in the present case. It is no doubt true that the decision whether to sanction or not to sanction the making of the complaint is that of the Secretary even when the Governor has authorised him in that behalf. There are good reasons why this should be so. The Secretary is expected to look at the question objectively and decide whether it is in the public interest to take notice of the defamatory statement and prosecute the person who made it. A person who is directly aggrieved by the statement may not be in a position to take an objective view of the matter and since the expenses for the prosecution have to be borne by the State, the legislature evidently felt that there was good reason for leaving the final decision to a third person rather than with the aggrieved person. All the same, the initiative to lodge a complaint must be taken by the Governor himself, and unless he has taken the decision to lodge a complaint and has authorised the Secretary to sanction the lodging of the complaint, the Secretary gets no power to accord his sanction. This authorisation is as much a pre-condition of the prosecution governed by Section 198-B as the sanction of the Secretary.

Whether the sanction for prosecution was authorised by the Governor could be proved either from the evidence of the Governor himself or from any writing from him in which he has said that he authorised the lodging of the complaint. In the present case, the evidence given by the Governor clearly showed that there was no express authorisation by him to the Secretary, and there was nothing in writing from him to that effect on the record.

Section 198-B(3)(a) does not contemplate a general authorisation. The authorisation by the Governor has to be for a sanction with respect to a specific complaint, and a general authorisation given by the Governor to the Secretary in the Home Department to accord sanction in such cases as fall under Section 198-B(1) would not be sufficient to comply with the requirements of the section. Section 14 of the General Clauses Act has no relevance to this question. Considering the nature of the offence, it has to be held that a general authorisation given in advance and covering all defamations falling under Section 198-B would not meet the requirements of Section 198-B(3)(a). For all these reasons, it must be held that the sanction given by the Government Secretary in the present case was not duly authorised by the Governor and hence the prosecution of the appellant was bad in law. Gour Chandra Rout v. Public Prosecutor, AIR 1963 SC 1198 : 1963(2) CrLJ 194 : 1963 SCD 423.

[7079] ● Question of valid sanction not revised earlier, cannot be.—Though the document in question was not the original order made by the Governor, or even its copy, it clearly recited that the Governor had been pleased to grant sanction to the prosecution of the appellants for certain offences as required by Section 196-A. The document was an official communication from the Home Department and was addressed to the District Magistrate. Therefore, a presumption would arise that the sanction referred to in the document had in fact been given by the authority mentioned therein. Further, since the communication was an official communication a presumption would also arise that the official action referred to in the document was regularly performed. Therefore, the document placed on record prima facie met the requirements of Section 196-A, and since the point about a valid sanction had not been raised in the Courts below, it was not open to the appellants to contend for the first time before the Supreme Court that there was no evidence of the grant of a valid sanction as required by Section 196-A. Tulsi Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 666 : 1963(1) CrLJ 623 : 1963 (2) SCJ 274.

[7080] ● Cognizance by special Court.—The word "cognizance" as used in the Code or in any Special Act has no mystic significance as distinct from jurisdiction, requiring some special technical requisite. "Cognizance" simply means—'become aware of' and with reference to Courts means 'taking judicial notice'. Taking cognizance does not involve any formal act. Cognizance is taken as soon as the Court applies its judicial mind to the facts of a case for taking any step in its trial. Ajit Kumar Palit v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1963 SC 765 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 797 : 1964 (1) SCJ 75.

[7081] ● Complaint by Court.—Under Section 195(1)(c) a complaint by the Court is required when the prosecution is for the offence of forgery or using a forged document as genuine, when "such document" is produced or given in evidence in any proceeding in that Court. It is clear that it is only when the forged document itself is produced in Court that a complaint by the Court is required. Where what is produced before the Court is not the forged document itself but only a copy thereof Section 195(1)(c) does not apply and a complaint by the Court is not necessary.

Therefore, even if the Settlement Officer under the Act is assumed to be a Court within the meaning of Section 195(1)(c), a complaint by him was not necessary in the present case because what was produced before him was not the forged original verified claim itself, but only a copy thereof. Budhu Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) CrLJ 698 : (1963) 3 SCR 376.

[7082] ● Legality of sanction.—Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 does not require the sanction to be given in a particular form. All that is required for compliance with its provisions is, firstly, that it must be proved that the sanction was given in respect of the facts constituting the offence charged, and secondly, that those facts must either be shown on the face of the sanction, or it must be otherwise proved that they were placed before the sanctioning authority. Both these conditions had been satisfied in the present case. All the facts constituting the offence of misconduct under Section 5 with which the accused was charged were placed before the Government. As regards the second condition though the sanction order did not itself mention the facts on which the sanction was given, the attached document referred to therein gave all the necessary and relevant facts constituting the offence of criminal misconduct. In the circumstances, the contention that the sanction given was illegal because it was not proved that all the relevant facts were placed before the sanctioning authority was not right and had to be rejected. Ram Sagar Pandit v. State of Bihar, 1963 Supp (2) SCR 652 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 65.

[7083] ● Application of S. 197, CrPC.—The question which arose in this case was whether sanction under Section 197, CrPC was necessary for the prosecution of a Sub-Inspector of Police serving under the Government of Mysore State to whom the Mysore Police Act, 1908, applied. Under Section 197-B, CrPC, previous sanction of the State Government is required for the prosecution of any public servant who is not removable from his office save under the sanction of the State Government. Under Section 8 of the Mysore Police Act, the power to appoint and to dismiss "Inspectors" of all grades vests in the State Government. The word "Inspector" in Section 8 does not include Sub-Inspectors. Further, under Section 26 of the Act, any police officer below the grade of Assistant Superintendent can be dismissed by the Inspector General of Police. In view of these provisions it cannot be said that a Sub-Inspector of Police can be removed from service only by the State Government. It must therefore be held that Section 197 of the Code does not apply to a Sub-Inspector of Police and sanction of the State Government is not required for his prosecution even though he had committed the alleged offence while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. Nagraj v. State of Mysore, AIR 1964 SC 269 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 161 : 1964 SCD 35.

[7084] ● Cognizance taken on complaint and not on police report.—A case can be said to be "instituted" in a Court only when the Court takes cognizance of the offence alleged therein. An examination of the provisions of Section 190 makes it clear that a case is instituted in the Court of a Magistrate when the Magistrate takes cognizance of the facts which constitute such offence. Under Section 190(1) cognizance of offences can be taken by the Magistrate in three ways, upon receiving a private complaint of facts constituting an offence, or upon a police report of such facts made by any police officer, or upon the Magistrate's own knowledge or suspicion of such offence having been committed. Thus under Section 190(1), a case is instituted in the Court of a Magistrate when he takes cognizance of the offences alleged therein either upon receiving a private complaint of the facts constituting such offence, or upon a report of such facts made by any police officer. It is now well-settled that when a petition of complaint is filed before a Magistrate under Section 200 of the Code, the question whether he can be said to have taken "cognizance" under Section 190(1) of the offence alleged in the complaint depends upon the purpose for which he applies his mind to the complaint. If the Magistrate applies his mind to the complaint for the purpose of proceeding with the complaint under the various provisions of Chapter 16 of the Code, he must be held to have taken cognizance of the offences mentioned in the complaint, on the other hand, if he applies his mind to the complaint; not for any such purpose, but only for the purpose of ordering an investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code, or for issuing a search warrant under Section 96 he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence. In the present case, after completing the examination of the complainant under Section 200, the Magistrate had made his order, "To S.I.B. for instituting a case and report." The order was clearly an order under Section 202 of the Code, and the fact that instead of using the words "for investigation", the words used in the order were "for instituting a case" would not make any difference in the nature of the order. The order could not be said to be an order directing an investigation of the case by the police under Section 156(3) of the Code. An order under Section 156(3) can be made without taking cognizance. Once cognizance of the case has been taken by the Magistrate by completing the examination of the complainant under Section 200, it is not open to him to order investigation under Section 156(3), and he can order investigation only under Section 202. In the circumstances, it must be held that though the Magistrate had used the words "for instituting a case" in his order, he had actually taken action under Section 202, that being the only section under which he was in law entitled to act. Further, the fact that the police officer has submitted a "charge-sheet" against the accused could not make any difference. Since the order passed by the Magistrate was an order made under Section 202, the report made by the officer must be treated as a report under that section, and not as a report under Section 173 of the Code. Cognizance having already been taken by the Magistrate before he made his order, there was no scope for cognizance being taken again of the same offence after the police officer's report was received. Therefore it must be held that the case was instituted on B's complaint, and not on the police report submitted later by the police officer. At most, it might be said that the Magistrate had committed irregularity in making his order, but the irregularity had not resulted in any failure of justice, and it could not be said that the proceedings subsequent to that order were all void. Jamuna Singh v. Bhadai Shah, AIR 1964 SC 1541 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 468 : 1964 SCD 103 : 1964 (2) SCJ 439.

[7085] ● Necessity of sanction.—It is true that for considering whether Section 197, CrPC would apply, the Court must confine itself to the allegations made in the complaint. But that does not mean that it need not look beyond the form in which the allegations have been made and is incompetent to ascertain for itself their substance. It cannot be disputed that whether a person charged with an offence should or should not be released on bail was a matter within the discretion of the respondent and if while exercising a discretion he acted illegally by saying that bail would not be granted unless the appellant did something which the appellant was not bound to do, the respondent cannot be said to have acted otherwise than in his capacity as a public servant. For this reason, sanction of the appropriate authority for the respondent's prosecution was necessary under Section 197, CrPC. Somchand Sanghvi v. Bibhuti Bhusan Chakravarty, AIR 1965 SC 588 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 499 : 1964 (6) SCR 275 : 1964 SCD 496.

[7086] ● Inclusion of non-cognizable offence in charge.—In Section 190, a distinction is made between the classes of persons who can start a criminal prosecution. Under the three clauses of Section 190(1), to which we have already referred, criminal prosecution can be initiated (i) by a police officer by a report in writing; (ii) upon information received from any person other than a police officer or upon the Magistrate's own knowledge or suspicion, and (iii) upon receiving a complaint of facts. If the report in this case falls within (i) above, then the procedure under Section 251A, Criminal Procedure Code, must be followed. If it falls in (ii) or (iii), then the procedure under Section 251, Criminal Procedure Code, must be followed. We are thus concerned to find out whether the report of the police officer in writing in this case can be described as a "complaint of facts" or as "information received from any person other than a police officer". That it cannot be the latter is obvious enough because the information is from a police officer. The term "complaint" in this connection has been defined by the Code of Criminal Procedure and it means "the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person, whether known or unknown, has committed an offence, but it does not include the report of a police officer". It, therefore, follows that Section 252, Criminal Procedure Code, can only apply to those cases which are instituted otherwise than on a police report, that is to say, upon complaints which are not reports of a police officer or upon information received from persons other than a police officer. The initiation of the prosecution in the instant case was upon a report in writing by the police officer. Section 11 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, provides that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under that Act except on a report in writing of the facts constituting, such offence made by a person, who is a public servant, as defined in Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

Where the information discloses a cognizable as well as a non-cognizable offence, the police officer is not debarred from investigating any non-cognizable offence, which may arise out of the same facts. He can include that non-cognizable offence in the charge sheet which he presents for a cognizable offence. Both the offences if cognizable could be investigated together under Chapter XIV of the Code and also if one of them was a non-cognizable offence. Pravin Chandra Mody v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1185 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 250 : 1965 SCD 417.

[7087] ● Form of sanction.—The sanction under Section 198-B, CrPC, granted by the State Government of U.P. was a sanction for making a complaint under Section 500, IPC against the appellant with respect to the article published in the issue of 'Kaliyug' dated September 12, 1960, under the heading "Ulta Chor Kotwal Ko Dante" which contained defamatory remarks against the Assistant Public Prosecutor, R.K. Sharma, or Aligarh, and other prosecuting staff of the Government in respect of their conduct in the discharge of public functions. The sanction in question was with respect to defamation of two persons (i) R.K. Sharma, Assistant Public Prosecutor, Aligarh; and (ii) the other police prosecuting staff of the Government of Uttar Pradesh, which would be the entire prosecuting staff in the State. There was nothing wrong in the form of the sanction and it did not suffer from any defect. Sahib Singh Mehra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1451 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 434 : (1965) 1 SCWR 571 : 1965 SCD 600.

[7088] ● False evidence complaint by Court.—If Dr. Dutt fabricated the false diploma, he made a document containing a false statement intending that it may appear in evidence and so appearing in evidence may cause any person who is to form an opinion upon it to entertain an erroneous opinion touching on a point material to the result of a judicial proceeding. Dr. Dutt, as alleged, was falsely posing as an expert and was deposing about matters which were material to the result of the trial. He had a document to support his claim, should occasion arise. He produced the document, when asked to do so, intending that the presiding Judge may form an erroneous opinion about Dr. Dutt and the relevancy of his evidence. The case was thus covered by Section 192. When Dr. Dutt deposed let us assume, falsely, about his training, he committed an offence under Section 193. Again when Dr. Dutt used the diploma as genuine his conduct was corrupt, whether or not it was dishonest or fraudulent.

It would thus be seen that the action of Dr. Dutt was covered by Sections 192 and 196 of the Penal Code. If Dr. Dutt gave a false evidence in Court or if he fabricated false evidence the offence under Section 193 was clearly committed. If he used fabricated evidence an offence under Section 196 was committed by him. These offences would have required a complaint in writing of the Sessions Judge before cognizance could be taken.

Dr. Dutt's conduct did not come within Section 471. On the other hand, it falls within purview of Section 196 which casts its net wider in the interest of the purity of administration of justice. It may be noted that an offence under Section 196 of the Penal Code is far more serious offence than the offence under Section 465/471. The offence in the instant case did not fall within Section 465/471, IPC and the prosecution launched against Dr. Dutt cannot be allowed to go on. S. Dutt (Dr.) v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 523 : 1966 CrLJ 1459 : 1966 (1) SCR 493.

[7089] ● Offence not connected with official duty—Sanction not necessary.—It is not every offence committed by a public servant that requires sanction for prosecution under Section 197(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, nor even every act done by him while he is actually engaged in the performance of his official duties; but if the act complained of is directly concerned with his official duties, so that if questioned it could be claimed to have been done by virtue of the office, then sanction would be necessary. It is the quality of the act that is important and if it falls within the scope and range of his official duties the protection contemplated by Section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code will be attracted. An offence may be entirely unconnected with the official duty as such or it may be committed within the scope of the official duty. Where it is unconnected with the official duty there can be no protection. It is only when it is either within the scope of the official duty or in excess of it that the protection is claimable.

Applying the principle to the present cases, we are of opinion that sanction of the State Government was not necessary for the prosecution of Gupta under Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code, because the act of criminal misappropriation was not committed by the appellant while he was acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties and that offence has no direct connection with the duties of the appellant as a public servant, and the official status of the appellant only furnished the appellant with the occasion or an opportunity of committing the offence. Baij Nath Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 220 : 1966 CrLJ 179.

[7090] ● Trial after distinct offence disclosed by different facts.—Section 195, CrPC does not bar the trial of an accused person for a distinct offence disclosed by the same of slightly different set of facts and which is not included within the ambit of the section, but we must point out that the provisions of Section 195 cannot be evaded by resorting to devices or camouflage. For instance, the provisions of the section cannot be evaded by the device of charging a person with an offence to which that section does not apply, and then convicting him of an offence to which it does, on the ground that the latter offence is a minor one of the same character, or by describing the offence as one punishable under some other section of the IPC, though in truth and substance the offence falls in the category of sections mentioned in Section 195, CrPC. Merely by changing the garb or label of an offence which is essentially an offence covered by the provisions of Section 195 prosecution for such an offence cannot be taken cognizance of by misdescribing it or by putting a wrong label on it. On behalf of the appellants it was suggested that the prosecution of the appellants under Section 353, IPC, was by way of evasion of the requirements of Section 195, CrPC. But we are satisfied that there is no substance in this argument and there is no camouflage or evasion in the instant case. Durgacharan Naik v. State of Orissa, AIR 1966 SC 1775 : 1966 CrLJ 1491 : 1966 SCD 1043.

[7091] ● Power of Court to proceed with trial of substantive offence without sanction.—It is clear that the Court cannot take cognizance without the necessary consent in the case of a charge of criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B of which the object is as stated therein. The conspiracy to commit an offence is by itself distinct from the offence to do which the conspiracy is entered into. Such an offence, if actually committed, would be subject-matter of a separate charge. If that offence does not require sanction though the offence of conspiracy does and if sanction is not obtained it would appear that the Court can proceed with the trial as to the substantive offence as if there was no charge of conspiracy.

There was in the instant case not only a charge for conspiracy under Section 120-B but also two other separate charges for offences under Sections 409 and 477-A alleged to have been committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. Though the charge under Section 120-B required sanction, no such sanction was necessary in respect of the charge under Section 409. At the most, therefore, it can be argued that the Magistrate took illegal cognizance of the charge under Section 120B as Section 196-A(2) prohibits entertainment of certain kinds of complaints for conspiracy punishable under Section 120-B without the required sanction. The absence of sanction does not prevent the Court from proceeding with the trial if the complaint also charges a co-conspirator of the principal offence committed in pursuance of the conspiracy or for abetment by him of any such offence committed by one of the co-conspirators under Section 109 of the Penal Code. In our view the fact that sanction was not obtained in respect of the complaint under Section 120-B did not vitiate the trial on the substantive charge under Section 409. No prejudice could be said to have resulted in view of the appellant's confession that he had in fact misappropriated Rs. 2,500 and was prepared to deposit that amount. Madan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1590 : 1967 CrLJ 1401 : 1967 SCD 1036.

[7092] ● Trial not vitiated for want of sanction.—It has already been held by this Court in a very similar case of Satwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 266, that sanction under Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not required for a valid trial for the offence of abetement of cheating, because it cannot be held that a public servant committing such an offence is acting in the discharge of his duties as such.

Henderson was not being prosecuted for the act of certification of the correctness of the bills which were sent to him for verification, but was to be prosecuted for abetment of the offence of cheating committed by those persons, who had submitted the bills, by falsely certifying the correctness of those bills. The act of thus abetting the principal offenders could not possibly be held to have been done in the discharge of official duties as a public servant.

Besides, after the trial against the appellant had proceeded to some extent, the case against Henderson was separated and the appellant was tried alone in all the four cases. The appellant was not a Government servant, but only an independent contractor, and in his case, therefore, there was no question of any sanction of the Central Government being obtained under Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. His trial would therefore be unaffected by the want of sanction of the Central Government for the prosecution of Henderson. Bakshish Singh Dhaliwal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 752 : 1967 CrLJ 656 : 1967 (1) SCR 211.

[7093] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance of offence.—Under the Code of Criminal Procedure which applies to trials of such cases, the only provision for taking cognizance is contained in Section 190(1)(a), (b), (c). In the present case, the Judicial Magistrate at Chandigarh had before him the complaint filed by the respondent, and if Section 190 stood by itself, he was competent to take cognizance of it under clause (a) of sub-section (1) of that section. This power of taking cognizance was, however, subject to the subsequent provisions contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure including that contained in Section 195(1)(a), (b), (c). This sub-section thus bars any Court from taking cognizance of the offences mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c), except when the conditions laid down in those clauses are satisfied. In the case of an offence punishable under Section 211, IPC, the mandatory direction is that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under this section, when such offence is alleged to have been committed in, or in relation to, any proceedings in any Court, except on the complaint in writing of such Court or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. This provision in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 195 is thus clearly a limitation on the power of the Court to take cognizance under Section 190. Consequently, it is at the stage when a Magistrate is taking cognizance under Section 190 that he must examine the facts of the complaint before him and determine whether his power of taking cognizance under Section 190 has or has not been taken away by clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 195, CrPC. In the present case, therefore, at the time when this complaint was filed by the respondent in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate at Chandigarh, it was necessary and incumbent on that Magistrate to examine whether his power of taking cognizance of the offence was limited by the provisions of Section 195(1)(b). He had, therefore, to determine whether cognizance of this complaint charging the appellant with commission of an offence under Section 211, IPC, could not be taken by him because that offence was alleged to have been committed in, or in relation to, any proceedings in any Court, and if he found that it was so, whether a complaint in writing by such Court or some other Court to which such Court was subordinate was necessary before he could take cognizance. Consequently, in deciding this appeal, this Court has to examine whether on the date when cognizance was taken by the Judicial Magistrate at Chandigarh, such cognizance was barred under Section 195(1)(b), CrPC, because the offence punishable under Section 211, IPC, included in the complaint was alleged to have been committed in, or in elation to, any proceeding in any Court. This provision bars taking of cognizance if all the following circumstances exist, viz; (1) that the offence in respect of which the case is brought falls under Section 211, IPC; (2) that there should be a proceeding in any Court; and (3) that he allegation shall be that the offence under Section 211 was committed in, or in relation to, such a proceeding. Unless all the three ingredients exist, the bar under Section 195(1)(b) against taking cognizance by the Magistrate, except on a complaint in writing of a Court, will not come into operation.

The question on which the decision in the present case hinges is whether it can be held that any proceeding in any Court existed when that Magistrate took cognizance. If there is no proceeding pending in any Court at all at the time when the applicability of Section 195(1)(b) has to be determined, nor has there been any earlier proceeding which may have been concluded, the provisions of this sub-section would not be attracted, because the language used in it requires that there must be a proceeding in some Court in, or in relation to, which the offence under Section 211, IPC, is, alleged to have been committed. In such a case, a Magistrate would be competent to take cognizance of the offence under Section 211, IPC, if his jurisdiction is invoked in the manner laid down in Section 190 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. M.L. Sethi v. R.P. Kapur, AIR 1967 SC 528 : 1967 CrLJ 528 : 1967 (1) SCA 476 : 1967 (2) SCJ 258.

[7094] ● Meaning of "taking cognizance".—Once cognizance has been taken by the Magistrate, he takes cognizance of an offence and not the offenders; once he takes cognizance of an offence it is his duty to find out who the offenders really are and once he comes to the conclusion that apart from the persons sent up by the police some other persons are involved, it is his duty to proceed against those persons. The summoning of the additional accused is part of the proceeding initiated by his taking cognizance of an offence. As pointed out by this Court in Pravin Chandra Mody v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1185, the term "Complaint" would include allegations made against persons unknown. If a Magistrate takes cognizance under Section 190(1)(a) on the basis of a complaint of facts he would take cognizance and a proceeding would be instituted even though persons who had committed the offence were not known at that time. In our view, the same position prevails under Section 190(1)(b). Raghubans Dubey v. State of Bihar, AIR 1967 SC 1167 : 1967 CrLJ 1081 : (1967) 2 SCJ 427.

[7095] ● Prosecution without sanction of Central Government.—The question presented for determination in this appeal is whether the appellant was, at the date of the complaint i.e. March 14, 1961, a Public Servant "who was not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Central Government" within the meaning of Section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code and, therefore, whether sanction of Central Government was necessary for prosecuting the appellant of the offences under Sections 166 and 167 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is apparent from Discipline and Appeal Rules for Gazetted Officers (Indian Railway Establishment Code Vol. I) that if a substantive promotion is made from Class II to Class I, it is done by the President, but officiating appointments are to be made by the General Manager, and in some cases with the approval of the Railway Board. Exhibits 22, 23 and 24 which are the copies of the appointment orders of the appellant also show that he was promoted to Class I by the General Manager with the approval of the Railway Board. It is also apparent that a Railway Officer who merely officiates in Class I cannot be said to belong to class I within the meaning of Item I of Schedule II. It follows, therefore, that the appellant was removable from his office with the sanction of the Railway Board and the sanction of the President was not necessary for taking such action against the appellant.

It is true that many important powers and functions of the Central Government in respect of administration of the Railways are exercised by the Railway Board, but it does not follow that the Railway Board is exercising those powers in their own right as part of the Central Government. On the other hand, Section 2 of the Railway Board Act, 1905 itself indicates that the Railway Board is an entity which is separate from the Central Government and the powers of the Railway Board are derived as a matter of delegation either absolutely or subject to conditions by notification by the Central Government. In other words. Railway Board is a separate body which derives its powers and authority, however wide, they may be only because of delegation of powers from the Central Government in respect of the administrations of the Railways. The result, therefore, is that the appellant was appointed in an officiating position as Class I officer by the Railway Board and, therefore, he was removable by the Railway Board and not by the Central Government. It cannot be said in the circumstances that the appellant was one of those public officers who could be removed only by or with the sanction of the Central Government within the meaning of Section 197, Criminal Procedure Code. If once the Central Government has delegated its power to another authority with regard to appointment and removal of a public servant, then for the purpose of Section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, the public servant concerned will not be treated to be a public servant 'not removable from his office except by or with the sanction of the Central Government' within the meaning of that section. K.N. Shukla v. Navnit Lal Manilal Bhatt, AIR 1967 SC 1331 : 1967 CrLJ 1200 : 1967 SCD 259 : (1967) 2 SCA 290.

[7096] ● "May" means "must".—Under the section, the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of any cognizable offence brought to his notice. The words "may take cognizance" in the context means "must take cognizance". He has no discretion in the matter; otherwise that section will be violative of Article 14 of the Constitution.

Where the police report clearly disclosed offences under Section 3 of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Children Act or under Section 7 as the case may be, the Magistrate should at the first instance proceed against the persons complained against under the penal provisions and only after the disposal of those cases take action under Section 18 if there is occasion for it. SDM, Delhi v. Ram Kali, AIR 1968 SC 1 : 1968 CrLJ 82 : (1968) 1 SCR 205 : (1967) 2 SCA 621.

[7097] ● Criminal conspiracy—Sanction not required.—No sanction is necessary under Section 196A(2) of the old Code when the object of the conspiracy is to commit the offence of cheating (Section 420, IPC), but, forgery of documents under Section 467, IPC, and similar non-cognizable offences are also committed as merely steps taken, by one or other of the accused, for the purpose of effecting the main object of the conspiracy. A trial, under such circumstances, for offences under Section 120-B read with Sections 467/471 and 420, IPC without obtaining sanction, is neither illegal nor void. It is necessary to keep in mind the difference between the object of a conspiracy and the means adopted for realising that object. Even if the object of the conspiracy, viz., of cheating, is sought to be attained by resort to non-cognizable offences, sanction under Section 196A of the Code is not necessary. Bhanwar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1968 SC 709 : 1968 CrLJ 867 : (1968) 2 SCJ 359 : (1968) 2 SCR 528.

[7098] ● Forged entries—Bar of private complaint.—In this appeal the prosecution case was that one Nankoo sold his half share of lands to Kamla Prasad Singh and some others. Kamla Prasad Singh filed a complaint that one Harinath Singh in conspiracy with two Lekhpals got certain forged entries to be made in the Khasra after the sale in favour of Kamla Prasad and applied for the correction of Jamabandi. The Ahlmad in conspiracy with Harinath Singh ante-dated the said application to make it appear that it was made prior to the sale deed and to shield the Lekhpals. The application was entered in the register of Jamabandis although the case bearing that number was a later one. It was contended in the High Court under Section 561-A, CrPC. (Section 482 now), that the offence if any was one under Section 193, IPC, and that Section 195, CrPC, barred the private complaint. The High Court upheld the said objection. Hence this appeal. It would appear that the alleged offence committed by the Ahlmad was clearly in or in relation to a proceeding in Court. In fact he made an incorrect entry about a case actually in Court with the intention that the date of the institution of the proceeding might be taken to be an earlier date. Section 192, IPC, completely covered the case against Ahlmad and also Harinath Singh the alleged abettor, and punishable under Section 193, IPC, which was one of the sections mentioned in Section 195(1)(b), CrPC. Hence the private complaint was therefore incompetent. But the case under Section 218, IPC, was not barred under Section 195, CrPC. Kamla Prasad Singh v. Harinath Singh, AIR 1968 SC 19 : 1968 CrLJ 86 : 1968 SCD 93 : (1968) 1 SCJ 507.

[7099] ● Magistrate cannot take cognizance of offences under Ss. 182, 211 and 193, IPC on false allegations.—Once a complaint filed by the informant which is based on the same facts and allegations on which the first information was registered, it is not open to a Magistrate to take cognizance of any offence alleged to have been committed under Section 211, IPC unless there has been proper compliance with the provisions of Section 195(1)(b) of the CrPC. It will lead to very anomalous results if any other view is accepted, e.g., if the complaint is ultimately dismissed and the Magistrate refused to lodge a complaint under Section 195(1)(b) its provisions will be defeated or circumvented if the police can move the Magistrate to take cognizance on a police report of an offence under Section 211, IPC. As regards an offence under Section 182, IPC, that offence is distinct from the one under Section 211, IPC, though the latter is more serious and may include the offence under the former section. The Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under Section 182 on a complaint in writing of the police officer by virtue of the provisions contained in Section 195(1)(a), CrPC, but it would virtually lead to the circumvention of the provisions of Section 195(1)(b) if the proceedings under Section 182 can continue where the offence disclosed is covered by Section 211, IPC, and a complaint is pending which has been filed by the informant on the same facts and allegations as were contained in his FIR. On a parity of reasoning with regard to an offence under Section 211 of the Penal Code, no cognizance can be taken by the Magistrate for the alleged offence under Section 193, IPC, which is one of the sections mentioned in Section 195(1)(b). State of Punjab v. Brijlal, AIR 1969 SC 355 : 1969 CrLJ 645 : (1969) 1 SCJ 383 : (1969) 1 SCA 228.

[7100] ● Acts committed not in discharge of duty, sanction not necessary.—It was only in the application of the settled rule as laid down by numerous decisions certain amount of difficult might be experienced owing to the peculiar facts of a particular case. The language of Section 197 clearly is that no Court would take cognizance of an offence alleged to have been committed by any person belonging to the category mentioned in the section which would include the appellant when he was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. It did not matter if the acts exceeded were strictly necessary for the discharge of the duty. What had to be found out was whether the act and the official duty were so inter-related that one could postulate reasonably that it was done by the accused in the performance of the official duty though possibly in excess of the needs and requirements of the situation. It was not every offence committed by a public servant which required sanction for prosecution under Section 197(1) of the Code, nor even every act done by him while he was actually engaged in the performance of his official duties. But if the act complained of was directly concerned with his official duty so that, if questioned, it could be claimed to have been done by virtue of the office, then sanction would be necessary and that would be so, irrespective of whether it was in fact a proper discharge of his duties or not. It was not clear in what capacity the appellant came to the spot. Normally it would be the officer-in-charge of the police station to go to the spot to prevent any breach of peace or apprehended breach of peace. Even if the appellant who was a superior officer could come to prevent any ugly situation arising between the complainant and the hawkers, it was not established that the appellant came in the capacity as a police officer. He came in civil dress, wanted the hawkers to be put in possession of the disputed plot and actually directed them to enter the plot and warned the complainant that if he resisted he would be slapped in his face. Until some more material was placed on the record it could not be held that it was any part of the duty of the appellant to ensure that the hawkers were put in possession of the disputed land. It was no part of the duty of a police officer to take sides and decide in favour of one party or to force one party to give up possession to the other, even if he was satisfied that the party seeking to take possession was lawfully entitled to do so. That the police officer could only do if there had been any direction by a competent Court for rendering help in the matter of delivery of possession. Whatever the way the matter was looked at, on the allegations contained in the statement of the complainant, the acts alleged against the appellant were not such as could be regarded to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. It would be open to the appellant to establish during the course of further proceedings that the requisite sanction under Section 197 should be obtained; but at the present stage the Supreme Court concurred with the view of the Judicial Commissioner that no such sanction was necessary. Prabhakar v. Shankar, AIR 1969 SC 686 : 1969 CrLJ 1057 : (1969) 1 SCJ 492.

[7101] ● Alleged acts inter-related with official duty.—The question whether a particular act is done by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties is substantially one of fact to be determined on the circumstances of each case. It is not the "duty" which requires examination so much as the "act" because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. One must also guard against to wide a construction because under our constitution the idea of legal equality or of universal subjection of all citizens to one law administered by the ordinary Courts has been pushed to its utmost limits by enshrining equality before the law in our fundamental principles. In construing Section 197, a line has to be drawn between the narrow inner circle of strict official duties and acts outside the scope of official duties.

Where a Civil Assistant Surgeon had filed a complaint against the Civil Surgeon that while in the operation theatre the Civil Surgeon abused the complainant before the patients and hospital staff and ordered the hospital cook to "turn out this badmash" referring to the complainant and the cook actually pushed out the complainant, there was nothing on the record to show that this was a part of the official duty of the Civil Surgeon or that it was so directly connected with the performance of his official duty that without so acting he could not have properly discharged it. It would be open to the Civil Surgeon to place material on the record during the course of the trial for showing what his duty as Civil Surgeon was and also that the impugned acts were inter-related with his official duty so as to attract the protection afforded by Section 197. B.P. Srivastava v. N.P. Mishra, AIR 1970 SC 1661 : (1970) 2 SCC 56 : 1970 CrLJ 1401 : 1970 SCD 581.

[7102] ● Power to order investigation.—The Magistrate can under Section 190 before taking cognizance, ask for investigation by the police under Section 156(3). The Magistrate can also issue warrant for production before taking cognizance. If after cognizance has been taken, the Magistrate wants any investigation, it will be under Section 202, CrPC. State of Assam v. Abdul Noor, AIR 1970 SC 1365 : (1970) 3 SCC 10 : 1970 CrLJ 1264 : 1970 SCD 358.

[7104] ● Consent not necessary for committal.—The police submitted a charge-sheet before a Magistrate for offence under Sections 419 and 471 read with Section 468 and Sections 419/109, 471 and 468, IPC, against one Bakshi Singh and the appellant respectively. Admittedly it did not refer to a charge under Section 120-B in respect of either of them. But while framing charges on perusing the records under Section 173, CrPC, and passing the committal order (under the old procedure), he framed a charge against both the accused under Section 120-B, IPC As the Magistrate took cognizance of the offences on the basis of the charge-sheet which did not contain the offence under Section 120-B, consent under Section 196-A(2) was not required as a condition precedent and the committal order and the proceedings for committal were not vitiated for want of such consent. Darshan Singh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 2372 : 1971 CrLJ 1697 : 1971 SCD 969.

[7105] ● Prohibition of cognizance of private complaints regarding offences u/s. 195(1)(b)(c), CrPC.—The offences about which the Court alone, to the exclusion of the aggrieved private parties, is clothed with the right to complain, may, be appropriately considered to be only those offences committed by a party to a proceeding in that Court, the commission of which has a reasonably close nexus with the proceedings in that Court so that it can, without embarking upon a completely independent and fresh inquiry, satisfactorily consider by reference principally to its records the expediency of prosecuting the delinquent party. The purpose and object of the Legislature in creating the bar against cognizance of private complaints in regard to the offences mentioned in Section 195(1)(b) and (c) is both to save the accused person from vexatious or baseless prosecution inspired by feelings of vindictiveness on the part of the private complainants to harass their opponents and also to avoid confusion which is likely to arise on account of conflicts between findings of the Courts in which forged documents are produced or false evidence is led and the conclusions of the Criminal Courts dealing with the private complaint. It is for this reason that the Legislature has entrusted the Court, whose proceedings had been the target of the offence of perjury, to consider the expediency in the larger public interest, of a criminal trial of the guilty party. Patel Laljibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1971 SC 1935 : (1971) 2 SCC 376 : 1971 CrLJ 1437.

[7106] ● Defamation—Complainant aggrieved person.—Section 198 lays down an exception to the general rule that a complaint can be filed by any body whether he is an aggrieved person or not, and modifies that rule by permitting only an aggrieved person to move a Magistrate in cases of defamation. The section is mandatory, so that if a Magistrate were to take cognizance of the offence of defamation on a complaint filed by one who is not an aggrieved person, the trial and conviction of an accused in such a case would be void and illegal. G. Narasimhan v. T.V. Chakkappa, AIR 1972 SC 2609 : (1972) 2 SCC 680 : 1973 CrLJ 52 : (1972) 2 SCJ 596.

[7107] ● Criminal conspiracy not part of official duty.—The offences of criminal conspiracy punishable under Section 120-B read with Section 409, IPC and also Section 5(2) PCA are concerned, they cannot be said to be of the nature mentioned in Section 197, CrPC. It is no part of the duty of a public servant, while discharging his official duties, to enter into a criminal conspiracy or to indulge in criminal misconduct. Want of sanction under Section 197, CrPC is therefore no bar. Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 409 : 1972 CrLJ 707 (SC).

[7108] ● Defamation—Complaint by other than aggrieved person.—The appellants were at the material time the Editors and Publishers of three daily newspapers printed and published in Madras. The respondent who was the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the conference organised by the Dravida Kazhagam filed the complaints alleging that the newspapers published a distorted version of the resolution advocating that it should not be an offence for a person's wife to desire another man, that he was one of the members responsible for sponsoring and piloting that resolution. In a case where Explanation 2 is resorted to, the identity of the company or the association or the collection of persons should be established so as to be relatable to the defamatory words or imputations. The news items complained of clearly stated that the resolution was passed by the conference and not by the Dravida Kazhagam and respondent signed describing himself in his first letter as the Chairman of the Reception Committee and not as an important member of the Dravida Kazhagam. There was no grievance there that the Dravida Kazhagam suffered injury in reputation or otherwise by that alleged distortion. In his advocate's letter to the appellants, the respondent's complaint was that the news item was highly defamatory and had tarnished the image of the conference, of whose Reception Committee he was the Chairman. In his evidence before the Magistrate also, he clearly stated that the resolution was moved by the President of and passed by the conference. Thus, his case throughout was that the publication of the said resolution reported in the said news item in distorted form had tarnished the image not of the Dravida Kazhagam but of the conference. That being so, the High Court completely missed the real issue, viz., whether the conference was a determinate and an identifiable body so that defamatory words used in relation to the resolution passed by it would be defamation of the individuals who composed it, and the respondent, as one such individual and Chairman of its Reception Committee could maintain a complaint under Section 500, IPC. Whether the Dravida Kazhagam was an identifiable group or not was beside the point. The conference was not such a determinate class like the Rashtriya Swayam Sevak or the body of pubic prosecutors in the ruling cited, where complaints by its individual member or members were held maintainable. It was impossible to have any definite idea as to its composition, the number of persons who attended, the ideas and the ideologies to which they subscribed and whether all of them positively agreed to the resolution in question. The evidence simply was that the person presiding it read out the resolution and because no one got up to oppose it, it was taken as approved of by all. The conference clearly was not an identifiable or a definitive body so that all those who attended it could be said to be its constituents who, if the conference was defamed, would, in their turn, be said to be defamed. Section 198, CrPC, is mandatory, so that if a Magistrate were to take cognizance of the offence of defamation on a complaint filed by one who was not an aggrieved person, the trial and conviction of an accused in such a case by the Magistrate would be void and illegal. For the reasons set out, these appeals were allowed, the order of the High Court set aside and the proceedings taken out by the Magistrate were quashed on the ground that the respondent's complaint was not competent. G. Narasimhan v. I.V. Chakkappa, AIR 1972 SC 2609 : (1972) 2 SCC 680 : 1973 CrLJ 52.

[7109] ● Sanction for prosecution not necessary.—Offences under Sections 161, 165 and 165-A, IPC, and Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act are cognizable offences and there is no question of their being cognizable if investigated by a Deputy Superintendent of Police and non-cognizable when investigated by an Inspector of Police. There can also be no question of those offences being cognizable if they are investigated under Section 156, CrPC, but not when investigated in accordance with the provisions of Section 5(A) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. Hence there is no need for a sanction under Section 196-A (Section 196 o the new Code). Union of India v. I.C. Lala, AIR 1973 SC 2204 : (1973) 2 SCC 72 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 730 : 1973 CrLJ 1190.

[7110] ● Prosecution in larger interest.—The Court orders prosecution in the larger interests of the administration of justice and not to gratify feelings of personal revenge or vindictiveness or to serve the ends of a private party. Too frequent prosecutions for such offences tend to defeat its very object. It is only in glaring cases of deliberate falsehood where conviction is highly likely that the Court should direct prosecution. Santoskh Singh v. Izhar Hussain, AIR 1973 SC 2190 : 1973 CrLJ 1176 : 1973 SCD 611.

[7111] ● Prohibition against complaint by private party.—The words "to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court" in Section 195(1)(c) mean that the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, that is, after having become a party to the proceeding. Where the accused put forward an unknown lady to personate one lady and two of the accused identified that lady as the person impersonated before the sub-registrar in the Registration Office knowing that she was not in fact that particular lady, and after thus securing a sale deed the other accused filed an application before the Tahsildar for mutation of revenue entries in his favour and in those proceedings he used the said forged sale deed as genuine knowing it to be forged. On receipt of notice, the lady impersonated resisted the application by denying having ever sold the plot in question or having ever executed and got registered the alleged sale deed. Thereafter she filed a complaint against the appellants under Sections 465, 468 and 471, IPC. They were acquitted by the Sessions Court and upon appeal the High Court convicted them under Section 465, read with Section 109, IPC. It was contended in the Supreme Court that even a prosecution for an offence under Section 465, IPC, required complaint by the Revenue Court concerned as such an offence was covered by Section 195(1)(c), CrPC. The contention was not correct. The prohibition contained in Section 195(1)(c) should be confined only to those cases in which the offences specified therein were committed by a party to the proceeding in the character as such party. Otherwise, documents forged long before the commencement of a proceeding in which they might happen to be actually used or produced in evidence, years later by some other party would also be subject to Sections 195 and 476, CrPC. Raghunath v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 1100 : (1973) 1 SCC 564 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 448 : 1973 CrLJ 858.

[7112] ● Act of public servant purported to have been in exercise of his duty.—Though the law is well-settled, the difficulty really arises in applying the law to the facts of any particular case. The section is not restricted only to cases of anything purported to be done in good faith, for a person who ostensibly acts in execution of his duty still purports so to act, although he may have a dishonest intention. It is also not confined to cases where they act, which constitutes the offence, is the official duty of the official concerned. Such an interpretation would involve a contradiction in terms, because an offence can never be an official duty. The offence could have been committed when an act is done in the execution of duty or when an act purports to be done in the execution of the duty. The test appears to be not that the offence is capable of being committed only by a public servant and not by any one else, but that it is committed by a public servant in an act done or purported to be done in the execution of his duty. It does not apply to acts done purely in a private capacity by a public servant. There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of the official duty; the act must bear such relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable, but not a pretended or fanciful claim, that he did it in the course of the performance of the duty. Where the accused who was the post Master General, kicked the complainant, a clerk in the post office, and abused him when the latter was making a representation to the accused for cancelling the transfer, applying the aforesaid test, the acts complained of could not be said to have been done in the course of performance of the accused's official duty, so as to require sanction for his prosecution and to justify the case being thrown out for want of sanction. It would be open to the accused to place the material on record during the course of the trial for showing what his duty was and also that the acts complained of were so inter-related with his official duty so as to attract the protection afforded by Section 197, CrPC. Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1973 SC 2591 : (1973) 2 SCC 701 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 944 : 1973 CrLJ 1795.

[7113] ● Prohibition continued to offences alleged.—The complaint alleged that the appellants forged the will of one Kharturam, produced it before the Patwari and used it as a piece of evidence in support of their title to a land. The Tehsildar directed that entries be made in the Record of Rights in the names of the appellants on the strength of that will. It was difficult on those facts to invoke the application of Section 195(1)(c) of the Code. In order to attract that provision, the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, i.e., after having become a party to the proceeding. The forgery was therefore alleged to have been committed by the appellants not after they become parties to the mutation proceedings but prior to the commencement of those proceedings. The section could therefore have no application at least in regard to the offences under Sections 464, 467 and 468, IPC. Different considerations might, perhaps,arise in regard to the offence under Section 471, IPC, for the allegations might reasonably be susceptible of the construction that the offence of using a forged document as genuine punishable under Section 471 was committed by the appellants in their capacity as parties to a mutation proceeding. But the further question would be whether the will was produced or given in evidence in any "Court", within the meaning of clause (c). But that question was not answered by the Supreme Court observing that if the complainant succeeded in proving the other offences, it would be academic to consider whether the Magistrate could take cognizance for the offence under Section 471 because it was hardly likely that a separate sentence would be imposed for that offence, and on the other hand, if the charge with regard to the other offences failed, the one in regard to Section 471 would necessarily fail in the light of facts stated in the complaint. Mohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1974 SC 299 : (1974) 3 SCC 628 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 118 : 1974 CrLJ 350.

[7114] ● Magistrate ordering investigation, no cognizance taken.—When on receiving a complaint the Magistrate applies his mind for the purposes of proceeding under Section 200 and the succeeding sections in Chapter XV of the Code, he is said to have taken cognizance of the offence within the meaning of Section 190(1)(a). If instead of proceeding under Chapter XV, he has in the Judicial exercise of his discretion taken action of some other crime, such as issuing a search-warrant for the purpose of investigation, or ordering investigation by the police under Section 156(3), he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of any offence. D. Lakshminarayana v. V. Narayana Reddy, AIR 1976 SC 1672 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 380 : 1976 CrLJ 1361 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 260.

[7115] ● Applicability of S. 195, CrPC.—The inhibition in Section 195(1)(c) applied only where a person was being tried for an offence falling under Section 463 or punishable under Sections 471, 475 or 476. Hence so far as the offence under Sections 418 and 477-A were concerned, they were plainly not covered by Section 195(1)(c). The trial of the respondent for those two offences could not be said to be vitiated on the ground of absence of a complaint in writing by the Company Judge. The words in Section 195(1)(c) clearly meant that the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, that is, after having become a party to the proceeding. A reading of Sections 195(1)(c), 476 and 476-A of the Code (Sections 195(1)(b)(ii), 340(ii) & 341(1) of the new Code) together would indicate beyond doubt that the Legislature could not have intended to extend the prohibition contained in Section 195(1)(c) to offences mentioned therein when committed by a party to the proceeding prior to his becoming such party. In that view, since the offence charged against the respondent was one alleged to have been committed by him before he became a party to the proceeding before the Company Judge. Section 195(1)(c) had no application. Further neither of the two forged bills was produced or given in evidence in the proceeding before the company Judge. They were taken possession of by the Special Officer along with other records and nobody produced them in evidence before the Company Judge. On that ground also the section was not attracted. The High Court was therefore entitled to proceed with the trial of the respondent for an offence under Section 471 without any complaint in writing from the Company Judge. The appeal was allowed. Legal Remembrancer, Govt. of W.B. v. Haridas, AIR 1976 SC 2225 : (1976) 1 SCC 555 : 1976 CrLJ 1732.

[7116] ● Power to issue process.—Where a Magistrate took cognizance of the offence on the police report and after taking cognizance and perusal of the record, he satisfied himself that there were prima facie grounds for issuing process against the respondents, he does not exceed the powers vested in him under law. Hareram v. Thikaram, AIR 1978 SC 1568 : (1978) 4 SCC 58 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 496 : 1978 CrLJ 1687.

[7117] ● Applicability of S. 197, CrPC.—In the instant case the material brought on record up to the stage when the question of want of sanction was raised by the appellants, contained a clear allegation against them about the commission of an offence under Section 409, IPC, as it was substantially alleged that the appellants had seized the goods and were holding them in trust in the discharge of their official duty, for being dealt with or disposed of in accordance with law, but in dishonest breach of that trust, they criminally misappropriated or converted those goods, Whether this allegation or charge is true or false, is not to be gone into at this stage. In considering the question whether sanction for prosecution was or was not necessary, these criminal acts attributed to the accused are to be taken as alleged. The sine quo non for the applicability of Section 197 is that the offence charged, be it one of commission or omission, must be one which has been committed by the public servant either in his official capacity or under the colour of office held by him. One broad test may well be whether the public servant, if challenged, can reasonably claim, that what he does, he does in virtue of his office. The act complained of is dishonest misappropriation or conversion of the goods by the appellants, which they had seized and, as such, were holding in trust to be dealt with in accordance with law. There can be no dispute that the seizure of the goods by the appellants and their being thus entrusted with the goods or dominion over them, was an act committed by them while acting in the discharge of their official duty. Could the subsequent act of dishonest misappropriation or conversion complained of bear such an integral relation to the duty of the appellants that they could genuinely claim that they committed it in the course of the performance of their official duty? In the facts of the instant case the answer cannot but be in the negative. There is nothing in the nature or quality of the act complained of which attaches to or partakes of the official character of the appellants who allegedly did it. Nor could the alleged act of misappropriation or conversion, be reasonably said to be imbued with the colour of he office held by the appellants. Hence sanction of the appropriate Government was not necessary for the prosecution of the appellants for an offence under Section 409/120-B, IPC, because the alleged act of criminal misappropriation complained of was not committed by them while they were acting or purporting to act in the discharge of their official duty, commission of offence having no direct connection or inseparable link with their duties as public servants. At the most the official status of the appellants furnished them with an opportunity or an occasion to commit the alleged criminal act. S.B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, AIR 1979 SC 1841 : (1979) 4 SCC 177 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 939 : 1979 CrLJ 1367 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 537.

[7118] ● Offence "in relation to proceeding in Court".—T filed a report against P and others at the police station. Warrants were issued for the arrest of the accused who surrendered before the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate and he released them on bail. Police referred the report of T as false and the Magistrate agreeing with the police report passed an order discharging the accused. Thereafter P filed a complaint before the same Magistrate accusing T of the commission of offences under Sections 211 and 182, IPC, by reason of the latter having lodged with the police the false complaint. T appeared in Court in response to a summons issued only in respect of an offence under Section 211. T filed a petition to the High Court of Calcutta praying for quashing of proceedings against him before the SDJM inasmuch as the latter was debarred from taking cognizance of the offence under Section 211 in the absence of a complaint in writing of the SDJM himself in view of the provisions of Section 195(1)(b), CrPC. The complaint against T was in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed in relation to a proceeding in Court and the SDJM acted in contravention of the bar contained in clause (b) of Section 195(1) in taking cognizance of the said complaint, as there was no complaint in writing either of the SDJM or of a superior Court. Decision of the Calcutta High Court was reversed.

A Magistrate while passing an order releasing an accused person on bail or discharging him in pursuance of a report submitted by the police to the effect that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the charge, acts judicially and therefore is a Court within the meaning of that term as used in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 195 of the Code. Kamlapati v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1979 SC 777 : 1979 CrLJ 679 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 128 : (1979) 2 SCR 717.

[7119] ● Jurisdiction to take cognizance.—The appellant entered into a conspiracy and tampered with the evidence of one of the defence witnesses which is a record of the Court. The Appellant was a party to a proceeding in the High Court when the appeal was heard but the document complained of as having been tampered with, i.e., the evidence of the defence witness was not produced or given in evidence in the appeal before the High Court. The alleged tampering was after the hearing of the appeal was concluded. No doubt, the tampering was in a proceeding in relation to the preparation of the record. Requirements of Section 195(1)(c) having not been satisfied a complaint by the Court in writing is not necessary. Equally, under Section 195(4) relating to criminal conspiracy to commit offence, a complaint by the Court is not necessary. Therefore, Section 196-A(2) is attracted and a complaint by the State Government or the Chief Presidency

Magistrate or a District Magistrate empowered in this behalf by the State Government in writing consenting to the initiation of the proceedings for an offence under Section 120-B, IPC, is necessary. As in this case no such order consenting to the initiation of proceedings was passed, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence against the appellant. Judgment of the M.P. High Court was reversed and the order of committal passed by the Magistrate was quashed. S.L. Goswamy v. Madhya Pradesh High Court, AIR 1979 SC 437 : (1979) 1 SCC 373 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 311 : 1979 CrLJ 193 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 371.

[7120] ● Power of Magistrate to dismiss complaint or issue process.—On receipt of a complaint, the Magistrate may, instead of taking cognizance of the offence, order an investigation under Section 156(3). The police will then investigate and submit a report under Section 173(1). On receiving the police report the Magistrate may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) and straight way issue process. This he may do irrespective of the view expressed by the police in their report whether an offence has been made out or not. The police report under Section 173 will contain the facts discovered or unearthed by the Police and the conclusions drawn by them therefrom. The Magistrate is not bound by the conclusions drawn by the police and he may decide to issue process even if the police recommend that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding further. The Magistrate after receiving the police report, may, without issuing process or dropping the proceeding decide to take cognizance of the offence on the basis of the complaint originally submitted to him and proceed to record he statements upon oath of the complainant and the witnesses present under Section 200 of the Code and thereafter decide whether to dismiss the complaint or issue process. The mere fact that he had earlier ordered an investigation under Section 156(3) and received a report under Section 173 will not have the effect of total effacement of the complaint and therefore the Magistrate will not be barred from proceeding under Sections 200, 203 and 204. Thus, a Magistrate may, in such a case, do one of three things : (1) he may decide that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding further and drop action; (2) he may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) on the basis of the police report and issue process; this he may do without being bound in any manner by the conclusion arrived at by the police in their report; and (3) he may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(a) on the basis of the original complaint and proceed to examine upon oath the complainant and his witnesses under Section 200. If he adopts the third alternative, he may hold or direct an inquiry under Section 202 if he thinks fit. Thereafter he may dismiss the complaint or issue process, as the case may be. H.S. Bains v. State, U.T., Chandigarh, AIR 1980 SC 1883 : 1980 CrLJ 1308 : (1980) 4 SCC 631 : (1981) 1 SCR 935.

[7121] ● "Armed forces" includes "Central Reserve Police".—Expression "Armed Forces of the Union" occurring in Section 197(2) is governed by a definition occurring elsewhere (either in the CrPC or in any other statute). Given its ordinary meaning, it includes not merely Naval, Military and Air Force but also any other Armed Forces of the Union as contained in Entry 2 in List I of the VII Schedule to the Constitution. Central Reserve Police Force is included in the "Armed Forces of the Union". Akhilesh Prasad v. Union Territory of Mizoram, AIR 1981 SC 806 : (1981) 2 SCC 150 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 337 : 1981 CrLJ 407 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 271.

[7122] ● Improper cognizance and issuing process.—In a private complaint, the Magistrate directed investigation under Section 202, CrPC. Report of investigation merely stated that a prima facie case was made out against four persons. Except expressing his opinion, no details of investigation made by him were mentioned nor did it refer to any witness examined by him or nay document perused by him. As there was no additional material before him except what was already there when he ordered an investigation under Section 202, Magistrate was wrong in taking cognizance of the case and ordering issue of process to the accused merely on the basis of opinion expressed by the investigating officer and without any reference to any further material. Mohammad Ataullah v. Ram Saran, AIR 1981 SC 1155 : (1981) 2 SCC 266 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 419 : 1981 CrLJ 616 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 192.

[7123] ● Rent Control Officer "Civil Court".—Offence under Section 193, IPC, was alleged for filing a false affidavit before the Rent Control Officer. Rent Control Officer shall be deemed to be a Civil Court within the meaning of Sections 345 & 346, CrPC, 1973 and in view of Section 34(2) of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent & Eviction) Act, 1972, shall be a Civil Court for purposes of Section 193, IPC. Complaint by the Court in writing is a precondition under Section 195(1)(b)(i) for taking cognizance of such offence by any Criminal Court. If the same is not satisfied, the Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance. 1981 ACrR 98 reversed. Chandrapal Singh v. Maharaj Singh, AIR 1982 SC 1238 : (1982) 1 SCC 466 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1982 CrLJ 1731 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 126 : 1982 ALJ 507 : 1982 AWC 251 : 1982 CrAppR (SC) 65 : 1982 ACrR 170 : 1982 (2) ChandLR (Cr) 46 (SC) : 1982 UJ (SC) 517 : (1982) 2 SCWR 61.

[7124] ● Expression "acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty".—In this appeal by special leave, the short question for consideration was, if sanction under Section 197, CrPC, was necessary for the prosecution of the appellant for an offence of cheating punishable under Section 420, IPC. The appellant was Regional Officer of the Directorate of Field Publicity of the Government of India. He travelled by air on three occasions by obtaining air tickets in lieu of exchange orders. The cost of the tickets obtained by the appellant was debitable to the account of the Directorate and under the rules the appellant was required to exclude the same from the bills for traveling allowance. On the allegation that the appellant submitted bills including the air fare and received payment for the same, a prosecution report was submitted against him for the offence of cheating under Section 420, IPC. The appellant took the plea that in the absence of sanction under Section 197 of the Code, the prosecution was not maintainable. The trying Magistrate rejected the contention and the High Court upheld the order.

Where a public servant committed the offence of cheating or abetted another so to cheat, the offence committed by him was not one while he was acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, as such offence had no necessary connection between it and the performance of the duties of a public servant, the official status furnishing only the occasion or opportunity for the commission of the offence. Drawing of T.A. bills could not be said to have been directly and reasonably connected with the appellant's duty as Regional Officer of the Directorate and the official status furnished the opportunity for doing the acts which constituted ingredients of the offence. He was, therefore, not entitled to claim the protection of Section 197(1) of the Code. The appeal was therefore dismissed. Manohar Nath v. State of J&K, AIR 1983 SC 610 : (1983) 3 SCC 429 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 647 : 1983 CrLJ 988 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 318 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1165 : 1983 ACrR 278 : 1983 AWC 555 : 1983 ACrC 254 : (1983) 2 ChandLR (Cr) 175 : 1983 UJ (SC) 572 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 277.

[7125] ● Complaint against Magistrate.—The respondent, an advocate, was representing the defendant in the suit which was being heard by the appellant. An application for transfer of that suit was moved by the defendant before the District Court. The District Judge called for remarks from the appellant regarding certain allegations in the transfer application. The appellant submitted his remarks in the form of a D.O. letter wherein he reported that the conduct and character of the respondent herein were not good and that it was brought to his notice that the respondent (Advocate) was a big gambler in the town and was a rowdy also and on account of that he exhibited all sorts of rowdyism in the open Court. That letter was read out by the District Judge in open Court. The respondent thereupon filed a criminal complaint against the appellant alleging that the aforesaid contents of the D.O. letter amounted to his defamation under Section 499, IPC. A question was raised before the Magistrate whether the Court could take cognizance of the offence without the sanction contemplated in Section 197, CrPC.

It was contended that the D.O. letter sent by the appellant to the District Judge was in discharge of his duties because the District Judge had called for the remarks and hence whatsoever had been written by the appellant was done while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty and as such the ingredients of Section 197, CrPC, were satisfied. It was not possible to accept the said contention as there was no reasonable nexus between the act complained of and the discharge of duty by the appellant. Calling the respondent as "rowdy', 'a big gambler' and 'a mischievous element' could not even remotely be said to be connected with the discharge of official duty which was to offer his remarks regarding the allegations made in the transfer petition. The appeal was therefore dismissed. B.S. Sambhu v. T.S. Krishnaswamy, AIR 1983 SC 64 : (1983) 1 SCC 11 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 125 : 1983 CrLJ 158 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 513 : (1983) 1 Crimes 914.

[7126] ● Offence committed by MLA, sanction necessary.—The appellants are being prosecuted for the criminal misconduct which they are alleged to have committed during the period they were Members of the Council of Ministers and not in their capacity as the MLAs. Hence, the provisions of Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 are inapplicable to the facts of the present case as held in R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, AIR 1984 SC 684 : (1984) 2 SCR 495.

[7127] ● Recital of wrong provision of law.—A Sessions case was transferred by the Principal City Civil & Sessions Judge to the VI Additional City Civil & Session Judge. Latter tried and convicted the accused. High Court set aside the same and directed the former to try the accused.

Appeal was allowed holding that merely because an order is purported to be made under a wrong provision of law, it does not become invalid so long as there is some other provision of law under which the order could be validly made. Mere recital of a wrong provision of law does not have the effect of invalidating an order which otherwise was within the power of the authority making it. Section 409(1) instead of Section 194 was wrongly recited in the order of transfer and must be read as one made under Section 194 of the Code. State of Karnataka v. Muniyalla, AIR 1985 SC 470 : (1985) 1 SCC 196 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 50 : 1985 CrLJ 751 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 2.

[7128] ● Opportunity of hearing to informant before deciding not to take cognizance of offence.—When the Magistrate was not inclined to take cognizance of the offence and issue process, on a consideration of the report made by the Officer in charge of a police station under sub-section (2)(i) of Section 173, informant should be given an opportunity of being heard so that he could make his submissions to persuade the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence and issue process. Similarly in a case where the Magistrate to whom a report was forwarded under sub-section (2)(i) of Section 173 decided not to take cognizance of the offence and to drop the proceeding or took the view that there was no sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the persons mentioned in the FIR, the Magistrate should give notice to the informant and provide him an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of the report.

No obligation on the Magistrate to issue notice to the injured person or to a relative of the deceased could be spelt out either from the provisions of the CrPC, 1973 or from the principles of natural justice, for providing such person an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of the report, unless such person was the informant who had lodged the First Information Report. But even if such person was not entitled to notice from the Magistrate, he could appear before the Magistrate and make his submissions when the report was considered by the Magistrate for the purpose of deciding what action he should take on the report. Such a person though not entitled to notice from the Magistrate, had locus to appear before him at the time of consideration of the report, if he otherwise came to know that the report was going to be considered by the Magistrate and if he wanted to make his submissions in regard to the report, the Magistrate was bound to hear him. Even though the Magistrate was not bound to give such notice he might, in the exercise of the discretion, if he so thought fit, given such notice to the injured person or to any particular relative or relatives of the deceased, but not giving of such notice would not have any invalidating effect on the order which might be made by the Magistrate on a consideration of the report. Bhagwant Singh v. Commissioner of Police, AIR 1985 SC 1285 : (1985) 2 SCC 537 : 1985 CrLJ 1521 : 1985 (1) Crimes 994.

[7129] ● Act not performed in discharge of official duty.—Where the Sub-Inspector and the constable of the Delhi Police Force tampered with the search Memo while in the custody of the Court, it cannot be deemed to be an act purported to have been done by them in the discharge of their official duty and as such the previous sanction of the Lt. Governor as provided in Section 197(3), CrPC was not at all necessary for initiating the proceedings against them. Balbir Singh v. D.N. Kadian, AIR 1986 SC 345 : (1986) 1 SCC 410 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 80 : 1986 CrLJ 314 : (1986) 1 Crimes 373.

[7130] ● Inherent powers to stay proceedings.—The direction made presumably under the inherent powers of the High Court contained in Section 482 was wholly unwarranted. The High Court Judge should not have made a direction at all requiring the Sessions Judge to proceed with the trial as against A-1 and A-2 merely because there was stay granted by the High Court in revision preferred by the co-accused (A-3 and A-4) against the order of the Sessions Judge rejecting the objection as to the validity of the trial for want of sanction. If the High Court felt that the grant of stay would prejudicially affect A-1 and A-2 and subject them to a protracted trial, the proper course for the High Court Judge was to have heard and disposed of the revision petition granting stay rather than make a direction to proceed with the trial against A-1 and A-2 which would in fact result in splitting up of the trial which was apt to cause miscarriage of justice, besides serious prejudice to the prosecution. It could not be said that merely because the proceedings before the Sessions Judge were held up due to stay granted by High Court in that revision, the High Court Judge should have taken recourse to the inherent powers of the High Court under Section 482, or that it was necessary to do so either to prevent abuse of the process of Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. Any further delay in the trial could be prevented by taking up the revision for hearing. The appeal was allowed and the High Court was directed to hear and dispose of the revision as early as possible and in the meanwhile ordered that the trial should remain stayed till the disposal of the revision. State of Karnataka v. Nassa Reddy, AIR 1987 SC

2104 : (1987) 4 SCC 170 : 1987 CrLJ 1929 : (1987)) 3 Crimes 215.

[7131] ● Prosecution of bank employee.—Though an employee of a Nationalised Bank is a public servant, he does not hold a post where he could not be removed from service except by or with the sanction of the Government. Ch. Prasad v. J. Vanalatha Devi, AIR 1987 SC 722 : 1987 CrLJ 697 : (1987) 1 Supreme 111 : (1987) 1 Crimes 482 : (1987) 1 (1) IJ Rep 379.

[7132] ● Complaint against police officer for causing death of victim.—Where it is alleged that grievous injuries were inflicted upon the complainant and one of the alleged accused had died, the question is while investigating and performing his duties as a police officer was it necessary for the petitioner to conduct himself in such a manner which would result in such consequences. It is necessary to protect the public servants in the discharge of their duties. They must be made immune from being harassed in criminal proceedings and prosecution and that is the rationale behind Sections 196 and 197, CrPC. It is equally important to emphasise that rights of citizens should be protected and no excesses should be permitted. "Encounter death" has become too common. In the facts and the circumstances of each case protection of public officers and public servants functioning in the discharge of official duties and protection of private citizens have to be balanced by finding out as to what extent and how far is a public servant working in discharge of his duties or purported to discharge his duties, and whether the public servant has exceeded his limit. Though Section 196 states that no cognizance can be taken and even after cognizance having been taken if facts come to light that the acts comprised of were done in the discharge of the official duties, then the trial may have to be stayed, unless sanction is obtained. But at the same time it has to be emphasised that criminal trials should not be stayed in all cases at the preliminary stage because that will cause great damage to the evidence. In the instant case as the Court felt that unless cognizance was taken and the facts and circumstances and the nature of the allegations involved in the case were gone into, the question whether the raiding party exceeded its limits or power while acting in their official duties could not be determined. The High Court and the Supreme Court upheld the order of the trial Court. Bakshish Singh v. Gurmej Kaur, AIR 1988 SC 257 : (1987) 4 SCC 663 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 29 : 1988 CrLJ 419 : (1987) 3 Crimes 612 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 649 : JT 1987 (5) SC 190 : (1987) 3 SCJ 649 : 1988 BLJ 43 : 1988 Cal CrLR (SC) 1.

[7133] ● Power of High Court allot particular case to a particular Judge.—The first part of the section clearly provides that the Sessions Judge of the Division by general or special order is supposed to allot cases arising in a particular area or jurisdiction to be tried by additional or Assistant Sessions Judges appointed in the Division but the last part of this section also authorises the High Court to allot the case to a particular Judge keeping in view of the fact that in certain cases the Sessions Judge may not like to allot and may report to the High Court or either of the parties may move an application for transfer and under these circumstances it may become necessary for the High Court to allot a particular case to a particular Judge. Thus the objection raised by the appellant's counsel that it was not necessary for the High Court to have allotted the case to a particular Judge is of no consequence. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1 : (1988) 2 Crimes 209.

[7134] ● Offence in respect of document produced in evidence.—Section 195 of the Code was attracted when such offence was alleged to have been committed in respect of "a document produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in any Court", and accordingly held that since the document alleged to have been forged was not in the present case produced in the Court, the provisions of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) had no application and confirmed the High Court's direction but on a different ground as indicated. Sushil Kumar v. State of Haryana, AIR 1988 SC 419 : 1987 Supp SCC 654 : 1988 CrLJ 427 : (1988) 1 SCJ 28.

[7135] ● Validity of prosecution for adultery.—Section 497, IPC, is so designed that a husband cannot prosecute the wife for defiling the sanctity of the matrimonial tie by committing adultery. Thus the law permits neither the husband of the offending wife to prosecute his wife nor does the law permit the wife to prosecute the offending husband for being disloyal to her. Thus both the husband and the wife are disabled from striving each other with the weapon of criminal law. The philosophy underlying the scheme of Section 198(2), CrPC, and Section 497, IPC, appears to be as between the husband and the wife social goodwill be promoted by permitting them to 'make-up' or 'break-up' the matrimonial tie rather than to drag each other to a criminal Court. They can either condone the offence in a spirit of "forgive and forget" and live together or separate by approaching a matrimonial Court and snapping the matrimonial tie by securing divorce. They are not enabled to send each other to jail. The Court is not the arbiter of the wisdom or the philosophy of the law. It is the arbiter merely of the constitutionality of the law.

Section 497, IPC, and Section 198(1) read with Section 198(2), CrPC, go hand-in-hand and constitute a legislative packet to deal with the offence committed by an outsider to the matrimonial unit who invites the peace and privacy of the matrimonial unit and poisons the relationship between the two partners constituting that unit. The community punishes the "outsider" who breaks into the matrimonial home and occasions the violation of sanctity of the matrimonial tie by developing an illicit relationship with one of the spouses subject to the rider that the erring "man" alone can be punished and not the erring woman. There is thus reverse discrimination in "favour" of the woman rather than "against" her. Thus there is no discrimination against the woman in so far as she is not permitted to prosecute her husband. A husband is not permitted because the wife is not treated as an offender in the eye of law. V. Revathi v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 835 : (1988) 2 SCC 72 : 1988 CrLJ 921.

[7136] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance independently.—The position is now well settled that upon receipt of a police report under Section 173(2) of the Code a Magistrate is entitled to take cognizance of an offence under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code even if the police report is to the effect that no case is made out against the accused. The Magistrate can take into account the statements of the witnesses examined by the police during the investigation and take cognizance of the offence complained of and order issue of process to the accused. Section 190(1)(b) does not lay down that a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence only if the investigating officer gives an opinion that the investigation has made out a case against the accused. The Magistrate can ignore the conclusion arrived at by the investigating officer and independently apply his mind to the facts emerging from the investigation and take cognizance of the case, if he thinks fit, in exercise of his powers under Section 190(1)(b) and direct the issue of process to the accused. The Magistrate is not bound in such a situation to follow the procedure laid down in Sections 200 and 202 of the Code for taking cognizance of a case under Section 190(1)(a) though it is open to him to act under Section 200 or Section 202 also. The High Court was therefore wrong in its view of the matter. The fact that in this case the investigation had not originated from a complaint preferred to the Magistrate but had been made pursuant to a report given to the police would not alter the situation in any manner. Even if the appellant had preferred a complaint before the Magistrate and the latter had ordered investigation under Section 156(3), the police would have had to submit a report under Section 173(2). The order of the High Court is therefore set aside and that of the Metropolitan Magistrate restored. India Carat Private Ltd. v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1989 SC 885 : (1989) 2 SCC 132 : 1989 CrLJ 963.

[7137] ● Complaint should contain positive averments.—It is important to state that for a Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence as against the Chief Editor, there must be positive averments in the complaint of knowledge of the objectionable character of the matter. The complaint, in the instant case, does not contain any such allegation. In the absence of such allegation, the Magistrate was justified in directing that the complaint so far as it relates to the Chief Editor could not be proceeded with. To ask the Chief Editor to undergo the trial of the case merely on the ground of the issue of process would be oppressive. K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, AIR 1992 SC 2206 : (1992) 1 SCC 217 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1992 CrLJ 3779 : JT 1991 (4) SC 464.

[7138] ● Offences committed outside India, previous sanction not condition precedent.—The agreement does not come to an end with its making, but would endure till it is accomplished or abandoned or proved abortive. Being a continuing offence, if any acts or omissions which constitutes an offence are done in India or outside its territory the conspirators continuing to be parties to the conspiracy and since part of the acts were done in India, they would obviate the need to obtain sanction of the Central Govt. All of them need not be present in India nor continue to remain in India.

A conspiracy thus, is a continuing offence and continues to subsist and committed wherever one of the conspirators does an act or series of acts. So long as its performance continues, it is a continuing offence till it is executed or rescinded or frustrated by choice or necessity. A crime is complete as soon as the agreement is made, but it is not a thing of the moment. It does not end with the making of the agreement. It will continue so long as there are two or more parties to it intending to carry into effect the design. Its continuance is a threat to the society against which it was aimed at and would be dealt with as soon as that jurisdiction can properly claim the power to do so. The conspiracy designed or agreed abroad will have the same effect as in India, when part of the acts, pursuant to the agreement are agreed to be finalised or done, attempted or even frustrated and vice versa.

Sanction under Section 188 is not a condition precedent to take cognizance of the offence. If need be it could be obtained before trial begins. Conspiracy was initially hatched at Chandigarh and though itself is a completed offence, being continuing offence, even accepting appellant's case that he was at Dubai and part of conspiracy and overt acts in furtherance thereof had taken place at Dubai and partly at Chandigarh; and in consequence thereof other offences had been ensued. Since the offences have been committed during the continuing course of transaction culminated in cheating PNB at Chandigarh, the need to obtain sanction for various offences under proviso to Section 188 is obviated. Therefore, there is no need to obtain sanction from Central Govt. The case may be different if the offences were committed outside India and are completed in themselves without conspiracy.

Preparation of bill of lading at Dubai or payment at Dubai were not isolated acts. They were part of chain activities between the appellant and his associates with whom he entered into agreement to cheat the bank at Chandigarh. Any isolated act or omission committed at Dubai was insufficient to constitute an offence. The illegal act of dishonestly inducing the bank at Chandigarh was committed not by preparation of bill at Dubai but its presentation in pursuance of agreement to cheat. The submission thus founded was on residence or on preparation of bills of lading or encashment at Dubai are of no consequence.

Nor is there any merit in the submission that even part of the offence would attract Section 188 as the section operates when offence is committed outside India. An offence is committed when all the ingredients are satisfied. The section having used the word offence it cannot be understood as part of the offence. Section 179, CrPC empowers a Court to try an offence either at a place where the offence is committed or the consequences ensue. On the allegations in the complaint the act or omissions were committed in India. In any case the consequence of conspiracy, cheating and forging having taken place at Chandigarh the offence was not committed outside the country therefore the provisions of Section 188, CrPC were not attracted. Ajay Agarwal v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 1637 : 1993(3) SCC 609 : 1993 CrLJ 2516 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 445 : 1993 (2) Crimes 342.

[7139] ● Power to summon additional accused.—On a plain reading of sub-section (1) of Section 319 there can be no doubt that it must appear from the evidence tendered in the course of any inquiry or trial that any person not being the accused has committed any offence for which he could be tried together with the accused. This power, it seems clear to us, can be exercised only if it so appears from the evidence at the trial and not otherwise. Therefore, this sub-section contemplates existence of some evidence appearing in the course of trial wherefrom the Court can prima facie conclude that the person not arraigned before it is also involved in the commission of the crime for which he can be tried with those already named by the police. Even a person who has earlier been discharged would fall within the sweep of the power conferred by Section 319 of the Code.

But then it must be conceded that Section 319 covers the post-cognizance stage where in the course of an inquiry or trial the involvement or complicity of a person or persons not named by the investigating agency has surfaced which necessitates the exercise of the discretionary power conferred by the said provision. Section 319 can be invoked both by the Court having original jurisdiction as well as the Court to which the case has been committed or transferred for trial. The sweep of Section 319 is, therefore, limited, in that, it is an enabling provision which can be invoked only if evidence surfaces in the course of an inquiry or a trial disclosing the complicity of a person or persons other than the person or persons already arraigned before it. If this is the true scope and ambit of Section 319 of the Code the question is whether there is any other provision in the Code which would entitle the Court to pass a similar order in similar circumstances. On the Magistrate committing the case under Section 209 to the Court of Session the bar of Section 193 is lifted thereby investing the Court of Session complete and unfettered jurisdiction of the Court of original jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence which would include the summoning of the person or persons whose complicity in the commission of the crime can prima facie be gathered from the material available on record. Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, 1993 (2) SCC 16 : 1993 CrLJ 1700 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 193 : 1993 (1) Crimes 494.

[7140] ● Offence of forgery of documents in proceedings before Revenue Court.—The appellants in all these appeals were tried for offences punishable under Sections 466, 468, 471 read with Section 120-B, IPC, as well as under Section 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. The object of the conspiracy was to frustrate the provisions of the newly notified Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961 in so far as the provisions affected the interest of the conspirators and thereby to retain the large areas of lands with the leaders of the conspiracy and their relatives, etc. To achieve this object, it is alleged that certain revenue records and the records of the concerned sugar factory were forged and some incorrect entries were made.

Regarding the offences committed before the start of the proceedings, the High Court, in our view has rightly held that, no complaint is necessary by the Court concerned either in the old Criminal Procedure Code or in the new Code. Therefore, the contention that the absence of a complaint by the Revenue Court was a bar for taking cognizance by the Criminal Court in respect of these offences which were committed even before the start of the proceedings before the Revenue Court cannot be sustained. Mahadev Bapuji Mahajan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1994 SC 1549 (1550) : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 748 : 1994 CrLJ 1389.

[7141] ● Power of sessions Court to take cognizance as Court of original jurisdiction.—On a plain reading of Section 193, as it presently stands once the case is committed to the Court of Session by a Magistrate under the Code, the restriction placed on the power of the Court of Session to take cognizance of an offence as a Court of original jurisdiction gets lifted. On the Magistrate committing the case under Section 209 to the Court of Session the bar of Section 193 is lifted thereby investing the Court of Session complete and unfettered jurisdiction of the Court of original jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence which would include the summoning of the person or persons whose complicity in the commission of the crime can prima facie be gathered from the material available on record. Nisar v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1995 SCC (Cri) 306 : (1995) 2 SCC 23 : 1995 CrLJ 2118 : 1994 (3) Crimes 871.

[7142] ● Supplementary charge-sheet—Power to take cognizance not controlled by investigating agency.—Merely because the prosecution had filed an application, after submission of charge-sheet seeking permission to file supplementary charge-sheet it could not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance, if he was otherwise satisfied that the cognizance was required to be taken. It is the jurisdiction of a Magistrate and Magistrate alone to decide whether the material placed by the prosecution with the report (charge-sheet) was sufficient to take cognizance or not. The power of the Magistrate to take cognizance cannot be controlled by the investigating agency, whose duty is only to investigate and place the facts and the evidence before the Magistrate. We cannot persuade ourselves to accept the view of the High Court that if the Investigating Officer terms a Police report as "incomplete", it takes away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence even if in the opinion of the Magistrate, the material is sufficient for him to be satisfied that it was a fit case for him to take cognizance of the offence. The Magistrate is not bound by the level given to the report of the charge-sheet by the Investigating Officer and it is for him to decide whether the report and the material on which it is based, is sufficient for him to take cognizance or not. State of Maharashtra v. Sharadchandra Vinayak Dongre, AIR 1995 SC 231 : (1995) 1 SCC 42 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1995 CrLR (SC) 114.

[7143] ● Sanction for prosecution of M.L.A.—Assuming, therefore, that the MLA is a public servant within the meaning of Section 2(c) (viii) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 in view of said proposition of law laid down in R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, AIR 1984 SC 684, it can be said that sanction under Section 199, CrPC, 1973 is necessary. Habibulla Khan v. State of Orissa, AIR 1995 SC 1124 : (1995) 2 SCC 437 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 382 (385, 387) : 1995 CrLJ 2071.

[7144] ● No sanction required when public servant retires.—...a Constitution Bench in Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655, while construing the provisions of the same Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 held that no sanction under Section 6 of that Act was necessary for prosecution of the appellant in that case since he had retired from service on attaining the age of superannuation and was not a public servant on the date of filing the charge-sheet. Habibulla Khan v. State of Orissa, AIR 1995 SC 1124 : (1995) 2 SCC 437 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 382 : 1995 CrLJ 2071.

[7145] ● "Taking cognizance" is different from "initiation of proceedings".—Section 190 of the CrPC talks of cognizance of offences by Magistrates. This expression has not been defined in the Code. In its broad and literal sense, it means taking notice of an offence. This would include the intention of initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of that offence or taking steps to see whether there is any basis for initiating judicial proceedings or for other purposes. The word "cognizance" indicates the point when a Magistrate or a Judge first takes judicial notice of an offence. It is entirely a different thing from initiation of proceedings; rather it is the condition precedent to the initiation of proceedings by the Magistrate or the Judge. Cognizance is taken of cases and not of persons

State of West Bengal v. Mohammed Khalid, AIR 1995 SC 785 : (1995) 1 SCC 684 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 266.

[7146] ● Cognizance defined.—Cognizance is defined in WHARTON'S LAW LEXICON, 14th Edition at page 209, It reads as follows:

> "Cognizance (Judicial), knowledge upon which a Judge is bound to act without having it proved in evidence: as the public statutes of the realm, the ancient history of the realm, the order and course of proceedings in Parliament, the privileges of the House of Commons, the existence of war with a foreign State, the several seals of the King, the Supreme Court and its jurisdiction, and many other things. A Judge is not bound to take cognizance of current events, however notorious, nor of the law of other countries." State of West Bengal v. Mohammed Khalid, AIR 1995 SC 785 : (1995) 1 SCC 684 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 266.

[7147] ● Reasoned order.—Court is not required to pass a reasoned order. State of West Bengal v. Mohammed Khalid, AIR 1995 SC 785 : (1995) 1 SCC 684 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 266 (294).

[7148] ● Power to summon additional accused.—The power under Section 319(1), CrPC can be exercised only in those cases where involvement of persons other than those arraigned in the charge-sheet comes to light in the course of evidence recorded during the enquiry or trial. As that stage had not yet reached in the present case, the appellants could not have been summoned invoking Section 319 of the CrPC. Nisar v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1995) 2 SCC 23 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 306 : 1995 CrLJ 2118.

[7149] ● Court to consider police report and other materials on record.—In Satya Narain Musadi v. State of Bihar, (1980) 3 SCC 152 (See at pages 157-158, para 10, it was held as under) :

> "The report as envisaged by Section 173(2) has to be accompanied as required by sub-section (5) by all the documents and statements of the witnesses therein mentioned. One cannot divorce the details which the report must contain as required by sub-section (5) from its accompaniments which are required to be submitted under sub-section (5). The whole of it is submitted as a report to the Court. But even if a narrow construction is adopted that the police report can only be what is prescribed in Section 173(2), there would be sufficient compliance if what is required to be mentioned by the statute has been set down in the repot. To say that all the details of the offence must be set out in report under Section 173(2) submitted by the Police officer would be expecting him to do something more than what Parliament has expected him to set out therein. If the report with sufficient particularity and clarity specifies the contravention of the law which is the alleged offence, it would be sufficient compliance with Section 11...." State of West Bengal v. Mohammed Khalid, AIR 1995 SC 785 : (1995) 1 SCC 684 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 266.

[7150] ● When Magistrate takes judicial notice of offence.—In view of the above findings the Court while taking cognizance of offence can take into consideration not only police report but also other materials on record. State of West Bengal v. Mohammed Khalid, AIR 1995 SC 785 : (1995) 1 SCC 684 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 266.

[7151] ● When Magistrate takes judicial notice of offence.—The word "cognizance" has not been defined in the Criminal Procedure Code. But it is now settled law that the Court takes cognizance of the offence and not the offender. As soon as the Magistrate applies his judicial mind to the offence stated in the complaint or the Police report, etc., cognizance is said to be taken. Cognizance of the offence takes place when the Magistrate takes judicial notice of the offence. Whether the Magistrate has taken cognizance of offence on a complaint or on a Police report or upon information of a person other than the Police Officer, depends upon further (sic) taken pursuant thereto and the attending circumstances of the particular case including the mode in which case is sought to be dealt with or the nature of the action taken by the Magistrate. Anil Saran v. State of Bihar, AIR 1996 SC 204 : (1995) 6 SCC 142 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1051 : 1996 CrLJ 408 : (1995) 3 Crimes 740.

[7152] ● Court to prima facie consider averments in charge-sheet.—"After the investigation is conducted and the charge-sheet is laid the prosecution produces the statements of the witnesses recorded under Section 161 of the Code in support of the charge-sheet. At that stage, it is not the function of the Court to weigh the pros and cons of the prosecution case or to consider necessity of strict compliance of the provisions which are considered mandatory and its effect of non-compliance. It would be done after the trial is concluded. The Court has to prima facie consider from the averment in the charge-sheet and the statements of witnesses on the record in support thereof whether Court could take cognizance of the offence, on that evidence and proceed further with the trial. If it reaches a conclusion that no cognizable offence is made out, no further act could be done except to quash the charge-sheet. But only in exceptional cases, i.e., in rarest of rare cases of mala fide, initiation of the proceedings to wreak private vengeance, process of criminal is availed of in lying a complaint or FIR itself does not disclose at all any cognizable offence—the Court may embark upon the consideration thereof and exercise the power." State of Uttar Pradesh v. Pirthi Chand, AIR 1996 SC 977 (980) : (1996) 2 SCC 37 : 1996 CrLJ 1354 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 210 : JT 1995 (9) SC 411.

[7153] ● Case received by transfer, Magistrate not denuded of his power to take cognizance.—Sub-section. (1) of Section 192, CrPC has conferred a special power on the Chief Judicial Magistrate, as, normally, the Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence, has himself to proceed further as enjoined by the Criminal Procedure Code. But, an exception has been made in the case of Chief Judicial Magistrate, may be because he has some administrative functions also to perform. A Magistrate who receives the case on transfer and takes cognizance would not become incompetent to do so merely because the sanction of transfer of the case to his file is not in accordance with law. The power to take cognizance has been conferred on a Magistrate by Section 190(1) of the CrPC, and he would not be denuded of this power because the case has come to his file pursuant to some illegal order of the Chief Judicial Magistrate. The former would be exercising his power of taking cognizance even in such a case, because of his having received a complaint constituting the offence. It would not be material, for this purpose, as to how he came to receive the complaint—Directly or on transfer from the Chief Judicial Magistrate. Anil Saran v. State of Bihar, AIR 1996 SC 204 : (1995) 6 SCC 742 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1951 : 1996 CrLJ 408 : JT 1995 (6) SC 428 : (1995) 3 Crimes 740.

[7154] ● Judicial discretion at the time of taking cognizance.—Since at the time of taking cognizance, he Court has to exercise its judicial discretion, it necessarily follows that if in a given case, as the present one, - the complainant, as the person aggrieved, raises objections to the acceptance of a Police report which recommends discharge of the accused and seeks to satisfy the Court that a case for taking cognizance was made out, but the Court overrules such objections, it is just and desirable that the reasons therefore be recorded. Necessity to give reasons which disclose proper appreciation of the issues before the Court needs no emphasis. Reasons introduce clarity and minimise chances of arbitrariness. That necessarily means that recording of reasons will not be necessary when the Court accepts such Police report without any demur from the complainant. As the order of the learned Magistrate in the instant case does not contain any reason whatsoever, even though it was passed after hearing the objections of the complainant, it has got to be set aside and it is hereby set aside. Consequent thereupon two courses are open to direct the learned Magistrate to hear the parties afresh. In the question of acceptance of the prime report and pass a reasoned order or to decide for ourselves whether it is a fit case for taking cognizance under Section 190(1)(b), CrPC. Rupan Deol Bajaj v. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, AIR 1996 SC 309 (316) : (1995) 6 SCC 194 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1059 : 1996 CrLJ 381 : JT 1995 (7) SC 604 (2) : (1995) 4 Crimes 171.

[7155] ● Person auithorised by appropriate Government to file complaint.—The provisions of Section 24 of the Industrial Disputes Act require that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under the said Act or of the abetment of such offence save on a complaint made by the appropriate Government or under the authority of the appropriate Government. There is not limitation therein in regard to the party to whom the authorisation may be given. It is the workman, the trade union and the employer who are most concerned with offences under the said Act and neither the terms of Section 34 nor public policy require that they should be excluded from making such complaints. At the same time the provisions of Section 34 are in the nature of a limitation on the entitlement of a workman or a trade union or an employer to complaint of offences under the said Act. They should, not, in the public interest, be permitted to make frivolous, vexatious or otherwise patently untenable complaints, and to this end Section 34 requires that no complaint shall be taken cognizance of unless it is made with the authorisation of the appropriate Government. Section 39 empowers the appropriate Government to delegate the powers exercisable by it under the said Act. This is altogether different from the concept of authorisation to file a complaint under Section 34 of the Act. If the powers under Section 34 have been delegated under Section 39, the delegate can file the complaint himself or authorise someone else to file it, Learned Counsel's argument, if accepted, would render the words "or under the authority of" in Section 34 otiose and that is impermissible. These words necessarily must be given due meaning and the meaning is that the appropriate Government may authorise someone other than itself, even a non-Government servant, to file a complaint under Section 34. Raj Kumar Gupta v. Lt. Governor, Delhi, AIR 1997 SC 2680 (2683) : (1997) 1 SCC 556 : JT 1996 (10) SC 559.

[7156] ● Magistrate after taking cognizance cannot order further investigation.—It is not in dispute that before taking of cognizance under Section 190 (Part of Chap. XIV : Conditions Requisite for Initiation of Proceedings), The Magistrate may himself order investigations, as contemplated by sub-section (3) of Section 156 of the CrPC. Further, in exercise of power under Section 311 finding place in Chap. XXIV (General Provisions as to Enquiries and Trials), the Court may at any stage of an inquiry, trial or other proceedings under the Code summon any person as a witness if his evidence appears to be essential to the just decision of the case. But in the present appeal the learned Magistrate ordered for further investigation after the appellant had made his appearance and the case was otherwise ready for considering the question whether charge should be framed or appellant should be discharged.

The Code has compartmentalised the powers to be exercised at different stages of case, namely, at the time of cognizance after cognizance is taken, after appearance of the accused and after commencement of trial on charge being framed. The power of further investigation undoubtedly, exists in the first stage, may exist as the second and Section 311, CrPC permits to examine any witness during the course of trial. But at the third (intermediate) stage, this power has not been conferred on a Court. All that has to be done at that stage is to look into the materials already on record and either frame charge, if prima facie case is made out or discharge the accused. Randhir Singh Rana v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1997 SC 639 : (1997) 1 SCC 361 : 1997 CrLJ 779 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 378.

[7157] ● Cognizance of offence by Designated Court after application of mind.—It is seen that the order dated 18-7-1991 of the Designated Court unmistakably shows that after receipt of the case file on assignment from the Sessions Judge, the material was perused by the Designated Court itself and a prima facie case under Section 5 of TADA Act was found to have been made out. The cognizance was, thus, taken by the Designated Court on the basis of a complaint of facts, which disclosed the commission of an offence under Section 5 of TADA Act and the order dated 7-2-1991 read with order dated 18-7-1991 shows that the Designated Court applied its mind to the material on the record and then took cognizance. Karan Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1997 SC 1508 (1510) : (1996) 11 SCC 274 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 81 : 1997 CrLJ 736 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 123 : JT 1996 (9) SC 335.

[7158] ● Cognizance without proper sanction of government.—During the inquiry under Section 202 it has come on record that an offence was registered against the complainant on 30-3-82 and respondent No. 2 had obtained a warrant for the arrest of the complainant and search of his premises. Admittedly, the raid was carried out under the supervision of Shri J.C. Das an Executive Magistrate who was deputed by the District Magistrate to supervise the raid, on a request made to that effect by respondent No. 2. The evidence further shows that proper lists regarding search and seizure were made and copies thereof were given to Nagendra. No complaint of any type was made by anyone to Shri J.C. Das who was supervising the acts of respondents Nos. 2 to 4. All this evidence could not have been ignored by the learned Magistrate and the High Court was; therefore, clearly wrong in holding that the learned Magistrate should have considered only the allegations made in complaint to find out whether the alleged acts were committed by respondents 2 to 4 while discharging or purporting to discharge their duties.

Thus the material collected during the inquiry discloses that material facts were suppressed by the complainant and some of the allegations made in the complaint were not correct. The High Court failed to appreciate that the search was made by respondents 2 to 4 after obtaining a warrant from the competent authority and the Executive Magistrate was kept present to supervise the raid. No complaint whatsoever was made to him regarding nay misbehaviour or the illegal acts now alleged in the complaint. Surprisingly the complainant who had returned to his house while the search was being made, did not enter his house upon knowing that the police were conducting a search and quietly went away from that place.

As the search was made by respondents 2 to 4 after obtaining a proper warrant for that purpose and as there is no credible material to show that they had either abused or assaulted the wife of the complainant or any other person what they had done appears to have been done while discharging or purporting to discharge their duty. Therefore, no cognizance of the alleged offences could be taken without a proper sanction of the Government. State of Bihar v. Kamla Prasad Singh, AIR 1998 SC 2379 : (1998) 5 SCC 690 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1374 : 1998 CrLJ 3601 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 470 : 1998 (3) Crimes 31.

[7159] ● State appeal against order of acquittal.—The cognizance in the instant case was taken upon a police report under Section 190(1)(b), CrPC. Resultantly, it was the State alone who could file an appeal in the High Court against the order of acquittal under Section 378(1), CrPC after obtaining leave under sub-section (3) thereof—and not the complainant who could only file an application under Section 401, CrPC for revision of that order. The High Court, therefore was not at all justified in entertaining the appeal of the complainant and disposing the same in the manner aforesaid. On this score alone, we allow this appeal and restore the order of the trial Court. The High Court will now treat the memorandum of appeal filed by the complainant as an application for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, qua the two appellants only, and dispose of the same in accordance with law. Jagbir v. State of Punjab, AIR 1998 SC 3130 : (1998) 6 SCC 629 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1524 : 1998 CrLJ 4588 : 1998 (3) Crimes 244.

[7160] ● Time limit for taking cognizance.—As the offence under Section 7(1)(a)(ii) of the Essential Commodities Act is punishable with imprisonment up to 7 years, the offence would not attract the bar of limitation under Section 468 of the CrPC. Nirmal Kanti Roy v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1998 SC 2322 (2327) : (1998) 4 SCC 590 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1100 : 1998 CrLJ 3282 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 573 : JT 1998 (3) SC 436 : (1998) 2 Crimes 267.

[7161] ● Limitation for filing complaint.—Clause (c) of Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the starting date is the date of "the receipt of the said notice". Once it starts, the offence is completed on the failure to pay the amount within 15 days therefrom. Cause of action would arise if the offence is committed. If a different interpretation is given the absolute interdict incorporated in Section 142 of the Act that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence unless the complaint is made within one month of the date on which the cause of action arises, would become otiose. SIL Import USA v. Exim Aides Silk Exporters, Bangalore, AIR 1999 SC 1609 : (1999) 4 SCC 567 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 600 : 1999 CrLJ 2276 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 317 : JT 1999 (3) SC 325.

[7162] ● Power of Magistrate taking cognizance not impaired by territorial restrictions.—It is an erroneous view that the Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence must necessarily have territorial jurisdiction to try the case as well. Chapter XIII of the Code relates to jurisdiction of the criminal Courts "in enquiries and trials." That chapter contains provisions regarding the place where the enquiry and trial are to take place. Section 177 says that "every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within whose local jurisdiction it was committed." But Section 179 says that when an act is an offence by reason of anything which has been done and of a consequence which has ensued, the place of enquiry and trial can as well be in a Court "within whose local jurisdiction such thing has been done or such consequence has ensued". It cannot be overlooked that the said provisions do not trammel the powers of any Court to take cognizance of the offence. Power of the Court to take cognizance of the offence is laid in Section 190 of the Code. Section 193 imposes a restriction on the Court of Session to take cognizance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction. But "any" Magistrate of the first class has the power to take cognizance of any offence, no matter that the offence was committed within his jurisdiction or not.

The only restriction contained in Section 190 is that the power to take cognizance is "subject to the provisions of this Chapter." There are 9 Sections in Chapter XIV most of which contain one or other restriction imposed on the power of a first class Magistrate in taking cognizance of an offence. But none of them incorporates any curtailment on such powers in relation to territorial barrier. In the corresponding provision in the old Code of Criminal Procedure (1898) the commencing words were like these : "Except as hereinafter provided." Those words are now replaced by "Subject to the provisions of this chapter." Therefore, when there is nothing in chapter XIV of the Code to impair the power of a judicial Magistrate of first class taking cognizance of the offence on the strength of any territorial reason it is impermissible to deprive such a magistrate of the power to take cognizance of an offence of course, in certain special enactments special provisions are incorporated for restricting the power of taking cognizance of offences falling under such acts. But such provisions are protected by non obstante clauses. Any way that is a different matter. The jurisdictional aspect becomes relevant only when the question of enquiry or trial arises. It is therefore a fallacious thinking that only a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case has the power to take cognizance of the offence. If he is a Magistrate of the First Class his power to take cognizance of the offence is not impaired by territorial restrictions. After taking cognizance he may have to decide as to the Court which has jurisdiction to enquire into or try the offence and that situation would reach only during the post cognizance stage and not earlier. Trisuns Chemi- cal Industry v. Rajesh Agarwal, AIR 1999 (SC) 3499 : 1999 (8) SCC 686 : 1999 CrLJ 4325 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 677.

[7163] ● Mere presentation of complaint does not mean taking cognizance.—Mere presentation of the complaint in the Court cannot be held to mean that its cognizance had been taken by the Magistrate. If the complaint is found to be premature, it can await maturity or be returned to the complainant for filing later and its mere presentation at an earlier date need not necessarily render the complaint liable to be dismissed or confer any right upon the accused to absolve himself from the criminal liability for the offence committed. Narsingh Das Tapadia v. Goverdhan Das Partani, AIR 2000 SC 2946 : (2000) 7 SCC 183 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1326 : (2000) 4 Crimes 12 (SC).

[7164] ● Limitation for taking cognizance.—The language of sub-section (3) of Section 468, CrPC makes it imperative that the limitation provided for taking cognizance in Section 468 is in respect of the offence charged and not in respect of offence finally proved. This being the position, in the case in hand, when the respondents were charged under Section 468 read with Section 120-B, for which the imposable punishment is seven years and Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, which is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years and for such offences no period of limitation having been provided for in Section 468, the cognizance taken by the learned Special Judge cannot be said to be barred by limitation. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Tara Dutt, AIR 2000 SC 297 : (2000) 1 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 125 (128) : 2000 CrLJ 485 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 156.

[7165] ● Power of criminal Court to continue with proceedings.—"We see no provision under the Reserve Bank of India Act which prohibits any criminal proceeding to be continued. The provision of Section 58-E bars taking cognizance of offence committed under the said Act, namely, Reserve Bank of India Act. The power of Company Law Board under Section 45-QA of the reserve Bank of India Act, as amended, does not in any way take away the power of the Criminal Court to continue with the criminal proceedings." Prudential Capital Mkt. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 3668 (3669) : (2000) 9 SCC 539 : 2001 CrLJ 121.

[7166] ● Cognizance by condoning delay.—Section 473, CrPC confers power on the Court taking cognizance after the expiry of the period of limitation, if it is satisfied on the facts and in the circumstances of the case that the delay has been properly explained and that it is necessary so to do in the interest of justice. Obviously, therefore, in respect of the offences for which a period of limitation has been provided in Section 468, the power has been conferred on the Court taking cognizance to extend the said period of limitation where a proper and satisfactory explanation of the delay is available and where the Court taking cognizance finds that it would be in the interest of justice. This discretion conferred on the Court has to be exercised judicially and on well recognised principles. This being a discretion conferred on the Court taking cognizance, wherever the Court exercises this discretion, the same must be by a speaking order, indicating the satisfaction of the Court that the delay was satisfactorily explained and condonation of the same was in the interest of justice. In the absence of a positive order to that effect, it may not be permissible for a superior Court to come to the conclusion that the Court must be deemed to have taken cognizance by condoning the delay whenever the cognizance was barred and yet the Court took cognizance and proceeded with the trial of the offence. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Tara Dutt, AIR 2000 SC 297 : (2000) 1 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 125 (128, 129) : 2000 CrLJ 485 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 156.

[7167] ● Conviction for minor offences.—But the provisions are of no application to the case in hand since for the offences so charged, no period of limitation has been provided in view of the imposable punishment thereunder. In this view of the matter, the High Court committed serious error in holding that the conviction of the two respondents under Section 417 would be barred as on the date of taking cognizance the Court could not have taken cognizance of the said offence. Needless to mention, it is well settled by a catena of decisions of this Court that if an accused is charged with a major offence but is not found guilty thereunder, he can be convicted of a minor offence if the facts of the case indicate that such minor offence has been committed. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Tara Dutt, AIR 2000 SC 257 : (2000) 1 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 125 (128, 129) : 2000 CrLJ 485 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 156.

[7168] ● Word "Any offence" not restricted to offences specified in State Act.—The words "any offence" mentioned in sub-section (3) of Section 64, of the Kerala Police Act, 1960 indicate that the provision is not restricted to the offences specified in the Kerala Police Act, 1960. It is advantageous in this context to refer to Section 2(n) of the Code which is the definition for the word "offence". It means "any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force". Even otherwise there is nothing in Section 64(3) of the Kerala Police Act which would warrant a construction that the ban therein is intended only with reference to the offences mentioned in that Act. P.P. Unnikrishnan v. Puthyattil Alikutty, AIR 2000 SC 2952 : (2000) 8 SCC 131 : 2000 CrLJ 4041 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1460 (1465) : 2000 CrLR (SC) 672.

[7169] ● Previous sanction of competent authority pre-condition for taking cognizance.—On a plain reading of the provisions of Section 197, CrPC it is crystal clear that the Court is prohibited from taking cognizance of the offence except with the previous sanction of the competent authority.

Previous sanction of the competent authority being a pre-condition for the Court in taking cognizance of the offence, if the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused can be said to be an act in discharge of his official duty, the question touches the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in the matter of taking cognizance, and, therefore, there is no requirement that an accused should wait for taking such plea till the charges are framed. The decision of this Court in Birendra K. Singh's case, JT 2000 (8) SC 248 does not laydown the correct law by directing that the objection on the question of sanction can be raised at the stage of framing of charge and not at any prior point of time. Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500 : 2000 CrLJ 4631 : 2000 (4) Crimes 152 (SC).

[7170] ● Court can take cognizance if ingredients of offence fulfilled.—Unless all the ingredients set out in Section 182, IPC are established by evidence, the offence cannot be treated to have been committed. In order to ascertain whether the petitioner had committed any offence under Section 182, IPC, it is necessary to find out whether all the ingredients constituting an offence under that section have been proved or not. The petitioner had only filed a complaint under Section 156(3), CrPC, before the Court of Special Sessions Judge, Farrukhabad. It is still to be investigated and found out by that Court whether the complaint lodged before that Court was false and had been made with the necessary intention or knowledge to induce the Court to exercise its lawful power so as to cause injury to respondents 3-6. Once those ingredients are established and the charge is found to have been proved, then alone the Court can take cognizance of that offence and proceed further. Subhash Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2000) 9 SCC 356 : JT 2000 (2) SC 26.

[7171] ● Taking cognizance distinguished from filing complaint.—Taking cognizance of an offence by the Court has to be distinguished from the filing of the complaint by the complainant. Taking cognizance would mean the action taken by the Court for initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of the offence regarding which the complaint is filed. Before it can be said that any Magistrate or Court has taken cognizance of an offence, it must be shown that he has applied his mind to the facts for the purpose of proceeding further in the matter at the instance of the complainant. If the Magistrate or the Court is shown to have applied his mind not for the purpose of taking action upon the complaint but for taking some other kind of action contemplated under Code of Criminal Procedure, such as ordering investigation under Section 156(3) or issuing a search warrant, he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence. Narsingh Das Tapadia v. Goverdhan Das Partani, AIR 2000 SC 2946 : (2000) 7 SCC 183 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1326 : (2000) 4 Crimes 12 (SC).

[7172] ● Cognizance taken in absence of sanction bad in law.—In the instant case the appellant Duty Magistrate, was directed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to be present with Police force and remove the encroachment in question. In course of discharge of his duty to control the mob, he directed for opening of fire. The order of opening of fire was in exercise of the power conferred upon him and the duty imposed upon him under the orders of the Magistrate. The provisions of Section 197(1). CrPC applies to the facts of the present case. In the absence of sanction, the cognizance taken by the Magistrate is bad in law and unless the same is quashed qua the appellant, it will be an abuse of the process of Court. Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500 : 2000 CrLJ 4631 : 2000 (4) Crimes 152 (SC).

[7173] ● Sufficient ground to proceed against accused.—In case of a complaint under Section 200, CrPC or IPC, a Magistrate can take cognizance of the offence made out and then has to examine the complainant and his witnesses, if any, to ascertain whether a prima facie case is made out against the accused to issue process so that the issue of process is prevented on a complaint which is either false or vexatious or intended only to harass. Such examination is provided in order to find out whether there is or not sufficient ground for proceeding. The words "sufficient ground" used under Section 202 have to be construed to mean the satisfaction that a prima facie case is made out against the accused and not sufficient ground for the purpose of conviction. S.N. Palanitkar v. State of Bihar, AIR 2001 SC 2960 (2963) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 751 : 2001 Cr App R .

[7174] ● Order directing Magistrate to take cognizance without meaning accused quashed.—In the instant case, the appellant is before this Court against an order of the learned single judge of Rajasthan High Court dated 6.11.1997 directing that the cognizance should be taken for the offence committed under Section 307, IPC which was passed even without hearing the accused. It transpires from the records of the case that against the order of the Magistrate not taking cognizance under Section 307, IPC, the State of Rajasthan had moved the High Court in Criminal M.P. No. 184/96 and the application was dismissed by order dated 21.11.1996 on coming to the conclusion that the Public Prosecutor has not been able to point out any prima facie evidence to show that a case under Section 307, IPC was made out.

We fail to understand, after the aforesaid order without even noticing the accused, how the High Court could pass the impugned order directing the Magistrate to take cognizance for the offence punishable under Section 307, IPC. In the facts and circumstances of the present case, without expressing any opinion on the merits of the matter, we are quashing the impugned order of the High Court since the same has been passed without even hearing the accused, and remit the matter to the High Court for re-disposal after giving opportunity of hearing to the parties concerned. The learned Chief Justice is requested to place this matter before a learned judge other than the judge who had passed the impugned order dated 6.11.1997. Bhagirath v. Kana Ram, 2001 CrLJ 122 (SC) : JT 2000 (7) SC 562 : 2000 (6) Supreme 640.

[7175] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance.—In the instant case, the Magistrate merely took cognizance of the offence and issued process. At this stage the question of consideration of other materials does not arise. All the statements made in the complaint as well as the statements made under Section 202, CrPC if taken on its face value, an offence can be said to have been made out. There is no error in taking cognizance of the offence. It would be open to the accused while framing charge to argue as to whether the materials do permit frame of charge in the case in hand. Ajay Mehra v. Durgesh Babu, JT 2001 (5) SC 552 : 2001 (3) Crimes 155 (SC) : 2001 (4) Supreme 427.

[7176] ● S. 319, CrPC comes into operation at the stage of enquiry of trial of offence.—At the stage of taking cognizance of the offence, provisions of Section 190, CrPC would be applicable. As per this provision, the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence and not the offender. After taking cognizance of the offence, the Magistrate under Section 204, CrPC is empowered to issue process to the accused. At the stage of issuing process, it is for the Magistrate to decide whether process should be issued against particular person/persons named in the charge-sheet and also not named therein. For that purpose, he is required to consider the FIR and the statements recorded by the Police Officer and other documents tendered alongwith charge-sheet. Further, upon receipt of Police report under Section 173(2), CrPC, the Magistrate is entitled to take cognizance of an offence under Section 190(1)(b) even if the Police report is to the effect that no case is made out against the accused by ignoring the conclusion arrived at by the Investigating Officer and independently applying his mind to the facts emerging from the investigation by taking into account the statement of the witnesses examined by the Police. At this stage, there is no question of application of Section 319, CrPC. Therefore there is no question of referring to the provisions of Section 319, CrPC. That provision would come into operation in the course of any enquiry into or trial of an offence. In the present case neither the Magistrate was holding enquiry nor the trial had started. There is no bar under Section 190, CrPC that once the process is issued against some accused, on the next date, the Magistrate cannot issue process to some other persons against whom there is some material on record, but his name is not included as accused in the charge-sheet. SWIL Ltd. v. State of Delhi, AIR 2001 SC 2747 : (2001) 6 SCC 670 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1205 : 2001 (4) Crimes 124 (SC) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 844 : JT 2001 (6) SC 405.

[7177] ● Cognizance of offence, not the offender.—Under Section 190, CrPC, a Magistrate has jurisdiction to take cognizance of offences against such persons also who have not been arrested by the Police as accused-person, if it appears from the evidence collected by the Police that they were prima facie guilty of offence alleged to have been committed. Section 209 of the Code prescribes that when in a case instituted on a Police report or otherwise, the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate and it appears to the Magistrate that the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session he shall commit, after compliance with the provisions of Section 207 or Section 209, as the case may be, the case to the Court of Session and subject to the provisions of the Code, pass appropriate orders

This section refers back to Section 190, as is evident from the words "instituted on a Police report" used in Section 190(1)(b) of the Code. Cognizance taken by the Magistrate is of the offence and not of offenders. Having taken cognizance of the offence a Magistrate can find out who the real offenders are and if he comes to the conclusion that apart from the report sent by the Police some other persons are also involved, it is his duty to proceed against these persons as well. Rajinder Prasad v. Bashir, (2001) 8 SCC 522 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 28 : 2002 CrLJ 90.

[7178] ● Bar under S. 197, CrPC is mandatory.—Bar under Section 197, CrPC is mandatory where the act has been done by the public servant in the course of his service or in the discharge of his duty. There can be no dispute with that proposition. Raj Kishore Roy v. Kamleshwar Pandey, (2002) 6 SCC 543 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1423 (1427) : 2002 CrLJ 3780.

[7179] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance on acceptance of final report.—It is well settled when Police after investigation files a final form under Section 173 of the CrPC, the Magistrate may disagree with the conclusion arrived at by the Police and take cognizance in exercise of power under Section 190 of the Code. The Magistrate may not take cognizance and direct further investigation in the matter under Section 156 of the Code. Where the Magistrate accepts the final form submitted by the Police, the right of the complainant to file a regular complaint is not taken away and in fact on such a complaint being filed the Magistrate follows the procedure under Section 201 of the CrPC and takes cognizance if the materials produced by the complainant make out an offence. The acceptance of final from does not debar the Magistrate from taking cognizance on the basis of the materials produced in a complaint proceeding. Kishore Kumar Gyanchandani v. G.D. Mehrotra, AIR 2002 SC 483 : 2001 Supp (2) 386 : (2001) 3 Crimes 205.

[7180] ● Question of sanction left open to be decided on conclusion of trial.—In the case of P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234 it has been held that the legislative mandate engrafted in sub-section (1) of Section 197 is a prohibition imposed by the statute from taking cognizance. It has been held that the offence alleged to have been committed must have something to do, or must be related in some manner, with the discharge of official duty. It has been held that the only point for determination is whether the act was committed in discharge of official duty. It has been held that there must be a reasonable connection between the act and the official duty. It has been held that for invoking protection under Section 197 of the Code, the acts of the accused, complained of, must be such that the same cannot be separated from the discharge of official duty, but if there was no reasonable connection between them and the performance of those duties, and the official status furnishes only the occasion or opportunity for the acts, then no sanction would be required. It has been held that if the case as put forth by the prosecution fails or the defence establishes that the act purported to be done is in discharge of duty, the proceedings will have to be dropped. It is held that the question of sanction under Section 197 of the Code can be raised any time after the cognizance; may be immediately after cognizance or framing of charge or even at the time of conclusion of trial and after conviction as well. It is held that there can be cases when it may not be possible to decide the question effectively without giving opportunity to the defence to establish that what he did was in discharge of official duty. It has been held that the claim of the accused, that the act that he did was in course of the performance of his duty, was a reasonable one and neither pretended nor fanciful, can be examined during the course of trial by giving opportunity to the defence to establish it. It has been held that in such an eventuality, the question of sanction should be left open to be decided in the main judgment which may be delivered upon conclusion of the trial. Raj Kishore Roy v. Kamleshwar Pandey, AIR 2002 SC 2861 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1423 (1427) : 2002 CrLJ 3780.

[7181] ● Effect of non-production of sanction order.—In this case, the complaint was the 1st respondent had falsely implicated the appellant and his brother in order to teach them a lesson for not paying anything to him. The complaint was that the 1st respondent had brought an illegal weapon and cartridges and falsely shown them to have been recovered from the appellant and his brother. The High Court was not right in saying that even if these facts are true then also the case would come within the purview of Section 197, CrPC. The question whether these acts were committed and/or whether the 1st respondent acted in discharge of his duties could not have been decided in this summary fashion. This is the type of case where the prosecution must be given an opportunity to establish its case by evidence and an opportunity given to the defence to establish that he had been acting in the official course of his duty. The question whether the 1st respondent acted in the course of performance of duties and/or whether the defence is pretended or fanciful can only be examined during the course of trial. In our view, in this case the question of sanction should be left open to be decided in the main judgment which may be delivered upon conclusion of trial.

Though there is considerable force in the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the Magistrate does take cognizance of the offence before committing the case to the Court of Session, still the question remains whether the sanction order is required to be produced before the Magistrate who takes cognizance in the first instance or before the Sessions Court which has exclusive jurisdiction to try the offence. Though the Sessions Court cannot take cognizance of the offence as a Court of original jurisdiction, it has to necessarily take cognizance before commencing the trial after committal. That the Sessions Court takes cognizance of the offence irrespective of the fact whether the committal Magistrate at an anterior point of time had taken cognizance of the same offence for the purpose of committal cannot be doubted. The contention with regard to non-production of the order of sanction before the Magistrate was urged for the first time in the revision filed in the High Court. Even then we could have considered this contention, if substantial relief could be granted to the petitioner or if injustice could be averted. Assuming that the petitioner is right in his contention, at best, the matter has to be sent back to the Magistrate to go through a fresh process of committal after receiving the sanction order filed by the prosecution. In any case, the matter would have to come up to the Sessions Court again. The compliance with the formality would only result in further delay in holding the trial without any corresponding advantage to the petitioner. Such a situation should not be permitted to happen while exercising the jurisdiction under Article 136, more so when the petitioner inexplicably failed to raise the objection at the earliest. Dharmesh v. State of Gujarat, 2002 SC 2784 : (2002) 6 SCC 370 : 2002 CrLJ 3573 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1327 : JT 2002 (5) SC 474 : 2002 (3) Crimes 110 (SC).

[7182] ● Applicability of S. 195(1)(b)(ii), CrPC to private complaint.—Question as to whether bar u/s 195(1)(b)(ii) would apply as against a private complaint for an offence u/ss. 467 and 471 of Penal Code even in respect of a document which was forged before it was filed into Court. Divergent views have been expressed by Supreme Court in M.S. Ahlawat v. State of Haryana, (2000) 1 SCC 278 & Sachida Nand Singh. v. State of Bihar, (1998) 2 SCC 493. In view of the apparent consistency, matter requires to be placed for consideration before a larger bench and hence the matter to be placed before the learned Chief Justice for appropriate orders. Balasubramaniam v. State, (2002) 7 SCC 649 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1812

[7183] ● Taking cognizance without recording statement of complainant.—Where a complaint is made by Deputy Chief Controller of Import and Exports, a public servant, Magistrate need not examine the complainant and witnesses. The Magistrate was fully justified in taking cognizance of offences without recording statement of complainant. Deputy Chief Controller of Imports and Exports v. Resham Lal Agarwal, AIR 2003 SC 1900 : (2003) 4 SCC 139 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 788 : 2003 CrLJ 1698 : JT 2003 (2) SC 370 : (2003) 2 Crimes 43 (SC).

[7184] ● Cognizance after lapse of prescribed period.—The bar against cognizance after the lapse of the prescribed period of limitation is laid down under Section 468, CrPC. It is within the parameters of that provision that the Court called upon to take cognizance of the offence should act. Most of the offences alleged against the respondents, viz. Sections 420, 467, 471 and 474, IPC are punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding three year and, therefore, as contended by the counsel the bar of limitation under Section 468 is not attracted. Harnam Singh v. Everest Construction Co., (2004) 6 SCC 754 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1828 (1829-30) : 2004 CrLJ 4178 : JT 2004 (8) SC 353 : (2004) 3 Crimes 284.

[7185] ● Magistrate can independently apply his mind and take cognizance.—Upon receipt of a police report under Section 173(2) a Magistrate is entitled to take cognizance of an offence under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code even if the police report is to the effect that no case is made out against the accused. The Magistrate can take into account the statements of the witnesses examined by the police during the investigation and take cognizance of the offence complained of and order the issue of process to the accused. Section 190(1)(b) does not lay down that a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence only if the investigating officer gives an opinion that the investigation has made out a case against the accused. The Magistrate can ignore the conclusion arrived at by the investigating officer and independently apply his mind to the facts emerging from the investigation and take cognizance of the case, if he thinks fit, exercise his powers under Section 190(1)(b) and direct the issue of process to the accused. The Magistrate is not bound in such a situation to follow the procedure laid down in Sections 200 and 202 of the Code for taking cognizance of a case under Section 190(1)(a) though it is open to him to act under Section 200 or Section 202 also. Gangadhar Janardhan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 404 (409).

[7186] ● Notice to informant.—In a case where the Magistrate to whom a report is forwarded under sub-section (2)(i) of Section 173 decides not to take cognizance of the offence and to drop the proceeding or takes the view that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the persons mentioned in the first information report, the Magistrate must give notice to the informant and provide him an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of the report. Gangadhar Janardhan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 404 (408).

[7187] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance on prima facie disclosure of offence.—When the information is laid with the police, but no action in that behalf is taken, the complainant is given power under Section 190 read with Section 200 of the Code to lay the complaint before the Magistrate having jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence and the Magistrate is required to enquire into the complaint as provided in Chapter XV of the Code. In case the Magistrate after recording evidence finds a prima facie case, instead of issuing process to the accused, he is empowered to direct the police concerned to investigate into offence under Chapter XII of the Code and to submit a report. If he finds that the complaint does not disclose any offence to take further action, he is empowered to dismiss the complaint under Section 203 of the Code. In case he finds that the complaint/evidence recorded prima facie discloses an offence, he is empowered to take cognizance of the offence and would issue process to the accused. Gangadhar Janardhan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 404 (410).

[7188] ● Absence of words "cognizance taken" in order make no difference.—In the instant case, the appellant had filed a detailed complaint before the Magistrate. The record shows that the Magistrate took cognizance and fixed the matter for recording of the statement of the complainant on 1.6.2000. Even if assumed though that is not the case, that the words "cognizance taken" were not to be found in the order recorded by him on that date, that would make no difference. Cognizance is taken of the offence and not of the offender and, therefore, once the Court on perusal of the complaint is satisfied that the complaint discloses the commission of an offence and there is no reason to reject the complaint at that stage, and proceeds further in the matter, it must be held to have taken cognizance of the offence. CREF Finance Ltd. v. Shree Shanthi Homes (P.) Ltd., 2005 AIR SCW 5162 : (2005) 7 SCC 467 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1697 (1701) : 2005 CrLJ 4524 : 2005 (3) Crimes 256.

[7189] ● Words "after taking cognizance" in Section 18, TADA Act.—The contention that the words "after taking cognizance" employed in Section 18 of the TADA Act do not include any stage of trial including the stage when the judgment is to be delivered is misconceived. The Legislature deliberately has used the words "after taking cognizance of any offence" to mean that Section 18 would be attracted only at the stage where the Designated Court takes cognizance of offence i.e. after the investigation is complete and charge-sheet is filed. The provisions of Section 209, CrPC are not in pari materia with Section 18 of TADA Act. In Section 209, CrPC the words "after taking cognizance" are absent conspicuously. Section 18 is a filtered provision. The Section is attracted only at a stage the Designated Court takes cognizance of the offence. The Designated Court is expected to scan the documents and evidence collected therewith, if the Designated Court is of opinion that the offence is not triable by it, it shall, then notwithstanding that it has no jurisdiction to try such offence, transfer the case for the trial of such offence to any Court having jurisdiction under the Code and the Court to which the case is transferred may proceed with the trial of the offence as if it had taken cognizance of the offence. There is no ambiguity in the language used in Section 18. Prakash Kumar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2005 SC 1075 : 2005 CrLJ 929 (943) : 2005 (1) Crimes 163 : (2005) 2 SCC 409.

[7190] ● Taking cognizance distinguished from issuance of process.—One should not confuse taking of cognizance with issuance of process. Cognizance is taken at the initial stage when the Magistrate peruses the complaint with a view to ascertain whether the commission of any offence is disclosed. The issuance of process is at a later stage when after considering the material placed before it, the Court decides to proceed against the offenders against whom a prima facie case is made out. It is possible that a complaint may be filed against several persons, but the Magistrate may choose to issue process only against some of the accused. It may also be that after taking cognizance and examining the complainant on oath, the Court may come to the conclusion that no case is made out for issuance of process and it may reject the complaint. It may also be that having considered the complaint, the Court may consider it appropriate to send the complaint to the police for investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Many other situations may be conceived in which a Magistrate may not take cognizance at all, for instance, a case where he finds that the complaint is not made by the person who in law can lodge the complaint, or that the complaint is not entertainable by that Court, or that cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed cannot be taken without the sanction of the competent authority, etc. These are cases where the Magistrate will refuse to take cognizance and return the complaint to the complainant. But if he does not do so and proceeds to examine the complainant and such other evidence as the complainant may produce before him then, it should be held to have taken cognizance of the offence and proceeded with the inquiry. In the facts and circumstances of this case, the High Court erred in holding that the Magistrate had not taken cognizance, and that being a condition precedent, issuance of process was illegal. CREF Finance Ltd. v. Shree Shanthee Homes (P.) Ltd., 2005 AIR SCW 5162 : (2005) 7 SCC 467 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1697 (1701) : 2005 CrLJ 4524 : 2005 (3) Crimes 256.

[7191] ● Cognizance of offence taken by Magistrate without referring matter to Police under Section 156(3), CrPC.—In the instant case the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the offence without referring the matter to the police under Section 156(3). Held, the Magistrate after examining the complaint or oath. Came to the conclusion, prima facie, that an offence was made out. Since the Magistrate had exercised his power to take cognizance, the same could not be faulted on the ground that he had not refused the matter to the police for investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ram Swarup v. Mohd. Javed Razack, AIR 2005 SC 2005 : (2005) 10 SCC 393 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1549 (1550) : 2005 CrLJ 1725 : 2005 (1) Crimes 345.

[7192] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance when the police report is to the effect that no case is made out.—Upon receipt of a police report under Section 173(2) a Magistrate is entitled to take cognizance of an offence under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code even if the police report is to the effect that no case is made out against the accused. The Magistrate can take into account the statements of the witnesses examined by the police during the investigation and take cognizance of the offence complained of and order the issue of process to the accused.

The Magistrate is not bound in such a situation to follow the procedure laid down in Sections 200 and 202 of the Code for taking cognizance of a case under Section 190(1)(a) though it is open to him to act under Section 200 or 2002 also. Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, AIR 2006 SC 1937 : (2006) 4 SCC 359 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 310 (314-15) : 2006 CrLJ 2468 : 2006 (2) Crimes 130.

[7193] ● Power of Magistrate to take cognizance on complaint.—When the information is laid by the police, but no action in that behalf is taken, the complainant is given power under Section 190 read with Section 200 of the Code to lay the complaint before the Magistrate having jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence and the Magistrate is required to enquire into the complaint as provided in Chapter XV of the Code. In case the Magistrate after recording evidence finds a prima facie case, instead of issuing process to the accused, he is empowered to direct the police concerned to investigate into offence under Chapter XII of the Code and to submit a report. If he finds that the complaint does not disclose any offence to take further action, he is empowered to dismiss the complaint under Section 203 of the Code. In case he finds that the complaint/evidence recorded prima facie discloses an offence, he is empowered to take cognizance of the offence and would issue process to the accused. These Section 173 in terms does not refer to any notice to be given to raise any protest to the report submitted by the police. Though the notice issued under some of the Police Manuals states it to be a notice under Section 173 of the Code, there is nothing in Section 173 specifically providing for such a notice. Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, AIR 2006 SC 1937 : (2006) 4 SCC 359 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 310 (315) : 2006 CrLJ 2468 : 2006 (2) Crimes 130.

[7194] ● Order remanding accused to judicial custody—Not cognizance.—An order remand accused to judicial custody does not amount to taking cognizance of an offence. In such circumstances the provisions of Section 196(1)(a), CrPC are not applicable. State of Karnataka v. Pastor P. Raju, (2006) 6 SCC 728 : 2006 CrLJ 4045 (4148, 4049) : 2006 (3) Crimes 203.

[7195] ● Power of Magistrate to order investigation.—Any judicial Magistrate, before taking cognizance of the offence, can order investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code. If he does so, he is not to examine the complaint on oath because he was not taking cognizance of any offence therein. For the purpose of enabling the police to start investigation it is open to the Magistrate to direct the police to register an FIR. There is nothing illegal in doing so. Mohd. Yousuf v. Afaq Jahan, AIR 2006 SC 705 : 2006 (2) SCC 628 : (2006) 1 SCC 189 : 2006 CrLJ 788 (790) (SC).

[7196] ● High Court not ordinarily interfere with order taking cognizance.—High Court should not ordinarily interfere with an order taking cognizance passed by a competent Court of law except in a proper case. Musaraf Hussain Khan v. Bhageerath Engineering Ltd., AIR 2006 SC 1288 : (2006) 3 SCC 658 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 98 : 2006 CrLJ 1683.

[7197] ● Power of Magistrate—When a complaint is laid before the Magistrate of competent jurisdiction, the Magistrate is required to enquire into the complaint. If the Magistrate finds that complaint discloses no offence, he is empowered to dismiss the complaint. On finding that the complaint prima facie discloses an offence he is empowered to take cognizance and would issue process to accused. Hari Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2006 SC 2464 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 63 : 2006 CrLJ 3283 : 2006 (3) Crimes 109 (SC).

[7198] ● Investigation on direction of Magistrate.—The investigation referred to in Section 202(1), CrPC is of a limited nature. The Magistrate can direct such an investigation to be made either by a police officer or any other person. Such investigation is only for helping the Magistrate to decide whether or not there is sufficient ground for him to proceed further. This can be discerned from culminating words in Section 202 (1). Mohd. Yusuf v. Afaq Jahan, AIR 2006 SC 705 : (2006) 1 SCC 627 : 2006 CrLJ 788 (790) : 2006 (1) Crimes 81.

[7199] ● Magistrate not bound to take cognizance on police report.—At the time of framing charge, the Magistrate can consider as to what are the offences for which accused persons have to the tried. The Magistrate is not bound to take cognizance of the offences indicated in the police report. Anurag Rastogi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2007) 4 SCC 771 : 2007 CrLJ 1454 (1455) : (2007) 2 Crimes 33.

[7200] ● Accused has no right to be heard at the time of issuance of process.—There can be no quarrel with the proposition that at the time of issuance of process and taking cognizance the accused has no right to be heard. But in the facts of the instant case before the Revisional Court the appellants were heard. Further their names were indicated in the cause title.—Subha Raj v. Shankar Sarkar, (2007) 11 SCC 850 : 2007 CrLJ 4293.

[7201] ● Magistrate not bound by opinion of police.—There is certainly no obligation, on the Magistrate, to accept the report, if he does not agree with the opinion formed by the police. Under those circumstances, if he still suspects that an offence has been committed, he is entitled, notwithstanding the opinion of the police, to take cognizance, under Section 190(1)(c) of the Code. That provision, is obviously intended to secure that offences may not go unpunished and justice may be invoked even where persons individually aggrieved are unwilling or unable to prosecute, or the police, either wantonly or through bona fide error, fail to submit a report, setting out the facts constituting the offence. Therefore, a very wide power is conferred on the Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence, not only when he receives information about the commission of an offence from a third person, but also where he has knowledge or even suspicion that the offence has been committed. It is open to the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence, under Section 190(1)(c), on the ground that, after having due regard to the final report and the police records placed before him, he has reason to suspect that an offence has been committed. Therefore, these circumstances will also clearly negative the power of a Magistrate to call for a charge-sheet from the police, when they have submitted a final report. The entire scheme of Chapter XIV clearly indicates that the formation of the opinion, as to whether or not there is a case to place the accused for trial, is that of the officer in-charge of the police station and that opinion determines whether the report is to be under Section 170, being a 'charge-sheet', or under Section 169, 'a final report'. It is no doubt open to the Magistrate, as we have already pointed-out, to accept or disagree with the opinion of the police and, if he disagrees, he is entitled to adopt any one of the courses indicated by us. But he cannot direct the police to submit a charge-sheet, because, the submission of the report depends upon the opinion formed by the police, and not on the opinion of the Magistrate. The Magistrate cannot compel the police to form a particular opinion, on the investigation, and to submit a report, according to such opinion. That will be really encroaching on the sphere of the police and compelling the police to form an opinion so as to accord with the decision of the Magistrate and send a report, either under Section 169, or under Section 170, depending upon the nature of the decision. Such a function has been left to the police, under the Code." Har Prasad v. Ranveer Singh, AIR 2008 SC 1265 : (2008) 11 SCC 431 : 2008 CrLJ 1655 (1657) (SC) : (2008) 2 Crimes 5.

[7202] ● Taking cognizance of offence—Magistrate not bound by opinion of investigating officer.—One of the courses open to the Magistrate is that instead of exercising his discretion and taking cognizance of a cognizable offence and following the procedure laid down under Section 200 or Section 202 of the Code, he may order an investigation to by made by the police under Section 156(3) of the Code, which the learned Magistrate did in the instant case. When such an order is made, the police is obliged to investigate the case and submit a report under Section 173(2) of the Code. On receiving the police report, if the Magistrate is satisfied that on the facts discovered or unearthed by the police there is sufficient material for him to take cognizance of the offence, he may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code and issue process straight-way to the accused. However, Section 190(1)(b) of the Code does not lay down that a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence only if the investigating officer gives an opinion that the investigation makes out a case against the accused. Undoubtedly, the Magistrate can ignore the conclusion(s) arrived at by the investigating officer.

It is trite that the Magistrate is not bound by the opinion of the investigating officer and he is competent to exercise his discretion in his behalf, irrespective of the view expressed by the police in their report and decide whether an offence has been made out or not. This is because the purpose of the police report under Section 173(2) of the Code, which will contain the facts discovered or unearthed by the police as well as the conclusion drawn by the police therefrom is primarily to enable the Magistrate to satisfy himself whether on the basis of the report and the material referred therein, a case for cognizance is made out or not. Fakhruddin Ahmad v. State of Uttranchal, (2008) 17 SCC 157 : 2008 CrLJ 4377 (4379, 4380) (SC).

[7203] ● "Taking cognizance" Meaning.—It is well settled that before a Magistrate can be said to have taken cognizance of an offence, it is imperative that he must have taken notice of accusations and applied his mend to the allegations made in the complaint or in the police report or the information received from a source other than a police report as the occasion may be, and the material filed therewith. It is only when the Magistrate applies his mind and is satisfied that the allegations, if proved, would constitute and offence decides to indicate proceedings against the alleged offender that it can be positively stated that he has taken cognizance of the offence. Cognizance is in regard to the offence and not the offender. Fakhruddin Ahmad v. State of Uttranchal, (2008) 17 SCC 157 : 2008 CrLJ 4377 (4380) (SC).

[7204] ● Expression "Cognizance"—Meaning.—The expression "cognizance" is not defined in the Code but is a word of indefinite import. The word "cognizance" has no esoteric or mystic significance in criminal law or procedure. It merely means—"become-aware of" and when used with reference to a Court or Judge, to take notice of judicially. It indicates the point when a Court or a Magistrate takes judicial notice of an offence with a view to initiating proceedings in respect of such, offence said to have committed by someone. Taking cognizance does not involve any formal action of any kind. It occurs as soon as a Magistrate applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence. Cognizance is taken prior to commencement of criminal proceedings. Taking cognizance is thus a sine qua non or condition precedent for holding a valid trial. Cognizance is taken of an offence and not of an offender. Whether or not a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence depends on the facts and circumstances of each case and rule of universal application can be laid down as to when a Magistrate can be said to have taken cognizance. SK. Sinha, Chief Enforcement officer v. M/s Videocon International Ltd. and Co., AIR 2008 SC 1213 : (2008) 2 SCC 492 : 2008 CrLJ 1636 (1639, 1640) (SC).

[7205] ● Magistrate deciding not to take cognizance—Notice to informant is mandatory.—Where the Magistrate decides not to take cognizance and drop the proceedings or takes a view that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against some persons mentioned in the FIR, notice to informant and grant of opportunity of being heard in the matter becomes mandatory—There is no provision in the Code for issue of a notice in that regard. Sanjay Bansal v. Jawajaria Vats, AIR 2008 SC 207 : (2007) 13 SCC 71 : 2008 CrLJ 428 (430).

[7206] ● Opportunity of hearing to informant when mandatory.—The informant is not prejudicially affected when the Magistrate decides to take cognizance. But where the Magistrate decides that sufficient ground does not subsist for proceeding further and drops the proceedings or takes the view that there is material for proceeding against some and there are insufficient grounds in suspect of others, the informant would certainly be prejudiced, and notice to the informant and grant of opportunity becomes mandatory. Chittaranjan Mirdha v. Dulal Ghosh, (2009) 6 SCC 661 : 2009 CrLJ 3430 (SC) : 2009 (3) Crimes 189 (SC) : 2009 (8) SCR 412.

[7207] ● No case made out—Duty of Magistrate.—Even in a case where no offence is made out, the Magistrate must apply its mind to the contents of the charge-sheet. Such application of mind by the Magistrate is to be reflected from the order. Devendra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2009) 7 SCC 495 : 2009 (7) SCR 872.

[7208] ● Power of Magistrate.—Upon receipt of a police report under Section 173(2) CrPC, a Magistrate is entitled to take cognizance of an offence under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code even if the police report is to the effect that no case is made out against the accused. The Magistrate can take into account the statements of the witnesses examined by the police during the investigation and take cognizance of the offence complained of and order the issue of process to the accused. Chittaranjan Mirdha v. Dulal Ghosh, (2009) 6 SCC 661 : 2009 CrLJ 3430 (3432) : 2009 (3) Crimes 189 (SC).

[7209] ● Informant entitled to notice and opportunity to be heard.—The informant is entitled to a notice and an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of report. The position is different so far an injured person or a relative of the deceased, who is not an informant, is concerned. They are not entitled to any notice. Chittaranjan Mirdha v. Dulal Ghosh, (2009) 6 SCC 661 : 2009 CrLJ 3430 (3432) : 2009 (3) Crimes 189 (SC).

[7210] ● Magistrate not bound by conclusion of investigating agency.—When a report is submitted to the Magistrate he is required to be prima facie satisfied that the facts disclosed therein constitute an offence. It is trite that the Magistrate is not bound by the conclusion of the investigating agency in the police report i.e. in the charge-sheet and it is open to him after exercise of judicial discretion to take the view that the facts disclosed in the report do not constitute any offence for taking cognizance. K. Neelaveni v. State, AIR 2010 SC 3191 : 2010 CrLJ 2819 : 2010 (2) Crimes 90 (SC).

[7211] ● Section 195(a)(i), CrPC is exception to rule in Section 190 CrPC.—Section 195(a)(i) bars the Court from taking cognizance of any offence punishable under Section 188, IPC or abetment or attempt to commit the same. Unless there is a written complaint by the public servant concerned for contempt of his lawful authority. This provision has been carved out as an exception to the general rule contained in Section 190, CrPC, other provisions in the CrPC like Sections 196 and 198 do not lay down any rule of procedure, rather they only create a bar that unless some requirements are complied with, the Court shall not take cognizance of an offence described in those sections. C. Muniappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 3718 : (2010) 9 SCC 567.

[7212] ● Cognizance—Procedure to be followed by Magistrate.—On presentation of complaint the Magistrate can after examining the complaint and his witnesses or oath, take cognizance of an offence. This procedure is not required to be followed when a written complaint is made by a public servant, acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duties or when a Court has made the complaint or if the Magistrate makes over the case for inquiry/trial to another Magistrate under Section 192, CrPC. Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwari, AIR 2010 SC 2261 : (2010) 7 SCC 578 : 2010 CrLJ 3827 : 2010 (3) Crimes 188 (SC).

[7213] ● Cognizance—Scope.—Under Section 190, a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence either on receiving a complaint of facts which constitute an offence or a police report of such facts or upon receipt of information from any person other than a police officer or upon his own knowledge, that such an offence has been committed. Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwari, AIR 2010 SC 2261 : (2010) 7 SCC 578 : 2010 CrLJ 3827.

COLLECTIVE ACTION

[7214] ● Collective action vis-a-vis individual responsibility.—In the present case, the prosecution case as unfolded before the Court indicates that the riot in Delhi broke out as a result of death of Smt. Indira Gandhi and her death appears to be symbol or web around which the violent emotion were released. The death of Smt. Gandhi became a powerful symbolic image as a result of which the crowds were perpetrating violence in the height of frenzy. It is a common experience that when people congregate in crowds normal defences are lowered so that the crowd instinct assault on the sense of individuality or transcending one's individual boundaries by offering a release from inhibitions from personal doubts and anxiety. In such a situation, one can well-imagine that a member of such a group loses one's self and the normal standard or sense of judgment and reality. The primary motivational factor in the assembly of a violent mob may result in murder of several persons.

Experts in criminology often express that when there is a collective action, as in the case of a mob, there is a diminished individual responsibility unless there are special circumstances to indicate that a particular individual had acted with any predetermination such as by use of a weapon not normally found. If, however, a member of such a crowd picks up an article or a weapon which is close by and joins the mob, either on his own volition or at the instigation of the mob responding to the exhortation of the mob playing no role of leadership, we may very well say that such a person did not intend to commit all the acts which a mob would commit left to himself but did so under the influence of collective fury. Kishori v. State of Delhi, AIR 1999 SC 382 : (1999) 1 SCC 148 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1999 CrLJ 584 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 782.

COLLUSION

[7215] ● Collusion.—One of the simplest definitions of collusion was given by MR. JUSTICE BUCKNILL in Scott v. Scott, 1913 page 52, "Collusion may be proper act done or an improper refraining from doing an act, for a dishonest purpose". Thus the mere fact that the defendant agrees with the plaintiff that if a suit is brought he would not defend it, would not necessarily prove collusion. It is only if this agreement is done improperly in the sense that a dishonest purpose is intended to be achieved that they can be said to have colluded. Rupchand Gupta v. Raghuwanshi (P) Ltd., AIR 1964 SC 1889 (1891) : (1964) 7 SCR 760.

[7216] ● The word 'Collusion' means secret agreement for illegal purposes of conspiracy. Subhas Chandra Das Mushib v. Ganga Prasad Das Mushib, AIR 1967 SC 878 (881) : (1967) 1 SCR 331.

COLOURING MATTER

[7217] ● Colouring matter.—Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954.—There is no dispute that the coal-tar dye used in "patisa" sold by the appellant was not one of the coal-tar dyes permissible under Rule 28 of the Prevention of Adulteration Rules, 1955. That is also clear from the report of the Public Analyst, the correctness of which was not under any challenge before us. Jai Narain v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1972 SC 2607 : (1972) 2 SCC 637 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 52 : 1973 CrLJ 493 : 1972 CrAppR (SC) 386 : (1973) 1 SCR 923 : 1973 UJ (SC) 356.

[7218] ● Sale of adulterated food.—Though there was no express evidence on the record that the use of the particular coal-tar dye in the making of the "patisa" sold at this shop was injurious to health, it must be presumed to be so from the fact that it is not one of the permitted coal-tar dyes enumerated in Rule 28 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955. It is, therefore, clear that the sale of such an article of food was an anti-social activity, deleterious to the health of those who would consume them as article of food, the eradication of which is the principal aim of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act and in particular of Section 16 thereof. Jai Narain v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1972 SC 2607 : (1972) 2 SCC 637 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 52 : 1973 CrLJ 49 : 1972 Cr App R (SC) 386 : (1973) 1 SCR 923 : 1973 UJ (SC) 356.

[7219] ● Sale of adulterated food anti-social activity.—The evil would appear to be more pernicious when it is realised that "patisa" are more often than not purchased and consumed by children and by persons from the unaffluent sections of the society, who cannot afford to buy costlier sweets prepared by more sophisticated processes. The colouring matter was obviously used to attract customers without any regard to the injury it would cause to those who consumed them. The appellants activity being thus distinctly anti-social it would be either expedient or in consonance with the object with which the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act was passed to apply Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act. Jai Narain v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1972 SC 2607 : (1972) 2 SCC 637 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 52 (55) : 1973 CrLJ 49 : 1973 UJ (SC) 356.

[7220] ● Colour mixed with chillies.—It is true that the High Court has observed that the "colour which was mixed with powdered chillies" is not mentioned in the Public Analyst's report to be injurious to human life. It does not follow that because it is not specifically mentioned to be injurious, it is non-injurious. Absence of evidence is not equal to evidence of absence. Sharif Ahmed v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1917 (1918) : (1979) 4 SCC 412 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 3 : 1980 CrLJ 838 : (1980) 1 SCR 312 : 1980 UJ (SC) 122 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 76.

[7221] ● Use of permitted coal-far food colours.—"We shall proceed on the premise that the basic yellow coal tar dye found in the "supari" by the Public Analyst as amongst those enumerated food colours excepted from the prohibition under Rule 28 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955 and is therefore permitted to be used. Then Rule 29 prohibits the use of even the coal-tar food colours permitted under Rule 28 in or upon any food other than those enumerated in Rule 29. "Fruit products" is one such item of food so enumerated under clause (f) of Rule 29. The result is that permitted coal-tar food colours i.e. food colours permitted by Rule 28, can be used if the food articles in question are "fruit products" as understood in Rule 29(6). But this exception from prohibition in favour of "fruit products" is further subject to such exceptions or restrictions as are otherwise made in Appendix B. There is no dispute that "supari" is derived from and prepared out of the usufruct of the Areca Palm. The fact that a particular article of food, as indeed most of the articles of food of vegetative origin are, was of plant origin did not render that article necessarily a "fruit product". Even fruit products derived from, or associated in their origin with fruits need not ipso facto be fruit products for purposes and within the meaning of Rule 29(6) what was envisaged as "fruit products" in Rule 29(f), will be indicated by the array of items dealt with in Appendix B under Item 16—"fruit products", though the list was in the nature of an exception to Rule 29(f). In the context of the present statute, it would be a strain on the statutory language and the statutory scheme to include "supari" in the form in which it was sold, within "fruit products" as understood in clause (f) of Rule 29". Dineshchandra Jamnadas Gandhi v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1011 : (1989) 1 SCC 420 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 194 : 1989 CrLJ 889 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 212.

[7222] ● Reduction in sentence.—Where the colouring matter was used apparently with a view to please customers' eyes, the sentence was reduced to 3 months simple imprisonment with the direction to State Government to convert the imprisonment into fine. Badri Prasad v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 682 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 79.

[7223] ● Setting aside conviction.—In the sample of Burfi the essence of Rodhamme B which is used as ink in printing process was detected. The Food Inspector deposed that he had purchased the article from the shop of accused and had placed on a newspaper before putting it in dry plastic bags and sealing in the tin. The Court did not rule out the possibility of ink used in the newspaper getting transmitted to Burfi and set aside the conviction. Sardarmal v. Nagar Nigam, 1996 (7) SCC 307 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 397.

COMMISSION

[7224] ● Evidence on commission.—It is a cardinal principle of criminal jurisprudence that the evidence against an accused shall be recorded in his presence and in open Court. The accused is thereby enabled to challenge the testimony against him by cross-examination and the Court is enabled to see the witnesses and observe their demeanour. The procedure for the examination of a witness by commission is an exception to this general rule, and the power under Section 503 must be exercised only when the conditions mentioned in the section exist, and the Court is satisfied that the attendance of a witness cannot be procured without unreasonable amount of delay, expense or inconvenience. The issue of commission should ordinarily be restricted to formal witnesses only, and when the case against an accused rests mainly on the testimony of an important witness, as far as possible the powers under Section 503 should not be resorted to. The discretion given by this section to a Court as a judicial discretion and should be exercised only sparingly and in exceptional circumstances only when the presence of the witness in Court cannot be procured without undue delay or expense. It is the inconvenience to the Court which is the factor for consideration, and not inconvenience to the accused. In the present case, the Court dispensed with the attendance of a witness without issuing a summons for his attendance and without ascertaining where the witness worked or resided. Relying on the evidence of that witness taken on commission, the Court convicted the accused. Under the circumstances, the power under Section 503 was exercised arbitrarily and without any justification, and without the conditions regarding the proper exercise of that power being satisfied. The plea of the accused that he had been prejudiced and had been denied a fair trail was upheld. Conviction was set aside and the case was remitted for re-trial according to law. Dharmanand Pant v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 594 : 1957 CrLJ 894 : 1958 SCA 126 : 1957 SCJ 431.

[7225] ● Facilities of Lawyer.—In every criminal trial the accused is entitled to have the witnesses examined in his presence and if a departure is made and witnesses cannot be brought to Court for one reason or the other whether due to the action of the appellant or the inaction or want of diligence on the part of the prosecution, and they have to be examined on Commission beyond the frontiers of this country, it is incumbent upon the prosecution and the Court in ensuring a fair and impartial trial to afford to the accused the same facilities for employment of a lawyer, the payment of his to and fro air fare to the place where the Commission will examine witnesses and his daily expenses while he is engaged in the work of the Commission. When the Court had directed the prosecution to give facilities in respect of payment of the transport charges and foreign exchange at Rupees 100 as daily allowances to accused-1, accused-3, accused-4, accused-5 and accused-7 we find little merit in the Court singling out the accused-appellant. Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 1630 : (1971) 1 SCC 523 : 1971 SCC

(Cri) 231 (236) : 1971 CrLJ 1188 : 1971 UJ (SC) 302.

[7226] ● Evidence on commission.—Normally when a Commission is issued, the recording would have to be at the place where the witness is. Thus Section 285 provides to whom the Commission is to be directed. If the witness is outside India, arrangements are required between India and that country because the services of an official of the country (mostly a judicial Officer) would be required to record the evidence and to ensure/compel attendance. However new advancement of science and technology permit officials of the Court, in the city where video conferencing is to take place, to record the evidence. Thus where a witness is willing to give evidence an official of the Court, can be deported the record evidence on commission by way of video-conferencing. The evidence will be recorded in the studio/hall where the video-conferencing takes place. The Court in Mumbai would be issuing commission to record evidence by video conferencing in Mumbai. Therefore, the commission would be addressed to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Mumbai who would depute a responsible officer (preferably a Judicial Officer) to proceed to the office of VSNL and record the evidence of Dr. Greenberg in the presence of the Respondent. The officer shall ensure that the Respondent and his counsel are present when the evidence is recorded and that they are able to observe the demeanour and hear the deposition of Dr. Greenberg. The officers shall also ensure that the Respondent has full opportunity to cross-examine Dr. Greenberg. It must be clarified that adopting such a procedure may not be possible if the witness is out of India and not willing to give evidence. Fixing of time for recording evidence on commission is always the duty of the officer who has been deputed to so record evidence. Thus the officer recording the evidence would have the discretion to fix up the time in consultation with VSNL, who are experts in the field and who, will know which is the most convenient time for video conferencing with a person in USA. The Respondent and his counsel will have to make it convenient to attend at the time fixed by the concern officer. If they do not remain present the Magistrate will take action, as provided in law, to compel attendance. We do not have the slightest doubt that the officer who will be deputed would be one who has authority to administer oaths. That officer will administer the oath. By now science and technology has progressed enough do not worry about a video image/audio interruptions/distortions. Even if there are interruptions they would be of temporary duration. Undoubtedly an officer would have to be deputed, either from India or from India or from the Consulate/Embassy in the country where the evidence is being recorded who would remain present when the evidence is being recorded and who will ensure that there is no other person in the room where the witness is sitting whilst the evidence is being recorded. That officer will ensure that the witness is not coached/tutored/ prompted. It would be advisable, though not necessary, that the witness be asked to give evidence in a room in the Consulate/Embassy. As the evidence is being recorded on commission that evidence will subsequently be read into Court. Thus no question arises of the witness insulting the Court. If on reading the evidence the Court finds that the witness has perjured himself, just like in any other evidence on commission the Court will ignore or disbelieve the evidence. It must be remembered that there have been cases where evidence is recorded on commission and by the time it is read in Court the witness has left the country. There also have been cases where foreign witness has given evidence in a Court in India and that then gone away abroad. In all such cases Court would not have been able to take any action in perjury as by the time the evidence was considered, and it was ascertained that there was perjury, the witness was out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Even in those cases the Court could only ignore or disbelieve the evidence. The officer deputed will ensure that the Respondent, his counsel and one assistant are allowed in the studio when the evidence is being recorded. The officer will also ensure that the Respondent is not prevented from bringing into the studio the papers/documents which may be required by him or his counsel. There is no substance in this submission that it would be difficult to put documents or written materials to the witness in cross-examination. It is now possible, to show to a party, with whom video conferencing is taking place, any amount of written material. The concerned officer will ensure that once video conferencing commences, as far as possible, it is proceeded with without any adjournments. Further if it is found that Dr. Greenberg is not attending at the times fixed, without any sufficient cause, then it would be open for the Magistrate to disallow recording of evidence by video conferencing. If the officer finds that Dr. Greenberg is not answering questions, the officer will make a memo of the same. Finally when the evidence is read in Court, this is an aspect which will be taken into consideration for testing the veracity of the evidence. Undoubtedly the costs of video conferencing would have to be borne by the State. State of Maharashtra v. Praful B. Desai, AIR 2003 SC 2053 : (2003) 4

SCC 601 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 815 : 2003 CrLJ 2033 : JT 2003 (3) SC 382 : (2003) 2 Crimes 237 (SC).

COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY ACT, 1952

[7227] ● Matter connected with criminal revision.—The subject-matter of the inquiry before the Commission as set forth in allegation No. J-4 was whether there was any misuse of official position on the part of Shri Hasibur Rahman when he directed against the recommendation of the Law Secretary and the District Magistrate, the withdrawal of the prosecution against Kedar Prasad and Arjun Pandey. The question for decision which, however, was the subject of criminal revision petitions pending in Patna High Court was whether the order of the Magistrate dismissing the application for withdrawal of prosecution was contrary to law. The two matters were distinct and separate and not identical. It may be that some of the matters which were connected with the criminal revision petitions were the subject of inquiry by the commission of inquiry, but that would not attract liability for contempt of Court. Sammbhu Nath Jha v. Kedar Prasad Sinha, AIR 1972 SC 1515 : 1972 (1) SCC 573 : 1973 CrLJ 453 : 1972 (3) SCR 183.

[7228] ● Quashing of complaint.—According to the committees' own opinion formed in the light of the facts all those persons to whom notices under Section 8-B of the Commission of Inquiry Act, 1952 are issued have to be examined at the end of the inquiry. If three persons referred to above to whom notices under Section 8-B have been issued are to be examined even according to the Committee at the end of the inquiry there is no justifiable reason to deny the same treatment to the petitioners Ms. Kiran Bedi and Jinder Singh who are in the same position as those three persons. The action of the Committee in asking them to be cross-examined at the beginning of the enquiry appears to us to be discriminatory. Mere non-issue of notices to them under Section 8-B ought not to make any difference if they otherwise satisfy the conditions mentioned in Section 8-B. The issue of such a notice is not contemplated under Section 8-B of the Act. It is enough if at any stage the Commission considers it necessary to inquire into the conduct of any person. Such person would thereafter be governed by Section 8-B of the Act. The Commission should have considered whether the petitioners were entitled to be treated as persons governed by Section 8-B of the Act before asking them to get into the witness box for being cross-examined.

If the Committee had found that the petitioners were covered under Section 8-B, then perhaps they would not have been asked to get into the witness-box for being cross-examined till the end of the inquiry. The Committee would have then asked them to give evidence alongwith others who were similarly placed at the end of the inquiry. Taking into consideration all the aspects of the case we feel that the committee should not have in the circumstances of the case directed the filing of a complaint against either of the petitioners for an offence punishable under Section 178, IPC. We feel that the complaint was quashed. Kiran Bedi v. Committee of Inquiry, AIR 1988 SC 225 : (1988) 4 SCC 49 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 895 (898, 899) 1989 CrLJ 303 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 796 : JT 1988 (3) SC 372.

[7229] ● Commission of Enquiry not a Court.—The purpose and object of the legal fiction created by the first of sub-section (4) is reflected in the second. A Commission of Inquiry is therefore fictionally a Civil Court for the limited purpose of proceeding under Section 482 of the old Code or under Section 346 of the present Code. A fortiori, the legal fiction contained in sub-section (5) of Section 5 which relates to the proceedings before the Commission is necessarily confined to offences that are punishable under Section 193 and 228 of the Indian Penal Code and does not extend beyond that. A Commission of Inquiry is not a Court properly so called. A Commission is obviously appointed by the appropriate Government 'for the information of it mind' in order for it to decide as to the course of action to be followed. It is, therefore, a fact finding body and is not required to adjudicate upon the rights of the parties and has no adjudicatory functions. The Government is not bound to accept its recommendations or act upon its findings. The mere fact that the procedure adopted by it is of a legal character and it has the power to administer an oath will not impart to it the status of a Court. Baliram v. Justice B. Lentin, AIR 1988 SC 2267 : (1988) 4 SCC 419 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 941 : 1989 CrLJ 306 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 799 : (1988) 3 Crimes 655.

[7230] ● Use of previous statement at trial.—A perusal of Sections 145, 155 and 151 of the Evidence Act clearly indicates that there are two purposes for which a previous statement can be used. One is for cross-examination and contradiction and the other is for corroboration. The first purpose is to discredit the witness by putting to him the earlier statement and contradicting him on that basis. So far as corroboration is concerned it could not be disputed that it is none of the purposes of the defence to corroborate the evi dence on the basis of the previous statement. Section 145 therefore, is the main section under which relief was sought by the accused. The use for which the previous statement was asked for was to contradict him if necessary and if it was a contradiction then the earlier statement was necessary so that contradiction be put to the witness and that part of the statement can be proved. Contradiction could be used either to impeach his credit or discredit him or to pull down or bring down the reliability of the witness. These purposes for which the previous statements are required could not be said to be purposes which were not against the witness. The two aspects of the restrictions which Section 6 of the Commission of Inquiry Act contemplates are only two aspects which could be the result of the use of these statements. It is, therefore, clear that without going into the wider questions even a plain reading of Section 6 will prohibit the use of the previous statements at the trial either for the purposes of cross-examination to contradict the witness or to impeach his credit. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 (748, 749) : 1989 CrLJ 1 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 536 : JT 1988 (3) SC 191 : (1988) 3 Crimes 209.

COMMISSION OF SATI (PREVENTION) ACT, 1988

[7231] ● Glorification of Sati.—Under the Commission of Sati (Prevention) Act, 1987, glorification of Sati is strictly prohibited and that act has been declared as an offence. Dr. Singhvi by referring to different dictionaries has tried to impress upon us that Chunri as such is not connected with glorification of Sati and is a ceremony connected with the traditional form of offering worship known as Sodash upachar while the counsels of the State do not accept the submission made by Dr. Singhvi and have maintained that in the State of Rajasthan Chunri ceremony is always associated with glorifying Sati and the celebration is a part of the traditional process of religious offerings in Sati temples. This certainly is not the stage in the proceedings for a final view of the question as to whether performance of Chunri ceremony amounts to glorification of Sati and the determination must be left to the final stage. All India Democratic Women's Association and Janwadi Samiti v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 1280 : (1989) SCC (Cri) 385 : 1989 CrLJ 1128 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 623.

COMMITTAL PROCEEDINGS

[7232] ● Sufficient grounds.—The Magistrate in committal proceedings has to ascertain if there are sufficient grounds to commit the accused to trial. He is not required to ascertain if on appreciation of evidence and other material including the witnesses for the defence, the charge against the accused is proved or not. Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441 : 1951 CrLJ 1491 : 1951 SCR 729.

[7233] ● Certificate of committing—Magistrate.—The certificate of the Committing Magistrate endorsed on the deposition sheet states that the deposition was read out to the witness and that the witness admitted it to be correct. The Court is bound to accept this as correct under section 80 of the Indian Evidence Act until it is proved to be untrue. The burden is on the person, seeking to displace the statutory presumption and if he chooses to rely on the testimony of a witness which the Court is not prepared to believe the matter ends there. The duty displacing the presumption lies on the person who questions it. The Court is, of course, bound to consider such evidence as is adduced but it is not bound to believe such evidence nor is there any duty whatever on the Court to conduct an enquiry on its own. Bhagwan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 214 : 1952 CrLJ 1131 : 1952 SCR 812 : 1952(1) MadLJ 816.

[7234] ● Elimination of committal proceedings.—Elimination of committal proceedings is not a substantial departure from normal procedure. Syed Qasim Rizvi v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1953 SC 156 : 1953 CrLJ 862 : 1953 SCR 589.

[7235] ● Cases instituted upon police report and private complaint.—Chapter XVIII (now XVI) of the Code which relates to inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session, as it now stands after the amendments introduced by Act 26 of 1955, provides two distinct and separate procedures depending upon whether the case is instituted upon a police report or upon a private complaint. There is no doubt that the difference in the two procedures is material and that the procedure prescribed for cases instituted upon private complaints is more elaborate and affords to the accused more advantages and facilities than the one prescribed for cases instituted on police report. The main difference lies in the fact that whereas, (a) under Sections 208 and 210 which apply to private cases the prosecution is required to examine all its witnesses, and the accused has the right to produce and examine all his defence witnesses, in the committal Court before the charge is framed and the case is committed to the Sessions Court, (b) under section 207-A which applies to cases instituted by the State, the charge can be framed only on the documents containing the police record of the investigation of the case referred to in Section 173 which have been placed before the Court under that section and the evidence of such material witnesses whom the prosecution in its discretion has produced for examination.

This difference in procedure is founded upon a sound principle. Primarily it is the function of the State to prosecute offenders. In the first class of cases, the State investigates the accusation made against any person through its police officers, and then, as provided in Sections 169 and 170, it has to decide whether or not there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the prosecution of that person, and the case is forwarded to a Magistrate for further proceedings against him only when the State is satisfied through its investigating officer that such evidence or ground of suspicion exists in the case; if not, there is no further proceeding in the matter. Thus, in a case instituted on a police report, the case comes before the Magistrate only when the State is satisfied that a prima facie case exists against the accused, and that is why in Section 207-A a more expeditious and less elaborate procedure is provided for the proceeding in inquiry which precedes the committal of the accused for his trial.

On the other hand, when an accused is prosecuted on a private complaint, there has been no previous investigation for the purpose of the satisfaction of the State in the interests of administration of justice that a prima facie case which would justify the prosecution of the accused does in fact exist, or if such investigation has at all been made, it has ended in favour of the accused. In such a case, it is therefore necessary that the Magistrate who holds the inquiry must be vigilant to see that the processes of law are not set into motion against an innocent person for reasons or considerations other than those of vindicating justice. It is for this reason that the Legislature has provided in Section 208 and onwards that the accused shall get greater facilities in procedure at the initial stage of an inquiry into the serious offence which is alleged against him, and before he is sent up for his trial for that offence, so as to give him a full opportunity at that very stage of establishing his innocence, if he so desires.

It is this basic difference which exists between prosecution by the State and by private individuals which forms the basis for the different procedures provided in the Code for the inquiry into the charge against the accused, and it cannot be contended that the difference in procedure is not founded upon a just and sound principle. The question which then remains is whether that difference can be said to amount to a denial of the right to equality before the law guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution.

Section 30 empowers the State Government to appoint Special Magistrates in specified areas and to invest them with the power to try 'as a Magistrate' all offences punishable with imprisonment for a term extending upto 7 years. The effect is that accused persons committing such offences in those areas are triable by a Special Magistrate appointed under section 30 under the warrant-procedure laid down in Chapter XXI (now XIX) of the Code, though accused persons committing the same offences outside those areas are triable by a Court of Session under the procedure laid down in Chapter XXIII (now XVIII) of the Code. In Budhan Choudhry v. State of Bihar, it was contended that by providing for such trials of a Special Magistrate under a special procedure different from the procedure provided under the Code for the trial of such offences a discrimination was created between offenders committing the same offence in different parts of the State. This contention was repelled and it was held, (a) that the Constitution does not guarantee to offenders the right to a particular kind of procedure, and (b) that Section 30, CrPC, does not infringe the fundamental right to equality before the law guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution. Macherla Hanumantha Rao v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 927 : 1957 CrLJ 1463 : 1957 SCJ 129.

[7236] ● Prosecution by state and private person.—The classification made in Chapter XVIII of the Code between prosecutions by the State and by private persons, and the provision of two different procedures for the inquiry into the offences to which that Chapter applies, is based upon an intelligible differentia founded upon sound considerations, namely, whether or not there has been a previous investigation into the alleged offence by a responsible officer on behalf of the State. The classification has a reasonable relation to the object of the legislation, namely, that an alleged criminal should be placed on his trial as soon as is possible and without any delay which is avoidable. Section 207 and the sections which follow in Chapter XVIII do not create any inequality before the law and do not deny the right guaranteed under Article 14. Macherla Hanumantha Rao v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 927 : 1957 CrLJ 1463 : 1957 SCJ 129.

[7237] ● Sanction for prosecution not violative of Article 14.—It was Section 197, CrPC, which came under challenge on constitutional grounds in Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 and there it was contended that the section is violative of Article 14 because it vests in the Executive arbitrary and discriminatory powers to grant a sanction for the prosecution of one public servant for a particular offence while it could refuse such sanction for the prosecution of another public servant for the same offence. There too the contention was rejected and it was held that Section 197 was not an infringement of Article 14 because the discretion in question had to be exercised after looking into the facts of each case which were bound to be different from the facts of another case though the charge might be under the same penal section. Macherla Hanumantha Rao v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 927 : 1957 CrLJ 1463 : 1957 SCJ 129.

[7238] ● Existence of prima facie case.—Though it is easy to say that a Magistrate should commit the accused for trial if he is satisfied that sufficient grounds for doing so, have been made out, it is difficult to apply those crucial words "sufficient grounds" to individual cases. Apparently conflicting observations about the powers of a committing Magistrate, have been made in the reported cases, but those observations have to be read in the light of the facts and circumstances disclosed in the case then before the Court.

In our opinion, the law in India and the law in England, on the question now under consideration, appears to be the same.

When all the evidence has been heard, the examining justices then present who have heard all the evidence must decide whether the accused is or is not to be committed for trial. Before determining this mater they must take into consideration the evidence and any statement of the accused. If the justices are of opinion that there is sufficient evidence to put the accused upon trial by jury for any indictable offence they must commit him for trial in custody or on bail.

In each case, therefore, the Magistrate holding the preliminary inquiry, has to be satisfied that a prima facie case is made out against the accused by the evidence of witnesses entitled to a reasonable degree of credit, and unless he is so satisfied, he is not to commit. Ramgopal Ganpatrai Ruia v. State of Bombay, AIR 1958 SC 97 : 1958 CrLJ 244 : 1958 SCR 618.

[7239] ● Absence of legal evidence and reliable evidence.—The distinction must always be drawn between absence of legal evidence and absence of reliable evidence. If it could be said with justification that there was no legal evidence at all in support of the prosecution case, it may lead to the inference that the commitment was bad in that it was not based on any legal evidence at all. But on the other hand where circumstances are relied upon to show that the evidence may perhaps not be delivered, they do not lead to the inference that there is no legal evidence on the record. Khushi Ram v. Hashim, AIR 1959 SC 542 : 1959 CrLJ 777 : 1959 Supp (1) SCR 940.

[7240] ● Propriety of committal order.—A provision in a Special Act which authorised a Magistrate to impose particular sentence which is heavier than the one which he has the power to impose under the general law is only an enabling provision, and it cannot be construed as a disabling provision which alone can take away a Magistrate's powers conferred under the Criminal Procedure Code. The discretion vested in a Magistrate under Sections 207 and 347 of the Code to commit for trial to the Sessions Court any case which is ordinarily triable by himself but which in his opinion ought to be tried by that Court remains with him even though he is empowered under any Special Act to impose the sentence provided under it for the offence of which the accused is prosecuted, and it could not be said that an order of commitment is illegal or improper merely because the Magistrate could have imposed the sentence laid down in the Act if he had tried the case himself.

Apart from that, the jurisdiction of a Court of Session depends upon the Code, and under it (see Section 193) the Court of Session has the jurisdiction to try any case which has been committed to it 'by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf'. If in the exercise of his powers under the Code, a case has been committed to a Sessions Court by a Magistrate who has the power to commit it [see Schedule III, Part III, Item (8)], and who has territorial jurisdiction so to commit, the Sessions Court has jurisdiction to try that offence, irrespective of whether the case is or is not one which ought to have been committed to it for trial.

Section 21 of the Act of 1954 does not affect the provisions of Sections 207 and 347 of the Code and does not make an order of commitment made by a competent Magistrate a nullity merely because the Magistrate had the power to award the full sentence prescribed by the Act.; nor does it affect or interfere with the jurisdiction of a Court of Session to try and dispose of a case committed to it by a competent Magistrate. The Sessions Judge had full jurisdiction to try the present case.

In the result, the appeal was allowed, the order of the High Court was set aside, and the case was sent back to the High Court for being heard on merits. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Khushi

Ram, AIR 1960 SC 905 : 1960 CrLJ 1378 : (1960) 2 SCA 212 : (1961) 1 SCJ 78.

[7241] ● Holding joint trial and consolidating charges.—The question whether one trial of persons committed under different committal orders with respect to distinct offences is competent or not, depends upon whether such joint trial is warranted by the provisions of Sections 234, 235 and 239, and not upon the number of committal orders. If a single trial is warranted under these provisions, it is competent to the Sessions Judge to consolidate the separate cases and try the accused at one trial in respect of all such offences even when there had been separate committal orders.

However, in a case in which the accused are committed to the Sessions Court under three separate committal orders and separate cases are registered on charges in respect of distinct offences, and three separate trials are conducted, evidence must be recorded in each case, and it is improper procedure to record evidence only in one of the three cases. The procedure of recording evidence, with respect to the different offences which are the subject of different sessions trials, in the proceedings of one sessions trial alone is not warranted by the provisions of the Code. Every separate trial must proceed separately, and every proceeding in each trial, including the recording of evidence, should be separate, and even in a case in which consolidation of separate trials into one trial is warranted, the procedure of recording evidence only in one case is irregular unless the Sessions Judge has made an order consolidating the trials.

Section 234 allows the joint trial on a person accused of 3 offences of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months. Two offences under section 302 Penal Code, with respect to the murder of two persons are offences of the same kind within the meaning of Section 234(2), and under the proviso to the section, the offence of attempt to murder under section 307, Penal Code, is of the same kind as the offence of murder under section 302. Section 239, CrPC, provides that persons accused of three offences of the same kind committed by them jointly within a period of 12 months could be charged and tried together at one trial. Since the three offences of which the two accused in this case were charged were of the same kind, and were committed by them jointly on the same day, one joint trial of the accused on charges in respect of all those offences would have been justified under Sections 234 and 239 of the Code, and it would have been open to the Sessions Judge to consolidate all the three cases registered against the accused.

In the present case, the procedure adopted was wrong as the proceedings in each separate trial were not kept separate. However, in view of the fact that the separate offences of which the accused were convicted could have been tried together at one trial under the provisions of Sections 234 and 239, after consolidating the separate cases against the accused, there was no question of want of competency, and the wrong procedure did not vitiate the trial, and in the absence of any prejudice shown to have been caused to the accused, the irregularity was cured under section 537 of the Code. Banwari v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1198 : (1962) 2 CrLJ 278 : 1962 ALJ 469.

[7242] ● False evidence before committing magistrate.—The committal proceedings are a stage of the judicial proceedings before the Sessions Judge. It seems to us therefore that where false evidence is given before the Committing Magistrate by a person who was later examined at the trial, the evidence given by him before the Committing Magistrate cannot properly be said to have been given in an independent proceeding.

No doubt the evidence recorded before the Committing Magistrate is not deemed to be evidence recorded at the trial but the fact remains that the evidence recorded by the Committing Magistrate can be transferred in certain circumstances to the record of the trial and taken into consideration in the same way in which evidence tendered at the trial can be taken into consideration. In view of these features which characterise the commitment proceedings we are of opinion that those proceedings can be regarded as part of the same judicial proceeding which culminated in the decision of the Court of Session. Upon that view it would follow that even when the Sessions Judge is unable to say which of the two contradictory statements is false or even where he is of opinion that the statement before the Committing Magistrate is false it is for him and him alone to act under Section 479-A(1). Shabir Hussain Bholu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 816 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 803 : 1963 Supp (1) SCR 501.

[7243] ● Jurisdiction to examine accused and explain oral and documentary evidence.—The Magistrate has jurisdiction to examine the accused to explain not only oral evidence but also documentary evidence. Ramnarayan Mor v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1964 SC 949 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 44 : 1964 (1) SCR 1064 : 1964(2) Andh LT 13 : 1964 All LJ 678 : 66 Bom LR 714.

[7244] ● Presumption of explaining circumstances.—We are unable to hold that because the accused in an enquiry for committal declines to avail himself of the opportunity to explain circumstances appearing against him from oral or documentary evidence, a presumption may be raised against him. Declining to avail himself of such an opportunity and reserving his right to make a defence at the trial do not amount to refusal to answer a question. Ramnarayan Mor v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1964 SC 949 : 1964 (1) SCR 1064 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 44.

[7245] ● Failure to examine accused.—Failure to examine the accused before commitment does not amount to material irregularity to vitiate the order of commitment. State of West Bengal v. Tulsidas Mundhra, 1964 (1) CrLJ 443.

[7246] ● Quashing committal order on question of law.—The order of commitment once made final can be quashed by High Court only on question of law. Challenge to commitment order after trial and correction is not permissible. Mahinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 79 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 112.

[7247] ● Examination of witnesses.—The prosecutor is expected ordinarily to examine in the Court of the committing Magistrate all witnesses to the actual commission of the offence: if without adequate reasons he fails to do so, the Magistrate is justified and in enquiries on charges for serious offences is under a duty to call witnesses who would throw light upon the prosecution case.

Exercise of that discretion must be judicial : it is not to be governed by any set rules or standards, but must be adjusted in the light of circumstances of the case. The Magistrate is again not to be guided by the attitude of the prosecutor. He must of course consider the representation relating to the examination of witnesses by the prosecutor, but in considering whether it is necessary in the interest of justice to take evidence of any one or more of the other witnesses for the prosecution, he must have due regard to the nature and gravity of the offence, the interest of the accused and the larger interest of the public, and the defence if any disclosed by the accused. A Magistrate failing to examine witnesses to the actual commission of the offence because they are not produced, without considering whether it is necessary in the interest of justice to examine such witnesses, in our judgment, fails in the discharge of his duties. Kirpal Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 712 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 636 : 1964 (3) SCR 992 : 1964 Mad LJ (Cri) 229 : 1963 BLJR 864.

[7248] ● Successive applications for commitment.—The provisions of Section 437, however, do not make it obligatory upon a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate to order commitment in every case where an offence is exclusively triable by a Court of Session. The law gives a discretion to the revising authority and that discretion has to be exercised judicially. One of the factors which have to be considered in this case is whether the intervention of the revising authority was sought by the prosecution at an early stage. It would be seen that an attempt to have the case committed failed right in the beginning and was repeated not earlier than 15 months from that date. The second attempt also failed. Instead of filing an application for revision against the order of the Magistrate refusing to pass an order of commitment the prosecution chose to make a second application upon the same facts. It may be that successive applications for such a purpose are not barred but where a later application is based on the same facts as the earlier one the Magistrate would be justified in refusing it. Where the Magistrate has acted in this way the revisional Court ought not to interfere with propriety unless there are strong grounds to justify interference. While rejecting the application on January 25, 1962, the ground given by the learned Judge was that the case had already entered the defence stage and the attempt to have the committal was very belated. Matters had advanced still further when a third attempt failed on March 30, 1962. By that date not only had the defence been closed and arguments heard, but the case was actually closed up for judgment. It would be a terrible harassment to the appellants now to be called upon to face a fresh trial right from the beginning which would certainly be the result if the Magistrate were to commit the appellants for trial by a Court of Session. It is further noteworthy that after the last attempt failed it was not the prosecution which went up in revision before the Sessions Judge but the informants and, as pointed out earlier, in the matter concerning the appellants before us it was not even the informant Shyam Lall but one Sagarmal, the informant in another case, who preferred a revision application. In a case which has proceeded on a police report a private party has really no locus standi. No doubt the terms of Section 435 under which the jurisdiction of the learned Sessions Judge was invoked are very wide and he could have taken up the matter suo motu. It would, however, not be irrelevant to bear in mind the fact that the Court's jurisdiction was invoked by a private party. The criminal law is not to be used as an instrument of wreaking private vengeance by an aggrieved party against the person who, according to that party, had caused injury to it. Barring a few exceptions, in criminal matters the party who is treated as the aggrieved party is the State which is the custodian of social interest of the community at large and so it is for the State to take all the steps necessary for bringing the person who has acted against the social interests of the community to book. In our opinion it was injudicious for the learned Sessions Judge to order the commitments of the appellants, particularly so without giving any thought to the aspects of the matter to which we have adverted. For all these reasons, we allow the appeals, quash the order of the Sessions Judge as affirmed by the High Court and direct that the trials of each of the appellants shall proceed before the Magistrate according to law from the stages at which they were on the date on which the stay order became operative. Thakur Ram v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 911 : 1966 CrLJ 700 : (1966) 1 SCA 679 : (1966) 2 SCJ 438

[7249] ● Discretion to weigh evidence to decide existence of prima facie case.—There was nothing in the prosecution or the defence case which made the prosecution case inherently improbable, and there could be no justification for the Magistrate to hold that no Court could reasonably come to a conclusion on this material that the prosecution case had been established. It is clear that in these circumstances, what the Magistrate did was to appropriate to himself the function of judging whether the prosecution evidence was to be believed, or whether the defence evidence was to be believed in preference, and consequently, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses who gave eyewitness account of the offence was unreliable. No doubt a Magistrate enquiring into a case under Section 209, CrPC, is not to act as a mere Post Office, and has to come to conclusion whether the case before him is fit for commitment of the accused to the Court of Session; but in arriving at that conclusion, it is not the function of an enquiring Magistrate to weigh the pros and cons of the prosecution and defence evidence and to discharge the accused merely because in his view the defence evidence was better than the prosecution evidence.

It cannot be said that the Magistrate has no discretion to weigh the evidence at all. He must clearly do so to some extent in order to decide whether a prima facie case has been made out and whether a conviction is possible. But these are the limits of his discretion and it is not his duty nor is it necessary for this purpose for him to examine the prosecution evidence with meticulous care, balance the evidence of one witness against the evidence of another, consider the probabilities a conviction, or come to a conclusion on doubtful points. K.P. Raghavan v. M.H. Abbas, AIR 1967 SC 740 : 1967 CrLJ 653.

[7250] ● Express order of discharge.—In the instant case there is no express order of the Magistrate discharging the appellant of the charge under Section 307, Indian Penal Code, but in his order, dated March 19, 1960 the Magistrate has given reasons for holding that no case is made out under Section 307, Indian Penal Code in order to justify an order of commitment. It is manifest that the order of the Magistrate is tantamount to an implied order of discharge and the Additional Sessions Judge had, therefore, jurisdiction, under Section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, to set aside the order of the Magistrate and to order that the accused should be committed to trial in the Court of Session on the major charge under Section 307, Indian Penal Code. There is nothing in the language of Section 437, Criminal Procedure Code from which it could be said that the power of the Sessions Court under that section can be exercised only when the Magistrate has made an express order of discharge. It is apparent from the language of Section 209(1), Criminal Procedure Code that an express order of discharge is only contemplated in a case where the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the allegations against the accused do not amount to an offence at all and, therefore, no question arises of trying him either by himself or by any other Court. But the section does not contemplate that an express order of discharge should be made in a case where upon the same facts it is possible to say that though no offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session is made out, an offence triable by a Magistrate is nevertheless made out and the Magistrate thereafter proceeds with the trial of that offence. Ramekbal Tiwary v. Madan Mohan Tiwary, AIR 1967 SC 1156 : 1967 CrLJ 1076 : 1967 (2) SCR 368.

[7251] ● Sufficient evidence for commitment.—A Magistrate holding an enquiry is not intended to act merely as a recording machine. He is entitled to sift and weigh the materials on record, but only for seeing whether there is sufficient evidence for commitment, and not whether there is sufficient evidence for conviction. If there is no prima facie evidence or the evidence is totally unworthy of credit, it is his duty to discharge the accused: if there is some evidence on which a conviction may reasonably be based, he must commit the case. The Magistrate at that stage has no power to evaluate the evidence for satisfying himself of the guilt of the accused. The question before the Magistrate at that stage is whether there is some credible evidence which would sustain a conviction. We do not agree with counsel for the appellants that there was no evidence on which a charge could be framed against the appellants or that the evidence was so totally unworthy of credit that an order recording the conviction against the accused could not be made thereon. Alamohan Das v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 863 : 1970 CrLJ 860 : 1969 (2) SCR 520.

[7252] ● Magistrate to sift evidence to see if there is sufficient evidence for commitment.—Though a Magistrate holding an inquiry under Chapter XVIII is not intended to act merely as a recording machine and is entitled to sift and weigh the materials on record, he is to do so only for the purpose of seeing whether there is sufficient evidence for commitment and not whether there is sufficient evidence for conviction. If there is no prima facie evidence or the evidence is totally unworthy of credit it is his duty to discharge the accused. But, if there is some evidence on which a conviction may reasonably be based he must commit the case. But the Magistrate at that stage has no power to evaluate the evidence for satisfying himself of the guilt of the accused. The question before him at that stage would be whether there is some credible evidence which would sustain a conviction. Rajpal Singh v. Jai Singh, AIR 1970 SC 1015 : (1970) 2 SCC 206 : 1970 CrLJ 903.

[7253] ● Committal proceedings without holding inquiry.—From the mandatory language of Section 328, the first thing that the Magistrate has to do is to decide, when an accused person is brought before him who is suspected or alleged to be a person of unsound mind and before he proceeds with the inquiry, whether such person appears to him to be of unsound mind. The words "reason to believe" indicate that when an accused person is presented before a Magistrate for inquiry, who is alleged to be suffering from unsoundness of mind, the Magistrate has, on such materials, as are brought before him, to inquire before he proceeds with the inquiry whether there are reasons to believe that the accused before him is suffering from any such infirmity. The next step is that if he has such reasons to believe, he is to institute an inquiry into the fact of unsoundness of mind and cause him to be examined by the civil surgeon or such other medical officer as the State Government directs. Therefore, when such question arises the Magistrate is bound to institute such inquiry whether the accused is or is not incapacitated by the unsoundness of mind from making his defence. Such a provision is clearly in consonance with the principles of fair administration of justice. Where the Magistrate failed to make such an inquiry which it was incumbent upon him to make at the very threshold, the committal proceedings as also his order committing the accused to Sessions Court for trial were both vitiated and the Magistrate was directed for a de novo committal proceedings. Jai Shankar v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 2267 : 1972 CrLJ 1526 : (1973) 3 SCC 83.

[7254] ● Directions for separation of case for commitment.—Where there was delay in proceedings on account of non-production of some other accused, directions were given to separate the case of accused and proceed with the committal expeditiously. M. Sambasiva Rao v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 850 : 1973 CrLJ 663 : 1973 UJ 104.

[7255] ● Evidence of single witness, if substantive evidence.—The evidence of the Investigating officer PW-24 which has been discussed by both the Courts below that at the time of trial, Vasu had left for Coorg and he was not available. It was not possible to serve summons on him and even a non-bailable warrant issued by the Court was returned with the endorsement "not available". Under these circumstances, the learned Sessions Judge brought on record the statement made by Vasu before the committal Court as substantive evidence. Similarly regarding Krishnan, it was in evidence that he was laid up with paralysis at the relevant time and was not in a position to attend the Court and give evidence. The learned Sessions Judge marked his deposition before the committal Court as Ex P-26 and treated it as substantive evidence. The contention that the Courts have committed an error in law in treating the evidence given by Vasu and Krishnan in the committal Court as substantive evidence at the trial cannot be accepted. Jose v. State of Kerala, AIR 1973 SC 944 : (1973) 3 SCC 472 : (1973) SCC (Cri) 372 (374, 375) : 1973 CrLJ 687 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 167.

[7256] ● High Court has no power to reappreciate evidence in commitment proceedings.—The Magistrate conducting the inquiry proceedings can discharge the accused only if he is of the opinion that the evidence produced before him and the documents referred to in Section 173 of the Code "disclose no grounds for committing the accused person for trial". The jurisdiction of the inquiring Magistrate is thus of a limited character. He has, undoubtedly got to sift and weigh the evidence but that exercise is solely directed to finding whether the prosecution has made out a prima facie case. So long as there is evidence which, if believed, would sustain the conviction of the accused, it is the duty of the Magistrate to commit the accused to the Court of Session, unless he comes to the conclusion that the offence disclosed by the evidence is such as may be tried by himself or by some other Magistrate. This limitation stems from the fact that a Magistrate acting under Chapter XVIII of the Code does not try the accused but merely inquires into the case against him. Sifting and weighing evidence to determine the guilt is the function and privilege of the Court which tries the accused.

Acting in the exercise of its revisional powers, the High Court could have quashed the order of commitment if it came to the conclusion that the prosecution had failed to make out a prima facie case or that there was no evidence at all on which the conviction of the accused could rest. Rather than examine the evidence from this limited point of view, the High Court embarked upon a full-fledged appraisal of the evidence as if it was hearing an appeal against an order of conviction recorded by the Magistrate.

As the High Court forestalled the decision of the Sessions Court and appreciated evidence led by the prosecution in the committing Court for determining the guilt of the accused we set aside its judgment and restore the order of commitment passed by the learned Magistrate. Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Md. Samsuddin, AIR 1975 SC 146 : (1975) 3 SCC 390 : 1975 CrLJ 233.

[7257] ● Justification of order of discharge.—Where the High Court set aside the order of the Magistrate discharging the appellant and directed his commitment to the Court of Session and when it is obvious that the High Court has applied its mind to the facts and circumstances of the case, it is not for the Supreme Court in appeal by special leave to go into the sufficiency or otherwise of the material before Magistrate which may afford a justification for passing an order of discharge. M.R. Dhavan v. Pratab Bhanu, AIR 1978 SC 1011 : (1978) 2 SCC 184 : (1978) SCC (Cri) 186 : 1978 CrLJ 769 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 163 : (1978) 3 SCR 488 : (1978) 2 SCWR 39 : 1978 UJ (SC) 308 : (1978) 5 CrLT 302.

[7258] ● Maintainability of application for quashing proceedings.—The trial in the second case had not started. There was therefore no justification for taking the view that evidence in both the cases was similar. Moreover, it is not the requirement of law that if one case has ended in acquittal, prosecution in another case would be illegal. It cannot also be said that it would be illegal to commence the trial in a case after a period of 10 years or so. So also, it cannot be said that the High Court's opinion that the charge was not "likely to stand" the trial, was on a point of law within the meaning of Section 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court therefore lost sight of its limitation under Section 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and quashed the "proceedings" for reasons which were extraneous to that section. Its order does not conform to the requirement of the law and cannot be sustained. S.P.E. Madras v. K.V. Sundaravelu, AIR 1978 SC 1017 : (1978) 2 SCC 514 : 1978 CrLJ 775 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 176.

[7259] ● Power of Committing Magistrate.—Under the new Code in cases where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the committing Magistrate has no power to discharge the accused. Nor has he power to take oral evidence save where a specific provision like Section 306 enjoins. It is also not open to the committal Court to launch on a process of satisfying itself that a prima facie case has been made out on the merits. The jurisdiction once vested in him under the earlier Code has been eliminated now under the present Code. The narrow inspection hole through which the committing Magistrate has to look at the case limits him merely to ascertain whether the case, as disclosed by the police report, appears to the Magistrate to show an offence triable solely by the Court of Session. If, by error, a wrong section of the Penal Code is quoted, he may look into that aspect. If made-up facts unsupported by any material are reported by the police and a Sessions offence is made to appear, it is perfectly open to the Sessions Court under Section 227, CrPC, to discharge the accused. Sanjay Gandhi v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 514 : (1978) 2 SCC 39 : (1978) SCC (Cri) 172 : 1978 CrLJ 642.

[7260] ● Power of special Judge to take cognizance without commitment.—Section 8 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act specifically empowers the Special Judge to take cognizance of the offence without the accused being committed to him. The provisions of the CrPC are not excluded unless they are inconsistent with the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act. The CrPC is applicable when there is no conflict with the provisions of Criminal Law Amendment Act. If a special Judge who is empowered to take cognizance without committal is not empowered to exercise powers of remanding an accused person produced before him or release him on bail it will lead to an anomalous situation. State of Tamil Nadu v. Krishnaswami Naidu, AIR 1979 SC 1255 : (1979) 4 SCC 5 : (1979) SCC (Cri) 887 (891) : (1979) 3 SCR 928.

[7261] ● Power to discharge or acquit.—The Court competent to discharge or acquit the accused under some other provisions of the Code can exercise the power under Section 321. Criminal Procedure Code. The power conferred by Section 321 is itself a special power conferred on the Court before whom a prosecution is pending and the exercise of the power is not made dependent upon the power of the Court to acquit or discharge the accused under some other provision of the Code. The power to discharge or acquit the accused under Section 321 is a special power founded on Section 321 itself, to be exercised by the Court independently of its power of enquiry into the offence or to try the accused. Again, the expression 'judgment' in the context may be understood to mean the judgment which may be ultimately pronounced if the case were to be committed to a Court of Session. Rajendra Kumar Jain v. State Through Spl. Police Establishment, AIR 1980 SC 1510 : (1980) 3 SCC 435 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 757 : 1980 CrLJ 1084.

[7262] ● Committing magistrate not performing judicial function.—It may not be accurate to say that the Committing Magistrate has no judicial function to perform under the 1973 Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1973 obliges the Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session when it appears to the Magistrate that the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session. Therefore, the Magistrate has to be satisfied that an offence is prima facie disclosed and the offence so disclosed is triable exclusively by the Court of Session. If no offence is disclosed the Magistrate may refuse to take cognizance of the case or if the offence disclosed is one not triable exclusively by the Court of Session he may proceed to deal with it under the other provisions of the Code. To that extent the Court of the Committing Magistrate does discharge a judicial function. Rajendra Kumar Jain v. State Through Spl. Police Establishment, AIR 1980 SC 1510 : (1980) 3 SCC 435 : (1980) SCC (Cri) 757 : 1980 CrLJ 1084.

[7263] ● Two cases on same transaction to be tried separately by same Court.—Two cases exclusively triable by Court of Session, one instituted on a police report and the other by a criminal complaint, arose out of the same transaction. Both cases should be tried separately but by the same Court to obviate the risk of two Courts coming to conflicting findings. At the stage of Sections 203 and 204, in a case exclusively triable by the Court of Session, all that the Magistrate has to do is to see whether or not there is "sufficient ground for proceeding". The Magistrate is not to weigh the evidence meticulously as if he were the trial Court. Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, AIR 1980 SC 1780 : (1981) SCC (Cri) 521 : 1980 Supp SCC 499 : 1980 CrLJ 1271 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 534.

[7264] ● Statement of witnesses in committal Court.—Police officer sometimes feels it expedient to have the statement of a witness recorded under the section when the witnesses to a crime are clearly connected with the accused or where the accused are very influential which may result in the witnesses being gained over. Such statement has the endorsement of the Magistrate that it had been made by the witness. Statements thus recorded would not make them tainted. If the witness sticks to it in the committal Court, no problem arises. If he resiles, he can be cross-examined on his earlier statements. But if he sticks to it before committal enquiry and resiles from it in the Sessions Court, the procedure prescribed under Section 288, CrPC, (old) will have to be observed. It is for the Court to consider, taking into account all the circumstances including the fact that the witness had resiled, in coming to the conclusion as to whether the witness should be believed or not. Dhanabal v. State of T.N., AIR 1980 SC 628 : (1980) 2 SCC 84 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 340 : 1980 CrLJ 439 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 90 : (1980) 2 SCR 491.

[7265] ● Power to release on bail or remand to custody.—Note:—Under the CrPC of 1973, committal Court enquiry in police cases has been abolished. As such, there is no question of treating the evidence of a witness given in the committal Court being brought on record in the sessions trial under the provisions of Section 288, CrPC of 1898 arises. However, the case is given hearing since in other types of cases before Magistrates or in the Sessions Court statements of witnesses recorded under Section 164, CrPC (under both the Codes) come up and their evidentiary value is considered.

From the time the accused appeared or was produced before the Magistrate with the police report under Section 170 and the Magistrate proceeded to enquire whether Section 207 had been complied with and then proceeded to commit the accused to the Court of Session, the proceeding before the Magistrate would be an inquiry as contemplated by Section 2(g) of the Code. It is difficult to agree with the High Court that the function discharged by the Magistrate under Section 207 is something other than a judicial function and while discharging the function the Magistrate is not holding an inquiry as contemplated by the Code. If the Magistrate is holding the inquiry obviously Section 309 would enable the Magistrate to remand the accused to the custody till the inquiry to be made wan complete. Sub-section (2) of Section 309 is clear, and would enable the Magistrate to remand the accused to custody. The High Court committed an error in holding otherwise. The view taken by the High Court introduced a stage of compulsory bail not envisaged by the Code, and, therefore, the view of the High Court cannot be upheld. According to the High Court after the accused was brought before the Court along with the police report, the Magistrate should forthwith commit the accused to the Court of Session because the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction in the absence of any provision to remand the accused to custody till the order committing the case to the Court of Session was made. The view is wholly untenable and should be set aside. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the order of the High Court granting bail to the respondents on the short ground that they could not be remanded to the custody before the order committing them to the Court of Session was made, is set aside, However, if in the meantime, the trial was over, no question of taking the respondents into custody pursuant to the order would arise.

On the expiry of 60 days from the date of the arrest of the accused, his further detention did not become ipso facto illegal or void, but if the charge-sheet was not submitted within the period of 60 days, then, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in Section 437(1), CrPC, the accused would be entitled to an order for being released on bail if he was prepared to and did furnish bail. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Lakshmi Brahman, AIR 1983 SC 439 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 489 : (1983) 2 SCC 372 : 1983 CrLJ 839.

[7266] ● Cognizance of offence by Court of Session upon commitment by Magistrate.—If the Magistrate took cognizance of an offence upon a complaint which appears to be exclusively triable by Court of Session, he has to proceed according to Sections 202(2), 208 and 209. Chapter XVIII incorporates provisions prescribing procedure for the trial before a Court of Session.

Section 226 of the CrPC says that the case comes to the Court in pursuance of a commitment of the case under Section 209. Section 209 caters to a situation where the case was instituted before the Magistrate on a Police report or otherwise. In both the cases, if it appears to him that the offence which is alleged against the accused is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, there is no option but to commit the case to the Court of Session. The Court of Session, thus, takes cognizance of the offence upon commitment by the Magistrate. And any other mode of taking cognizance is specifically barred under Section 193 of the CrPC. A.R. Antulay v. Ramdas Sriniwas Nayak, AIR 1984 SC 647 : (1984) 2 SCC 500 : (1984) SCC (Cri) 277 (294) : 1984 CrLJ 647 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 206 : (1984) 2 SCR 914 : (1984) 1 Crimes 547.

[7267] ● Examination of approver at committal stage.—The learned Chief Judicial Magistrate committed the case to the Court of Session for trial without examining the approver as a witness in his Court. But the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner to whom the case was committed for trial noticed this defect that the approver was not examined as a witness in the Court of Magistrate taking cognizance of the case and committed it for trial before him and, therefore, learned Additional Judicial Commissioner remanded the case back to the Court of Chief Judicial Magistrate with a direction to record the statement of the Approver as required by clause (a) of subsection (4) of Section 306 of the Code. After receiving the records with the aforesaid direction, learned Magistrate examined the approver and then again committed it for trial to the Court of Additional Commissioner. Thus in any case the provisions of clause (a) of sub-section (4) of Section 306 were ultimately complied with. If the defect of not examining the approver at the committal stage by the committing Magistrate is rectified later, no prejudice can be said to be caused to an accused person and, therefore, the trial cannot be said to be vitiated on that account. Since, in the present case, the defect was rectified, the argument that the trial was vitiated cannot be accepted. Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 2420 (2435) : 1994 CrLJ 3271 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 725 : JT 1994 (4) SC 309 : (1994) 2 Crimes 1027.

[7268] ● CJM having no jurisdiction to grant of pardon after commitment of proceeding.—The Chief Judicial Magistrate no doubt was authorised under Section 306 of the Code to tender pardon in course of an investigation, inquiry or trial before the committal of the proceedings to the Court of Session. But after commitment of the proceedings, he does not have jurisdiction to grant pardon and in such a case if the said Chief Judicial Magistrate tenders pardon then that would not be a curable irregularity within the ambit of cl. (g) of Section 460 of the CrPC. A. Devendran v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2821 : (1998) 11 SCC 720 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 220 : 1998 CrLJ 814 : JT 1997 (8) SC 619.

[7269] ● Grant of pardon by CJM after commitment of case not curable irregularity.—Under the 1898 Code, the corresponding provision to Section 460(g) of the 1973 Code was Section 529(g). In the said provision it was specifically stated that if any Magistrate not empowered by law to tender pardon under Section 337 or 338, the same would not vitiate the proceedings. But under Section 460(g) of the new Code, the Legislature have omitted Section 307 which is corresponding to Section 338 and, therefore, such irregularity committed by the Magistrate cannot be said to be a curable irregularity under clause (g) of Section 460. A. Devendran v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2821 (2831) : (1998) 11 SCC 720 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 220 : 1998 CrLJ 814 : (1997) 4 Crimes 181.

[7270] ● Object of holding inquiry.—It is only if the Magistrate decides to hold the inquiry the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 202 would come into operation. If the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Magistrate himself has to hold the inquiry and no direction for investigation by the police shall then be made. Inquiry can be held for recording evidence on oath and if he thinks fit, sub-section (2) of Section 202 gives discretion to the Magistrate to record the evidence of the witnesses on oath. To this discretionary power, the proviso carves out an exception. It provides that for the offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Magistrate shall call upon the complainant to produce all his witnesses and examine them on oath. Then the next stage after holding inquiry is passing of appropriate order of either dismissal of the complaint or issue of process. That is provided under Sections 203 and 204 of the Code. Hence, on receipt of the complaint, the Magistrate by following the procedure prescribed under Section 200 may issue process against the accused or dismiss the complaint. Section 203 specifically provides that after considering the statement on oath, if any, of the complainant and witnesses and the result of the inquiry or investigation, if any, under Section 202, the Magistrate is of the opinion that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding, he shall dismiss the complaint. For dismissal of complaint, he is required to briefly record his reasons for so doing. In other cases, he had to issue process i.e. either summons or warrants as the case may be as provided under Section 204. However, no summons or warrant is to be issued against the accused until a list of the prosecution witnesses has been filed. Therefore, the question of complying with the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 202 would arise only in cases where the Magistrate before taking cognizance of the case decides to hold the inquiry and secondly in such inquiry by him, if he decides to take evidence of witnesses on oath. But the object and purpose of holding inquiry or investigation under Section 202 is to find out whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused or not and that holding of inquiry or investigation is not an indispensable course before issue of process against the accused or dismissal of the complaint. It is an enabling provision to form an opinion as to whether or not process should be issued and to remove from his mind any hesitation that he may have felt upon the mere perusal of the complaint and the consideration of the complainant's evidence on oath. Rosy v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 637 : (2000) 2 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 379 (387, 388) : 2000 CrLJ 930.

[7271] ● Nature and scrutiny of evidence.—It is settled law that the inquiry under Section 202 is of a limited nature. Firstly, to find out whether there is a prima facie case in issuing process against the person accused of the offence in the complaint and secondly, to prevent the issue of process in the complaint which is either false or vexatious or intended only to harass such a person. At that stage, the evidence is not to be meticulously appreciated, as the limited purpose being of finding out "whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused". The standard to be adopted by the Magistrate in scrutinising the evidence is also not the same as the one which is to be kept in view at the stage of framing charges. At the stage of inquiry under Section 202, CrPC the accused has no right to intervene and that it is the duty of the Magistrate while making an inquiry to elicit all facts not merely with a view to protect the interests of an absent accused person, but also with a view to bring to book a person or persons against whom grave allegations are made. Rosy v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 637 : (2000) 2 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 379 (388) : 2000 CrLJ 930.

[7272] ● Standard of proof in scrutinizing evidence.—The instant case dealt with the case where instead of finding out a prima facie case made out against the accused, the Magistrate passed an order by meticulously appreciating the evidence in a case exclusively triable by a Sessions Court, at the stage of Sections 203 and 204. The Magistrate committed an irregularity by exceeding his jurisdiction.

"At the stage of Sections 203 and 204, Criminal Procedure Code in a case exclusively triable by the Court of Session, all that the Magistrate has to do is to see whether on a cursory perusal of the complaint and the evidence recorded during the preliminary inquiry under Sections 200 and 202, Criminal Procedure Code, there is prima facie evidence in support of the charge levelled against the accused. All that he has to see is whether or not there is 'sufficient ground for proceeding' against the accused." At this stage, the Magistrate is not to weigh the evidence meticulously as if he were the trial Court. The standard to be adopted by the Magistrate in scrutinising the evidence is not the same as the one which is to be kept in view at the stage of framing charges....The standard of proof and judgment, which is to be applied finally before finding the accused guilty or otherwise, is not exactly to be applied at the stage of framing charges. A fortiori, at the stage of Sections 202/204, if there is prima facie evidence in support of the allegations in the complaint relating to a case exclusively triable by the Court of Session, that will be a sufficient ground for issuing process to the accused and committing them for trial to the Court of Session." Rosy v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 637 : (2000) 2 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 379 (389) : 2000 CrLJ 930.

[7273] ● Order of discharge not challenged, subsequent application for trial not maintainable.—On a complaint case was registered for offences under Sections 498-A and 313 of the IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1971. After investigation, charge-sheet was filed. However, Dr. (Mrs.) Snehlata Mukherjee was discharged. The remaining accused filed an application to delete Section 313 of the IPC from the charge-sheet as no case was made out for the said offence. The learned Magistrate, allowed the application and the charge against the accused under Section 313 of the IPC was deleted. The petitioner did not challenge the order discharging the accused for offence under Section 313 of the IPC. An application was filed on behalf of the petitioner to proceed for the trial of the accused under Section 313 of the IPC. The said application was dismissed against which order a Criminal Revision Petition was preferred by the petitioner before the High Court. The High Court disposed of the said revision petition in the following terms:—"In the result, I find no reason to interfere with the impugned order except that the previous order of the Chief Judicial Magistrate discharging the accused persons of the offence under Section 313, IPC would be no bar to the committal of the case in accordance with the provisions of Section 323 of the Code. With this observation, this application is dismissed. However, it is made clear that if on examination of the remaining witnesses and on looking to the relevant documents brought on the record in course of the trial, the Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate finds that the accused persons before him, or any of them is shown to have committed offence under Section 313 of the IPC or for that matter, even of its abetment, he may commit the case to the Court of Session either on application made for the purpose by the prosecution, or suo motu." Thereafter, the learned Magistrate, having already recorded evidence of two witnesses, continued the trial and recorded the evidence of six more witnesses. In compliance with the directions given by the High Court as extracted above, he passed a detailed order holding that it was not necessary to commit the case to the Court of Session and posted the case for recording the statements of the accused. It is this order, which was challenged before the High Court and the High Court, by the impugned order, dismissed the revision petition filed by the petitioner. Hence, this petition. The main thrust of the argument of the learned Counsel for the petitioner was that the learned Magistrate committed a manifest error in appreciating the evidence produced by the prosecution as required for final disposal of the case either to convict or acquit the accused instead of considering only as to whether there was prima facie material to constitute a charge for offence under Section 313 of the IPC. Looking to the narration of facts made above, it is clear that the order discharging Dr. Snehlata for the offence under Section 313 of the IPC was not challenged. The order made by the High Court on an earlier occasion was also not challenged. The learned Magistrate complied with the directions given by the High Court in the said revision petition. No fault can be found with the order of the learned Magistrate when he proceeded to record the evidence of six more witnesses and thereafter passed the order holding that no case was made out to commit the accused for trial under Section 313 of the IPC by the Sessions Court. The learned Magistrate was bound to follow the directions given by the High Court in the aforementioned revision petition. When the petitioner did not challenge the order of the High Court, she cannot now say that the learned Magistrate should not have taken into account the evidence of 8 witnesses examined in passing the detailed order holding that it was not necessary to commit the case to the Court of Session. Harjinder Kaur v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2001 SC 3716 : (2001) 8 SCC 394 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 88 (89, 90) : 2002 CrLJ 78 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 856.

[7274] ● Committal proceedings—Offence found to be exclusively triable by Sessions Court.—Proviso to Section 202(1) lays down that direction for investigation shall not be made where it appears to the Magistrate that the offence complained of is triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions or where the complaint has not been made by a Court unless the complainant and the witnesses have been examined on oath under Section 200. Under Section 202(2), the Magistrate making an inquiry under sub-section (1) can take evidence of the witnesses on oath. If the Magistrate thinks that the offence complained of is triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions then in terms of proviso to Section 202, he is required to call upon the complainant to produce all his witnesses and examine them on oath. Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, AIR 2010 SC 2261 : (2010) 7 SCC 578 : JT 2010 (7) 271 : 2010 CrLJ 3827 : 2010 (3) Crimes 188 (SC).

[7275] ● Duty of Magistrate in committal proceedings.—The Magistrate is entitled to sift and weigh the materials on record, but only for seeing whether there is sufficient evidence for commitment, and not whether there is sufficient evidence for conviction. If there is no prima facie evidence or the evidence is totally unworthy of credit, it is the duty of the Magistrate to discharge the accused, on the other hand, if there is some evidence on which the conviction may reasonably be based, he must commit the case. Sajjan Kumar v. Central Bureau of Investigation, (2010) 9 SCC 368 : JT 2010 (10) 413.

COMMON INTENTION

[7276] ● Sharing common intention.—In a case in which the only evidence against the accused is that they were present and standing together at the time when one of them fired a fatal shot at the deceased, the possibility remains that the one who fired did so without the others having shared with him the intention to cause death, and unless that possibility is eliminated by some evidence indicative of a meeting of the minds between them all, the mere presence of the other accused on the spot cannot be sufficient to hold them guilty with the aid of Section 34. Before conviction with the aid of Section 34 can be sustained there must be some evidence from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that the accused shared the intention of the one who fired the shot to kill the deceased, but such evidence may be either of a pre-arranged plan to murder, or may be of some act or circumstance on the spot which is indicative of the common intention. In the absence of any such evidence the mere fact that all the accused were seen by witnesses at the place and at the time of the firing, is not sufficient to prove common intention.

In such a case if it cannot be proved, who fired the fatal shot, none of the persons present can be convicted of murder and all of them would be entitled to the benefit of doubt and must be acquitted. In such a case if the evidence as to a previous conspiracy between the accused has been rejected and the accused are acquitted under Section 120-B, that evidence must be held to be equally insufficient to establish the charge of common intention under Section 34. Ram Nath Madhoprasad v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1953 SC 420 : 1953 CrLJ 1772.

[7277] ● Sudden consensus of mind.—For the applicability of Section 34, a pre-concert in the sense of a distinct previous plan is not necessary. Common intention to bring about a particular result may well develop on the spot of a sudden, and may be established from proof of circumstances showing that after some persons gathered at the scene of occurrence there developed a sudden consensus of their minds to bring about a particular result.

In other words, the common intention to bring about a particular result can be proved from the conduct of the accused and the circumstances of the case, and it is a question of fact to be determined from the attendant circumstances whether what developed on the spot was only simultaneous conduct under different intentions, or was a consensus of minds to bring about a particular result.

In the present case three accused A, B and C were charged under Section 302/34 Penal Code. The evidence on record accepted by both the Courts below was as under. There was a long-standing dispute over land between them and the deceased X. One morning the accused who were working in their field saw two labourers going to the field of X for working there. The accused shouted at them not to do so, but they did not listen and walked on. Thereupon the accused rushed at them and began belabouring them with the handles of their spears. In the meantime X arrived there and intervened, which set the accused attacking him. First B and C attacked him on his legs and he fell down. Then A stabbed X with his spear on the head, and then putting his leg on X's chest, he extracted the spear blade from the jaw where it had stuck. The blow went through the skull and injured the brain, so that X died on the spot.

(i) So far as A was concerned, the blow was given with deliberate intention on the head of a fallen and helpless man lying on the ground, and was given with much force so as to penetrate the skull with a sharp and pointed instrument. Therefore, the case did not fall under Exception 4 to Section 300, even though A may have acted without premeditation in a sudden quarrel in the heat of the moment. Conviction under Section 302 and sentence of death were maintained.

(ii) So far as B and C were concerned, in view of the circumstances of the case, it could not be said that what developed between all the accused, on the spot was a common intention to kill X. The only common intention which could be attributed to them was intention to beat X with weapons which were likely to produce grievous injuries. Therefore, they were not guilty under Section 302/34. But even though the injuries they themselves had caused were simple, they were guilty under Section 326/34, because of the common intention of all to attack X with sharp cutting weapons. Kripal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 706 : 1954 CrLJ 1755.

[7278] ● Object and intention.—'Object' is a different state of mind from "intention", and though the object of the members of an unlawful assembly may be common, their intentions may differ. In Section 34 the principal element is the common intention of several persons to commit a crime, and it provides that if in furtherance of the common intention several acts are done by several persons which result in a crime, each one of those persons is liable for that crime in the same manner as if all those acts had been done by him alone. On the other hand, in Section 149 there is no question of common intention and what is required is only a common object. It provides that if any one member of an unlawful assembly commits an offence, then all the other members of that assembly are liable for it, even though there was no common intention between him and them to commit it, provided that the conditions of that section are fulfilled, namely, (a) that the offence was committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or (b) that it is of such a nature that the other members knew it to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Thus, the community of intention required by Section 34 is replaced in Section 149 by community of object, which is quite a different element. Nanak Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 274 : 1955 CrLJ 721 : 1955 SCR 1201 : 1955 SCA 272.

[7279] ● Essential feature, participation in action.—The essential feature of Section 34 is participation in action, and unless the Court is satisfied that an accused has participated, that is, taken some part in the actual commission of an offence, he cannot be held guilty by the application of Section 34. On the other hand, Section 149 does not require any participation in the commission of an offence, and this element is replaced by the requirement as to membership of the unlawful assembly at the time of its commission by another member of that assembly. Nanak Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 274 : 1955 CrLJ 721 : 1955 SCR 1201 : 1955 SCA 272.

[7280] ● Criminal act jointly done by several persons.—Section 34 only explains that when a criminal act is jointly done by several persons who are actuated by a common intention in furtherance of that intention, each of them is liable for it as if the whole of it had been done by him alone. On the other hand, Section 149 creates constructive criminal liability for an act done entirely by another person, provided the conditions of that section are fulfilled. It creates a specific offence and provides the punishment for the offence. Nanak Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 274 : 1955 CrLJ 721 : 1955 SCR 1201.

[7281] ● Distinction between S. 34 and S. 149, IPC.—There is a clear distinction between the elements of Section 34 and Section 149, and the application of these sections is not to be confused. The facts of a case may be such that the elements of both Section 34 and Section 149 may exist, in which case the accused may be charged and convicted under both. But cases do arise in which the elements of one of these two sections exist but not of the other. The distinction becomes important in cases in which the charge under Section 149 fails in respect of some of the accused only, and as a result even the remaining accused cannot be convicted under that section because of their number falling below five. In such cases the question still remains whether the remaining accused can be convicted under Section 34, and in such cases the Court has to examine the facts and circumstances of the case before it for determining whether the elements of Section 34 exist or not. Nanak Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 274 : 1955 CrLJ 721 : 1955 SCA 272 : 1955 SCJ 241 : 1955 SCR 1201 : 1955 1 MLJ (SC) 141 : 1955 MWN 326 : 1955 AWR (Sup) 59 : ILR (1955) Punj 154.

[7282] ● Evidence indicating sharing common intention.—Common intention requires a prior meeting of the minds, and presupposes some prior concert. For the purpose of establishing common intention it is not enough to show that several persons simultaneously attacked a man and each inflicted a blow. It is also not enough to prove that each of the assailants had the intention to kill. The mere fact that each had the same intention is not sufficient for invoking Section 34, because each may have entertained the same intention independently of the others.

Some evidence indicative of a common intention shared by each is essential before there can be a conviction with the aid of Section 34, and in the absence of any evidence from which a prior meeting of the minds of the assailants could be reasonably inferred, none of the accused could be convicted with the use of that section for the acts of the others. In such a case, even if it be clearly proved against any accused that he had the intention to kill, he could not be convicted of murder if it has not been established that it was he who delivered the fatal blow.

Further, it is not enough to show that all the accused had shared some common intention other than that to kill the deceased, because for the purpose of Section 34 what is required is some proof of a common intention to commit the very offence of which the accused are sought to be convicted with its aid. Pandurang Tukea v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572.

[7283] ● In furtherance of common intention of all.—However, in order to establish a common intention it is not necessary that there should have been an elaborate or a pre-arranged plan between the accused some time before the assault. The common intention could develop suddenly and on the spot. But some indication of the development of the common intention on the part of the others to join in a fatal assault in which only one of them has given the fatal blow, before the fatal blow has been given, is absolutely necessary before it could be said that such blow was given "in furtherance of the common intention of all." Pandurang Tukea v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572.

[7284] ● Proof by circumstantial evidence.—It is not necessary that there should be direct proof of a pre-arranged plan in every case, and common intention can be gathered even from evidence which is purely circumstantial. For example, when one of the assailants shouts to the others to join in the assault and they indicate their assent by some word or act.

But when the prosecution case as to common intention rests only on circumstances from which that intention has to be inferred, the circumstances which are proved must be such as necessarily lead to that inference. In other words, the inference of common intention should not be drawn unless the circumstances leading up to that inference are such as to be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation on any hypothesis except that of his guilt. But to say this is no more than to repeat the normal rule about circumstantial evidence, since there is no special rule of evidence for proof of common intention. Each case must rest on its own facts for the purpose of any conclusion which can be drawn as to common intention inferrable from those facts. Pandurang Tukea v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572.

[7285] ● Question of fact—Cumulative effect.—Circumstances such as under are relevant for the purpose of establishing common intention:

(a) Common motive or enmity or ill-will which is shared by all the accused, or the fact that they all belong to a faction or family which is on terms of rivalry with the faction or family to which the deceased belonged, or

(b) previous conduct of the assailants, immediately before the occurrence, such as, that they had met together and came in a body to the spot where the incident occurred, or

(c) subsequent conduct of the assailants, such as, that they all ran away after the attack in a body or in the same direction, or that they were all absconding after the happening of the incident.

However, the question whether any set of circumstances established against the accused in any case is or is not sufficient for the purpose of establishing their common intention, is a question of fact which depends upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case, and no general rule can be laid down in that behalf which is universally applicable. All that can be said in this connection is that though any one or more of the facts so established may not be sufficient by itself or themselves for the purpose of proving common intention, yet the cumulative effect of several such facts happening together may be such in its nature as to justify the inference as to the common intention of the accused. Pandurang Tukea v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572 : 1955 SCR 1083.

[7286] ● Circumstantial evidence.—In the present case it was proved—

(a) that A, B and C were armed with axes,

(b) that each of them gave a blow to the deceased,

(c) that the blows given by A and B were fatal, but the blow given by C was not fatal and was not such as could be called 'likely to cause death',

(d) that two other persons armed with sticks were present at the occurrence,

(e) that all the eye-witnesses had arrived only after the assault had started, and none of them knew what had happened on the spot before the assault, (f) that a witness stated that when she tried to remonstrate, some of the five accused had raised their weapons, but she could not say which of them did it,

(g) that all the accused ran away after the villagers had gathered, but not together or in the same direction,

(h) that all the accused were absconding for some days after the occurrence,

(i) that C was of a different caste, and that there was no enmity against the deceased which he shared with A or B

On this evidence it was held that A and B were guilty under Section 302. The two other persons who were merely present with sticks were acquitted, being given the benefit of doubt. The question was whether Section 34 or Section 149 could be invoked against C, and if so, in connection with what offence.

(1) On these facts it had not been proved that the fatal injuries caused by A and B had been caused in furtherance of the common intention of all, or that C had shared with them a common intention to murder.

(2) On these facts it had not been proved beyond doubt that there was an unlawful assembly of five persons or that C knew it to be likely that A or B would commit a fatal assault.

(3) The facts established were, therefore, not sufficient for the conviction of C either under Section 302/34 or Section 302/149 and he could be convicted only under Section 326 for the blow which he had himself given to the deceased. Pandurang Tukea v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572.

[7287] ● Participation in action.—In Section 34, the emphasis is on the word ‘done’, and the section applies only when several persons join in the actual ‘doing’ of a criminal act, and not merely on their planning its commission. In other words, participation in action is the basis of the offence, and before the section can apply, participation in action must be established by evidence, to show some active or passive part taken in the crime, or by evidence of presence at the place in such circumstances as clearly indicate the intention of participation. Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCJ 233.

[7288] ● Abetment not amounting to participation.—In the present case, the accused who was a public servant was charged and convicted under Section 409/34, Penal Code, the prosecution case was that the accused who was in charge of a Government Depot and his companions had permitted Government stores to pass out of the Depot and had thus ‘wilfully suffered another person to convert those stores to his own use’. There was evidence on record that the accused had abetted the removal by planning it with his companions, and there was also clear evidence that the goods had been loaded in a truck and had been passed out of the gates. However, there was no evidence to show that the accused was present at the time when goods were so removed, and the defence of the accused was that in fact he was not present at the depot at the time of the removal. On the facts proved the accused could have been convicted on the charge of abetment, but the charge under Section 409/34 must fail in the absence of any proof of his presence during the removal of the goods from the depot under his charge. Evidence as to planning the removal could have established abetment of the offence under Section 409, but such planning could not amount to participation. Conviction was set aside. Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCJ 233.

[7289] ● Inference from surrounding circumstances and conduct of parties.—“Common intention” under Section 34 presupposes a prior concert, that is a prior meeting of the minds, but such pre-concert can develop on the spot and without any long interval of time between it and the doing of the act commonly intended.

Direct evidence of a prior plan to commit an offence is not necessary in every case, and in fact such a plan may not in fact have existed. In such a case the common intention can be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties. If, from the evidence on record as to the existence of circumstances from which the common intention of the accused can well be inferred, the trial Court comes to the conclusion that the common intention of the accused was established, and on appeal the High Court accepts that inference as correct, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with the concurrent finding of fact by both the Courts below, unless the facts and circumstances relied upon, in support of the finding are clearly capable of an explanation establishing the innocence of the accused.

In the present case the evidence of prosecution witnesses was that they saw the two accused A and B, who were brothers, standing near the cot of the victim who had been sleeping, that A was armed with a gandasa and B with lathi, and that on a hue and cry being raised they both ran away together. The medical evidence was that the deceased died of an incised wound on the neck which was necessarily fatal.

On these facts the Sessions Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that B shared with A the common intention to cause death, and there was no reason to interfere with his conviction under Section 302/34. Rishi Deo Pande v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1955 SC 334 : 1955 CrLJ 873.

[7290] ● Participation in action essential.—The decision in Shreekantiah's case does not lay down, that physical presence is essential for a conviction with the aid of Section 34 in every case. In that case the Court was dealing with the antithesis between the preliminary stages of agreement and planning covered by Section 109 and the final stage of the actual commission of the offence covered by Section 34, and what the Court held was that mere previous planning was not participation, that participation in action was an essential condition of the application of Section 34, and that participation in action required presence of the accused at the scene of occurrence.

The observations of the Court were made in a case in which the offence was of such a character, that it could be committed only by a person who was physically present at the spot of the offence, and they can have no application where the offence is of such a nature, that participation in its commission by two or more accused is possible, though they may not be together in the same place and one who is in a different place could join in its commission.

The facts established in the present case showed that the accused himself committed the offence of cheating, though he did so not by himself but with the aid of others. He himself was the principal offender, and hence he could have been charged and convicted under Section 420 substantive. Under these circumstances there would be nothing illegal if the Court convicted him under Section 420, though the charge was under Section 420/34, because no possible prejudice would be caused by so doing. Such a course was, however, not necessary because the offence of cheating is of such a nature, that the offence can be committed in one place though the offender may be residing in another, and a person can be convicted with the aid of Section 34 though he may not be physically present at the place where the offence is committed. Mobarak Ali Ahmed v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCJ 233.

[7291] ● Physical presence essential.—Physical presence at the place of offence is essential for the application of Section 34 if the offence is such as can be committed only on the spot.

It is of the essence of Section 34 that the accused must be physically present at the actual commission of the offence. He need not be present in the very room in which the offence is committed, but he must be present somewhere nearby, say, standing guard at the gate of the house, or remaining on watch on the road outside. What is essential is that he must be physically present at the scene of occurrence, and the presence must be such as to indicate his actual participation in the commission of the offence in one way or another say, by keeping guard outside in readiness for warning his companions of any approaching danger or interference, or by posting himself so as to facilitate quick escape. Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCA 283 : 1955 SCJ 233 : 1955 SCR 1177 : 1955 MWN 317 : 57 BomLR 632 : 1955 AWR (Sup) 65.

[7292] ● Agreement, preparation and planning.—The antithesis between Section 109 and Section 34 lies in this that Section 109 covers the preliminary stages of agreement, preparation and planning, while Section 34 covers the last stage of actual commission of the offence when those plans are put into effect and carried out. Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287 : 1955 CrLJ 857 : 1955 SCJ 233.

[7293] ● Common intention and common object.—No doubt, participation can be passive as well as active, but in one form or another participation is essential for the application of Section 34, and there cannot be any participation unless the participant is physically present at the scene of occurrence.

To a certain extent Sections 34 and 149 overlap each other, but there is an essential difference between the two sections as regards their constituent elements. The basic element of Section 149 is membership of an unlawful assembly in which every member shares with the other members the common unlawful object of that assembly. The basic element of Section 34 is the sharing of a common unlawful intention in furtherance of which they all join in committing an offence. Under Section 149 participation in the commission of an offence is not required, and the liability under it is only a constructive liability for an offence committed by one or more of the other members of that assembly.

It follows that when several accused are charged in any case under Section 302/149 and that charge fails, it is not open to the Court in every case to convict the accused under Section 302/34. In cases in which the facts are such as to establish common intention as well as common object, and further if those facts show the participation of all or some of the accused in the commission of the murder, conviction with the aid of Section 34 may be justified when the charge under Section 149 fails by reason of the acquittal of some of the accused and the number of the remaining accused falling below five. But in cases in which either of the two ingredients of Section 34, namely, common intention and participation in action, is lacking, conviction under Section 34 is a clear illegality and must be set aside.

In such a case, the question of considering the effect of any irregularity in procedure arising from the omission to frame a charge under Section 302/34 does not at all arise, and the conviction is bad whether such a charge has or has not been framed, In other words, when any essential element of Section 34 is missing, the conviction is illegal, not because of any mere defect in procedure, but because the very accusation against the accused has not been proved. The question of considering the effect of any irregularity in procedure arises only in those cases in which on the evidence on record the elements of Section 34 are proved to exist, but a contravention of Section 233, CrPC has occurred by reason of the charge under Section 34 not having been framed. Chikkarange Gowda v. State of Mysore, AIR 1956 SC 731 : 1956 CrLJ 1365 : 1957 KerLT 25 : ILR (1956) Mys 377.

[7294] ● Offence committed jointly with unidentified persons.—In the present case, there accused persons who had been jointly tried before a Sessions Court were found guilty under Section 302/34. On appeal, the High Court acquitted two of them by giving them the benefit of doubt as to their identity, but it confirmed the conviction of the remaining accused because, after carefully considering the evidence, it was satisfied that his identity was clearly established, and that he had committed the offence jointly with two other unidentified persons. There was no illegality in such a conviction. Wasim Khan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 400 : 1956 CrLJ 790 : 1956 SCA 549 : 1956 SCJ 437 : 1956 SCR 191 : ILR (1956) 2 All 127 : 1956 ALJ 457.

[7295] ● Sharing common intention with other offenders.—A charge under Section 34, IPC can be sustained only when it is proved that an accused shared the common intention to commit an offence with one or more others and that he joined in the commission of that offence in furtherance of the common intention of all. It is not necessary for the application of Section 34 that the other persons with whom he joined in the commission of the offence should be known to the prosecution or that they must be put up as co-accused. Thus, when a person is charged under Section 34, the charge can be in either of the following two forms, (a) that A committed the offence jointly with specified and named persons B, C and D, who are co-accused at the same trial, or (b) that A committed the offence jointly with some persons who are unknown and whose identity cannot be traced. But in either case, before conviction of A under Section 34 could be upheld, common intention to commit an offence jointly with at least one other person, known or unknown, would have to be proved either by direct evidence or by legitimate inference from circumstances.

When, therefore, the whole gravamen of the charge and of the evidence is that an accused A committed an offence jointly with specified and known persons who are co-accused at the trial, and not with some others who are unknown, and all the other accused are acquitted, the element of sharing a common intention, which is of the very essence of a charge under Section 34, disappears, and the charge must fail.

On the other hand, when the other accused are acquitted, not because there is any doubt, as to their participation in the commission of the offence, but because there is a doubt as to their identity as the actual assailants, the conviction of even a single accused under Section 34 would be justified, because in such a case there is no doubt that he shared the common intention with other offenders, though it cannot be proved beyond doubt who they were. Prabhu Babaji Navle v. State of Bombay, AIR 1956 SC 51 : 1956 CrLJ 147.

[7296] ● "Common intention" and "common object".—The expressions 'common intention' and 'common object' have been used in different senses in the Penal Code, and they should not be confused as having the same meaning or import. 'Common intention' under Section 34 requires a pre-concert, that is, a prior meeting of the minds of the offenders who jointly do a criminal act, though such pre-concert may develop on the spot and may not be the result of a prior plan. On the other hand, 'common object' under Section 149 does not require any such meeting of the minds, and for the purpose of that section it is enough that each accused has the same unlawful object in mind, provided that the number of the persons who share that object is at least five. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 :

1955 CrLJ 923 : 1956 SCJ 503 : 1956 SCR 288 : 1956 SCA 781 : 1956 ALT 583 : 1956 AWR (Sup) 83.

[7297] ● "Common intention" and "common object".—It may happen in any case that both "common intention" and "common object" may be present and may overlap, and the members of the unlawful assembly might not only share the same unlawful object, but might also have held the common intention to commit an offence and might have participated in its commission. It is only in such cases that the accused can be charged both under Section 34 and Section 149. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 : 1955 CrLJ 923 : 1956 SCJ 503 : 1956 SCA 781.

[7298] ● Actuated with common intention.—Conviction with the aid of Section 34 can be justified only when it is proved beyond doubt that the accused were actuated with the common intention to commit a crime. It is not enough to show merely that they entertained the same or similar intention.

However, for the purpose of establishing that the accused shared a common intention, it is not necessary to prove in every case that there was any prior or prearranged plan or a prior meeting between the accused. All that is required for the purpose of establishing common intention is that there was a meeting of the minds of the accused before the offence was committed.

A meeting of the minds of the accused may have developed some time before the commission of the offence, in which case, evidence of a prior plan or meeting between the accused would certainly furnish evidence of common intention. However, a meeting of the minds of the accused may well develop on the very spot of the incident after the accused have gathered there, in which case, in the very nature of things a prior plan or meeting has not existed, and yet common intention could be established from circumstances indicating that all the accused consciously shared a common unlawful intention of committing the crime.

In the present case, it was proved that several accused jointly attacked a man with lathis when he was passing through a field, and that when he had run away after eluding them, they all attacked him again.

These facts were sufficient to prove that the accused had been actuated with the common intention to assault the victim. Conviction under Section 326 read with Section 34 was sustained. Khacheru Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 546 : 1956 CrLJ 950.

[7299] ● Proof by direct evidence, circumstantial evidence or conduct of parties.— Common intention to commit an offence can be proved either by direct evidence of a pre-arranged plan or by evidence of circumstances or conduct from which such intention can be legitimately inferred.

If the only evidence on record is that the accused were armed with sticks and that at the time, when the deceased was attacked by one person others rushed to the spot, that evidence in itself cannot prove the common criminal intention. If there is no evidence, that they did something or said something (such as shouting to others to attack, or rushing in after receiving an order to attack, or pursuing a man who was attempting to escape) from which a reasonable inference of sharing a common intention to attack can be drawn, common intention must be held to have remained unproved.

In such a case the possibility remains that their presence at or their rushing to the spot, might be the result of an innocent intention, and if the accused explain their conduct by saying that they acted with a view to prevent the crime, the explanation must be accepted, particularly if they are relatives or otherwise interested in the deceased.

The mere fact that blood is found on the dhoti of an accused at one spot is not necessarily corroboration of the fact of participation in the attack, but is only corroboration of his presence, because blood can soil a clothing on the person of a man whether he goes close to an injured man for rescue or for attack, and in the absence of any other evidence, it is not definite proof of participation in crime. Prabhu Babaji Navle v. State of Bombay, AIR 1956 SC 51 : 1956 CrLJ 147.

[7300] ● Prior instigation and actual presence at the commission of offence amount to participation.—A mere direction from one person to another to commit a particular offence does not amount in every case, also to participation with a common intention falling under Section 34 of the Code, and may amount only to 'abetment' arising out of instigation. But when several persons who are all armed with deadly weapons, go to a particular place for the set purpose of committing a serious offence, and when resisted, the leader gives an order to one of his band to fire as a result of which the follower fires shots which kill a man, while the leader keeps himself in readiness on the spot to see that his order is carried out, it must be held that the murder committed was a joint criminal act done in furtherance of the common intention of both which makes the man who gave the order liable under Section 302 read with Section 34. In such a case the order to shoot is much more than a mere instigation to commit an offence, and common intention to kill must be attributed to both. However, even if the order to shoot be held to be abetment only, if the instigator is present at the time of the commission of the offence committed in consequence of his order, the instigator shall be "deemed" to have committed the murder, by reason of Section 114 of the Code which says that if an abettor is present at the time when the offence abetted is committed "he shall be deemed to have himself committed such offence". Section 114 raises an irrebuttable presumption of law, namely that, prior instigation plus actual presence at the commission of an offence amounts to participation, and when both these ingredients exist, a given case can well fall also under Section 34 of the Code.

In the present case, the accused was charged under Section 302 and the charge read "On...., you A along with one B, since dead, murdered X by fire from gun shots, and you thereby committed the offence punishable under Section 302, Penal Code". The prosecution case was that a band of communists went in a body, to a village at night time and that when they were dragging a man outside the village, a crowd of villagers gathered on the spot. Fearing resistance A, who was the leader of the band, ordered one of his men, B, who had a gun, to fire at the crowd and some time later, in the presence of A, B fired shots which killed a man. The trial Court convicted A under Section 302 and on appeal the conviction was confirmed by the High Court.

On these facts the case fell both under Section 302/34 and under Section 302/114, and in either view A who had given the order to shoot was guilty of the offence of murder, though he had not caused death by his own hands. Conviction under Section 302 was confirmed. Mathurala Adi Reddy v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1956 SC 177 : 1956 CrLJ 341.

[7301] ● Common intention sharing of.—For the application of Section 34 it is essential that the Court must find that the accused shared with others, a common intention to commit a crime and participated in its commission. If there is no clear and acceptable evidence on record of circumstances from which a previous concert between him and other persons, known or unknown, and his participation in a joint criminal act, can be reasonably inferred, conviction with the aid of Section 34 is not justified.

In the present case three accused A, B and C, were charged under Section 302 for having participated in the murder of a person by shooting. The dying declaration of the deceased did not mention B and C at all and stated that one D fired the shot in A's presence. On the other hand two eye-witnesses stated that it was A who fired the shot while B and C were standing nearby armed with lathis.

The Sessions Judge discarded the dying declaration and relying upon the testimony of the eye-witnesses convicted all the three accused under Section 302. On appeal, the High Court accepted the dying declaration as true, and acquitted B and C, but convicted A, though it modified the conviction under Section 302 substantive to one under Section 302 read with Section 34.

In view of the fact that though the prosecution case was that it was A who fired the fatal shot, the High Court had not come to the finding that A fired it, and that in view of the omission in the dying declaration as to the names of B and C, they were acquitted because there was an element of doubt as to whether they were associates of the man who fired the fatal shot, and that there was nothing on record to show that A participated in the offence in any other manner the conviction of A also could not be sustained and he had to be set at liberty. Zabar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 465 : 1957 CrLJ 581.

[7302] ● Common intention—Inference from presence at the spot.—Mere presence even with a weapon, does not necessarily make a man, a participator in a joint crime. Common intention can be inferred from presence at the spot only when there is some circumstance to show that it was for the purpose of lending weight to the active participants in the crime.

In the present case, there was a long-standing enmity between two rival factions in a village, and chapter proceedings under the CrPC were pending against members of both factions. On a day fixed for hearing in a Magistrate's Court in a neighbouring town, members of both factions left their village armed with sticks and lathis. While one faction was waiting for the bus on the roadside, the other faction came up, and a fight developed in which severe injuries were caused on both sides as a result of which one man died. The members of the opposite faction were charged and convicted under Section 302/34. The mere fact that an accused was proved to have been carrying a lethal weapon and was present on the spot when the fight took place did not establish common intention to commit murder or any other offence. Carrying of a weapon, under these circumstances may well be ascribed to a natural desire to protect oneself in case a trouble developed.

Mere presence of a person at the spot of the crime armed with a deadly weapon does not necessarily make a man a participator in a joint crime in every case, because for the purpose of Section 34, only such presence makes a man a participant in a joint crime as is established to be with the intention of lending weight to the commission of a joint crime. Jumman v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 469 : 1957 CrLJ 586.

[7303] ● Common Intention question of fact.—Intention is a question of fact and has to be determined from all the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the accused. When persons join in a fatal assault with deadly weapons, and in course of that assault, a large number of injuries are inflicted on the deceased, many of which are on vital parts, there can be no question that the assailants were actuated with a common intention to cause death.

The inference as to the common intention to murder is strengthened in such a case if it is proved that the accused, not only attacked the deceased at the place where they first met him, but they chased him when he was trying to run away and continued the assault till he fell down as a result of the injuries he had received on vital parts of his body.

In the present case it was proved that several accused had jointly attacked the deceased with lethal weapons, as a result of which he received as many as 24 incised wounds on the head, shoulders and forearms, which were of varying degrees of seriousness, and which 'taken as a whole were fatal'. Of these injuries one was an incised wound on the neck which had cut the artery and was 'sufficient to cause death', but it was not established which of the accused had given the blow which caused that injury. On these facts common intention to murder was proved and conviction for the offence under Section 302 read with Section 34 of all the accused who had participated in the assault was justified. B.N. Shrikantiah v. State of Mysore, AIR 1958 SC 672 : 1958 CrLJ 1251 : 1958 SCJ 918.

[7304] ● In furtherance of common intention.—In the present case, twelve persons were charged under Section 302/34. The case against them was that they were all members of a hostile mob which had attacked and killed three brothers working in a field. Eight of the accused were acquitted on the ground that their identity was not clearly established, but the remaining four were convicted under Section 302/34, though it was not clearly established who gave the fatal blows. It was contended that the fatal blows might have been given, not by any one of the four convicted accused, but by some unknown persons in the mob or by some of the acquitted accused, and that even assuming that the convicted four had the necessary common intention of killing, in the absence of a clear finding that the convicted accused alone caused the fatal injuries, none of them could be held liable for murder with the aid of Section 34, unless it was alleged and proved by the prosecution, that whoever gave the fatal blows gave them in furtherance of the common intention of themselves and the convicted accused. In other words, it was contended, that when twelve named persons are said to have committed murder in furtherance of the common intention of all those twelve only and none else, and then eight of them are acquitted, it is not open to the prosecution to say that the remaining four committed the murder, merely on the finding that they had a common intention to murder, but without any proof whatsoever that they or any of them gave the fatal blows, or that the persons who gave the fatal blows, did so, in furtherance of the common intention of themselves and the convicted accused. The contentions raised were without any substance. The legal position as to the application of Section 34 does not admit of any doubt or difficulty and is as stated above. In the present case, it had been clearly found that the four convicted persons had participated in the assault in furtherance of the common intention to commit murder, and that the common intention was achieved by committing the intended murder. As soon as these facts were proved the application of Section 34 was attracted, and hence the conviction of the four accused whose identity was clearly established under Section 302/34 was perfectly justified. No doubt the prosecution was unable to show who gave the fatal blows, or what exact part each assailant played, but that is exactly the circumstance which Section 34 is intended to meet, and once the conditions for the application of that section are satisfied, conviction, with its aid of those of the accused who were amongst the assailants is clearly sustained. Bharwad Mepa Danna v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 289 : 1960 CrLJ 424 : 1960 SCJ 478.

[7305] ● Tests for determining common intention.—When some of the accused charged at a joint trial under Section 34, IPC are acquitted, the test for determining whether the remaining accused could be convicted under Section 34 is this—did the remaining accused share a common intention to commit a crime, and did they participate in its commission. If on the evidence on record such intention and participation are established, there is nothing illegal in their conviction under Section 34. If after the acquittal of the other accused for want of evidence as to their identity, only a single accused remains whose identity is clearly established, in the very nature of things, his conviction under Section 34 can be upheld only when it is proved beyond doubt, that he shared the common intention to commit the offence committed, with some persons other than the acquitted accused. If conditions for the application of Section 34 do exist, it is immaterial in such a case whether the prosecution has or has not succeeded in proving who gave the fatal blow or blows. Bharwad Mepa Danna v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 289 : 1960 CrLJ 424 : (1960) 2 SCR 172.

[7306] ● In furtherance of common intention of all.—Once it is found that a criminal act was in furtherance of the common intention of all, Section 34 applies and each of such persons is liable for the act done as if it were done by him alone. The section is intended to meet cases in which it may be difficult to distinguish between the acts of different members of a party who act, in furtherance of the common intention of all, or to prove exactly what part was taken by each of them. The principle which Section 34 embodies is participation in action with a common unlawful intention. Once participation with such intention is established, the application of Section 34 is attracted.

In a case in which several persons are charged under Section 302/34, even if some of the accused are acquitted because their identity is not established, the rest of the accused whose identity is clearly established, could be convicted of murder with the aid of Section 34, provided that the Court arrives at a clear finding that all of them shared the common intention of committing murder, that they participated in the assault in furtherance of such intention, and that the deceased died of a fatal blow given by some one of the assailants. Bharwad Mepa Danna v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 289 : 1960 CrLJ 424 : (1960) 2 SCR 172 : 1960 SCJ 478.

[7307] ● Application of S. 34, IPC.—The essence of the liability under Section 34 lies in the existence of a common intention animating the offenders which leads to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention. The presence of the offender sought to be made liable under Section 34 at the scene of the offence is not, on the words of the statute, one of the conditions of its applicability. Participation in action is the leading feature of Section 34, and to establish joint responsibility for an offence, what needs to be established is that a criminal act was 'done' by several persons in furtherance of the common intention. The participation required for the purpose of Section 34 is participation in doing the act, and not merely in its planning. 'Common intention' means a meeting of the minds, and the two conditions which invite the application of Section 34 are, (a) a common intention to commit an offence, and (b) participation in the commission of the intended offence in furtherance of that common intention. If both these conditions are satisfied, the application of Section 34 is invited, and nothing more is wanted for a conviction with the aid of that section, if on the evidence on record it is proved beyond doubt, that the accused shared the common intention to do an offence and participated in its commission. Jaikrishnadas Manohardas Desai v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 889 : 1960 CrLJ 1250 : 62 BomLR 893 : 1960 NagLJ 750 : 1961 MLJ (Cr) 28 : (1961) 1 SCJ 42 : (1960) 3 SCR 319.

[7308] ● Essential conditions for application of S. 34, IPC.—The two conditions essential for the application of Section 34 are, (a) a common intention to commit an offence shared by all the accused, and (b) participation in the commission of that offence in furtherance of that common intention. If both these conditions are satisfied, the application of Section 34 is invited and nothing more is wanted for a conviction. The presence at the scene of offence of the offender sought to be made liable under Section 34 is not, on the words of the statute, one of the conditions of its applicability, and it cannot be contended that such physical presence is essential in every case before Section 34 can be invoked for the purpose of convicting an accused on the principle of joint liability. No doubt, participation in the doing of a crime can be established in many cases by showing that the accused was physically present, but it need not in every case be by physical presence. In offences involving physical violence, presence of the offender at the scene of offence may be necessary for the application of Section 34, but such is not the case when there can be participation without such presence, as when the offence consists of diverse acts done at different times and places, as in the present case, (or when the offence is one of cheating by false representation made from another place, as in Mabarik Ali's case). The observations in Shreekantiah's case regarding the need for physical presence can have no application when the offence is of such a nature that it can be participated in without the offender being at any particular place, and they must be read as applying only to cases in which the offence cannot possibly be committed, without the physical presence of the offender at the scene of the offence, and not as laying down a principle of universal application to Section 34.

In the present case, the Directors of a company, who were entrusted with certain goods belonging to the Government, failed to account for those goods, and were convicted under Section 409/34. The prosecution was unable to prove exactly where the accused were during the long period during which the goods could have been misappropriated. The conviction under Section 409/34 was not illegal merely on that account. Jaikrishnadas Manohardas Desai v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 889 : 1960 CrLJ 1250 : 62 BomLR 893 : (1961) 1 SCJ 42 : (1960) 3 SCR 319 : 1960 NagLJ 750 : 1961 MLJ (Cr) 28 : 1961 AWR (HC) 54 : 1961 ACrR 17.

[7309] ● Inference of common intention from preparation for fight.—The common object to commit an offence within the meaning of Section 149 and the common intention to commit an offence within the meaning of Section 34 can be inferred from the fact that the members of the party had prepared themselves for a fight by arming themselves and had gone to the scene of offence armed for a fight. In such a case, if fight takes place and injuries are caused to the persons of the opposite party, Section 149 would apply if the party consists of five or more persons, and if not, Section 34 would apply, and all the persons composing the party are guilty of the offences arising from the injuries caused by the application of Section 149 or Section 34. In such a case, it is wholly immaterial as to who were the aggressors or who attacked first, and it cannot be contended that each accused is liable only for his own individual acts. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1961 SC 1787 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 853.

[7310] ● Once 'preparation' is established, right of private defence cannot be claimed.—Once it is established that a party was prepared for a fight and had the intention to fight and causes injuries to the other party; no member of that party can claim the right of private defence, and as their common object is to commit an offence, their common object constitutes them into an unlawful assembly. In such a case, it cannot be contended that Section 149 does not apply, and it cannot be urged that each of the accused can be convicted only for his own individual acts. In such a case, if they cause injuries to the opposite party in furtherance of their common object, Section 149 applies and each member of the unlawful assembly is liable constructively for the acts of the other persons of the unlawful assembly by reason of the application of Section 149. Further, even if in such a case it is proved that the number of the persons taking part in the assault was less than five, and hence Section 149 does not apply, Section 34 would apply and each member of the party is liable for the offences committed by the injuries caused to the opposite party by the application of Section 34. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1961 SC 1787 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 853.

[7311] ● Going to scene of offence proves common intention.—In the present case, it was clearly established that the convicted accused and their companions had gone to the scene of the offence armed and determined to fight. This showed that they had the common intention to attack the other party and to cause injuries which may result in death. Of the persons attacked, the one who had died had received two incised wounds, and another had one punctured wound. The mere fact that the appellant was not connected with the dispute about the plot of land as a result of which the fight took place, could not be urged as a ground for holding that he could not have formed a common intention with the other members of his party. Such common intention is established by the fact that he went with them and was armed. In such a case, even if the accused cannot be convicted under Section 302 and 307 read with Section 149 because of their number being less than five, the charge can be converted into one under Sections 302 and 307 read with Section 34, Penal Code. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1961 SC 1787 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 853.

[7312] ● Common intention not proved.—R did nothing at any of the three incidents, and his conduct in running with B throughout could not lead to any conclusion, that he had common intention with B to commit murder or attempt to murder. It was not the prosecution case that the two accused had any enmity with any of the victims or that they had pre-arranged between themselves, to pick up any quarrel with the victims and then to shoot them. All the three incidents had happened by accident, and the lower Courts had erred in imputing common intent to R on account of his not dissociating himself from the activities of B. The question of disassociation cannot arise against an accused unless it is first shown, that he had associated himself with the activities of the other accused. It cannot be said that R participated in the murder of M merely because after B had fired shots at L, R proceeded with B in the same direction. Such conduct might be result of bewilderment, and R could not have anticipated the second incident. Further, common intention could not be assumed merely from the fact that after M was shot down, B and R ran away simultaneously on being pursued by the villagers, because such running away could have been motivated by the instinct of saving himself from his pursuers. Finally, possession of an axe at the time of the incidents was not a circumstance against R, as possession of such a weapon is often a matter of course with villagers, for doing their daily work. Under the circumstances, it must be held that it was not proved, that R had common intention with B in his three acts of shooting, and his conviction under Section 302/34 or 307/34 could not be sustained on his mere presence with B throughout the three incidents in the case. R's appeal was allowed and his conviction was set aside. Banwari v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1198 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 278.

[7313] ● Other evidence satisfactory and cogent.—Cases sometimes arise where persons are charged with being members of an unlawful assembly and other charges are framed against them, in respect of offences committed by such an unlawful assembly. In such cases, if the names of persons constituting the unlawful assembly are specifically and clearly recited, in the charge and it is not suggested, that any other persons known or unknown also were members of the unlawful assembly, it may be that if one or more persons specifically charged are acquitted, that may introduce a serious infirmity in the charge in respect of the others against whom the prosecution case may be proved. If out of the six persons charged under Section 149 of the Penal Code along with other offences, two persons are acquitted, the remaining four may not be convicted because the essential requirement of an unlawful assembly might be lacking. Where, however, four persons are prosecuted under Section 302 read with Section 34 Penal Code, failure of the prosecution to prove, that one of them took part in the commission of the offence does not introduce any infirmity in its case against the remaining accused at all. Even if he is held not to be present at the scene of the offence, that in law, cannot prevent the prosecution from presenting its case against the remaining accused if the evidence adduced by it is otherwise satisfactory and cogent. Sunder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1962 SC 1211 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 290 : (1963) 1 SCJ 97.

[7314] ● Common intention in chance meeting.—Common intention to commit murder may develop in the spot after a chance meeting with the opposite party. Proof of it depends upon the conduct of the accused, the manner of infliction and the nature of the injuries caused. Circumstances in which common intention can and cannot be ascribed to the companion of the actual murderer.

Even when it is held that the meeting between the party of the accused and the party of the deceased was in the nature of a chance meeting, it is open to the Court to come to the conclusion that a common intention to commit murder developed in the minds of the accused on the spot. The conduct of the accused after the chance meeting, the manner in which the fatal injuries were inflicted, and the nature of the injuries may, in a given case, lead irresistibly to the inference that even if the accused did not start with the common intention of killing their victims, that such common intention developed between the accused as soon as they met the opposite party by chance.

Even upon a chance meeting between opposite parties, if it is proved beyond doubt that the party of the accused were the aggressors and that they began an attack on the opposite party which resulted in deaths, no member of the party of the accused can claim the right of private defence, and it must be held that the members of the party of the accused who participated in the assault were actuated by the common intention to commit murder. In such a case, if an accused armed with a lathi begins the attack after provoking a controversy, he must be taken to have known that his companion behind him who is armed with a gun would follow up the attack by firing shots at the opposite party, and it must be held that he shared the common intention to commit murder.

However, in a case in which, following upon a chance meeting at which there was a hot exchange of words, one member of a party who was armed with a gun causes deaths by firing shots at the members of the opposite party, the common intention to commit murder cannot necessarily be inferred against all the companions of the man who fired the fatal shots. In such a case, if the evidence against any accused as to his participation in the attack is of a doubtful character or is not reliable, or suffers from grave infirmities, it must be held that the case against that accused as to his sharing the common intention, is not established beyond a reasonable doubt, and he being entitled to the benefit of doubt, must be acquitted. Sunder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1962 SC 1211 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 290.

[7315] ● Common intention implies pre-arranged plan.—It is well settled that common intention within the meaning of Section 34 implies a pre-arranged plan, and the doing of the criminal act in pursuance of that plan. The said plan may develop on the spot during the course of the commission of the offence, but the crucial circumstances necessary for the application of Section 34, is that, the plan must precede the act constituting the offence.

That being the position in law, before a Court can convict an accused person under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Penal Code, it must come to a definite conclusion that the accused has a prior concert with one or more other persons, named or unnamed, for committing the said offence.

Where the charge is that the four accused and other unnamed persons were the participants in the assault, or even where the charge is only that the four accused persons only were participants in the assault, if the evidence of the prosecution eye-witnesses is that the accused persons along with others, named or unnamed had participated jointly in the commission of the offence, even if the Court acquits the other three named accused persons, it is open to it to come to the conclusion that the single remaining accused is guilty of murder under Section 302 read with Section 34, if it accepts the evidence that he acted in concert with persons, named or unnamed, other than the co-accused who are acquitted, in the commission of the offence. Provided that where the charge names only the four accused and the Court has relied upon the evidence that other persons, named or unnamed were actually participants in the offence, the conviction of one accused on the basis of such evidence would be justified only if the Court is satisfied that no prejudice has been caused to the accused by the defect in the charge.

However, where the evidence given by the witnesses is directed only to establish that the four persons, named in the charge who are the accused persons before the Court, and none others, had taken part in the commission of the offence, if the Court acquits three of the four accused either because it rejects the prosecution evidence, or because it gives them the benefit of doubt, it is not open to the Court to convict the one accused who remains on the ground, that though the other three accused are acquitted, some other unidentified persons acted jointly with him in the commission of the offence. In such a case, the conviction is clearly wrong because it amounts to making out a new case for the prosecution, and is contrary to the evidence adduced in the case and without any foundation or basis in the evidence. Conviction must always be based upon evidence and where there is no basis for a finding that the accused had jointly committed the offence with some other persons, the conviction is bad in law. Krishna Govind Patel v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 1413 : (1963) 2 CrLJ 351 : (1963) 2 SCJ 1718.

[7316] ● Common intention inferred from facts.—The existence of common intention has always to be inferred from facts. Here it was established that all the three accused came together, that two of them, R and J had guns with them, that the chowkidar A was giving information about the movements of the accused to the police and that R nursed a grievance against him on that account, that as soon as A and M came out of the chowky, all the three surrounded them and catching them took them down the road away from the chowky, and at that time R said A was responsible for the arrest of his servant Motia, and J said "Where is your police to-day."

These facts were sufficient to lead to the inference, that R had come with the intention of taking revenge on A by killing him and that B and J who accompanied him shared that intention. In the circumstances, it must be held, that the common intention to commit murder was established against both B and J. Baleshwar Rai v. State of Bihar, (1963) 2 SCR 433 : (1964) 1 CrLJ 564.

[7317] ● S. 34 excludes intention to cause death or fatal bodily injury.—Conviction under Section 304, second part, read with Section 34 is not illegal. Section 34 applies where several accused have assaulted the victim with the common intention of doing the criminal act of giving a beating. What Section 34 excludes is only the intention to cause death or fatal bodily injury. It does not exclude common intention shared by all the accused to do a criminal act. Afrahim Sheikh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1964 SC 1263 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 350 : 1964 (2) SCWR 344 : 1964 ALJ 437 : 1964 AWR (HC) 275 : 1964 BLJR 361 : 1964 CurLJ (SC) 152 : 1964 ACrR 187.

[7318] ● Criminal act done in furtherance of common intention of all.—It cannot be said, that a charge under Section 307 read with Section 34 of the Penal Code is not sustainable in law. Under Section 34 a criminal act done by a number of persons in furtherance of the common intention of them all, shall be held to be the act of each one of those persons as if it were done by him alone. It may be that, in many cases it is difficult to decide whether the criminal act in question had been done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of them all. But once it is established that the act has been so done in furtherance of the common intention of all, the legal position that results is that each person shall be held to have committed the entire criminal act.

Thus, where the case against several accused persons, is that in furtherance of the common intention of them all to kill the victim of the assault, some of them held him down while one of them used the dagger on him, each one of them in law is considered to have done the entire act. In such a case, if the injury caused, results in the death of the victim, all the assailants are guilty of murder under Section 302/34. It follows that if in such a case, the victim escapes death, each of the assailants is guilty of the offence of attempt to murder under Section 307/34 as if the entire act of holding the victim down and using the weapon upon him was done by him alone. That being the position in law, it cannot be contended that a charge under Section 307 read with Section 34 is not sustainable in law. Matiullah Sheikh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1965 SC 132 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 126 : 1964 SCD 966.

[7319] ● Meaning of "Criminal Act" and in furtherance of "Common intention".—It is clear that the criminal act mentioned in Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code is the result of the converted action of more than one person; if the said result was reached in furtherance of the common intention, each person is liable for the result as if he has done it himself. The question is, what is the meaning of the expression "in furtherance of the common intention." The dictionary meaning of the word "furtherance" is "advancement or promotion".

The shooting of the wrong man is in furtherance of the common intention and so Section 34 applies. When the accused were shooting at Rama believing him to be Madha, they were certainly doing a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention which was to kill Madha. They killed Rama because they believed that they were shooting at Madha. It was argued how could a mistake committed by one of the accused be considered in furtherance of the common intention, since to commit a mistake was not part of the common intention of the accused. But the question is not, as we have pointed out, whether the committing of a mistake was a part of the common intention, but whether it was done in furtherance of the common intention. It the common intention was to kill and if one of the accused kills B to wreak out his private vengeance, it cannot possibly be in furtherance of the common intention for which others can be constructively made liable. But, on the other hand, if he kills B bona fide believing that he is A, we do not see any incongruity in holding that the killing of B was in furtherance of the common intention. We, therefore, hold that without the aid of Section 301 of the Indian Penal Code, it can be held that when accused 1 to 4 shot at Rama they shot at him in furtherance of their common intention to kill Madha.

Section 301 Penal Code deals with a different situation. It embodies what the English authors describe as the doctrine of transfer of malice or the transmigration of motive. Under this section if A intends to kill B but kills C, whose death he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause, the intention to kill C is by law attributed to him. If A aims his shot at B, but it misses B either because B moves out of the range of the shot or because the shot misses the mark and hits some other person C, whether within sight or out of sight, under Section 301, A is deemed to have hit C with the intention to kill him. What is to be noticed is that to invoke Section 301 of the Indian Penal Code, A shall not have any intention to cause a death or the knowledge that he is likely to cause the death of C. In the instance case, this condition is not complied with. The accused shot at a particular person with the intention of killing him though under a misapprehension of his identity. In that case, all the ingredients of Sections 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code are complied with and the aid of Section 301 of the Indian Penal Code is not called for. We are, therefore, of the opinion that Section 301 of the Indian Penal Code has no application to the present case. Shankarlal Kancharbhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1965 SC 1260 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 266 : 1965 SCD 1041.

[7320] ● Accused Nos. 2 and 3 not present when various offences by accused No. 1.—A consignment of iron parts was sent under a railway receipt from Gobindgarh to Raypuram. The labels on the wagon were changed at Itarsi railway station and it was diverted to Wadi Bunder at Bombay under a label showing that the consignment had been despatched from Baran to Wadi Bunder under railway receipt No. 43352. When this wagon reached Wadi Bunder, Accused No. 1 obtained delivery of the consignment from the railway on a presentation of the forged receipt No. 43352, signing the railway delivery book in a false name of Shri Datta. The iron parts were then stored in the godown of the National Transport Company at Bombay in the name of Accused No. 3. Thereafter, on receipt of a chit from Accused No. 1 saying that the goods be entered in the name of Accused No. 2, a further entry was made in the receipt book of the company showing the goods to be received in the account of Accused No. 2. Two days later, Accused No. 1 obtained delivery of the goods from the godown of the company on producing an application signed by Accused No. 2 addressed to the company for delivery of the goods. On these facts the three accused were prosecuted on charges under Section 467, Penal Code, and other offences. The charges were framed in the alternative. In the first part of each charge all the three accused, were charged with the specified offence read with Section 34, and in the second part of each charge accused No. 1 was charged with the commission of the specified offence and accused Nos. 2 and 3 were charged with the same offence read with Section 109 for having abetted accused No. 1 in the commission of that offence.

The various acts of accused No. 1 taking delivery of the goods from the railway on a forged railway receipt and signing the delivery book in a false name which constituted the offences of which he was convicted were done solely by him alone. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 had not taken any part in the actual commission of those acts nor were they present at the time when they were done. Whatever they might have done prior to the doing of those acts did not form an ingredient of the offence committed by accused No. 1, and therefore, they could not be said to have participated in the commission of the criminal acts which amounted to those various offences. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 could not be held to be liable by virtue of Section 34 for the criminal acts committed by accused No. 1 alone, even if those acts had been committed in furtherance of the common intention of all the three accused. In the circumstances, the conviction of accused Nos. 2 and 3 for the various offences read with Section 34 was not justified and had to be set aside.

From the various circumstances and facts in the case, it was established that accused No. 3 had abetted the commission of the substantive offences by accused No. 1 of which he had been convicted. However, the complicity of accused No. 2 in the commission of the various offences by Accused No. 1 was not established beyond reasonable doubt. The conviction of accused Nos. 2 and 3 for the various offences committed by Accused No. 1 of which they are charged under Section 34 are set aside. Shiv Prasad Chuni Lal Jain v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 264 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 249 : (1964) 2 SCJ 465.

[7321] ● Common intention—Proof of participation.—(Note : The effect of the present decision is that application of Section 34 is justified only when both the ingredients of the section are established by the proved facts, namely, common intention to do a criminal act, and participation in the commission of that act in furtherance of the common intention. For the purpose of establishing participation in the commission of the offence, physical presence of the accused charged under Section 34 at the place where the other accused actually committed the offence is not necessary in every case. But participation in the offence must be proved in every case where the accused is charged under Section 34 and it is not enough merely to show that he shared the common unlawful intention to commit that offence. The result is that in a case in which there is no evidence at all of an accused having participated in the offence committed, he cannot be convicted under Section 34, even though the evidence indicates that he shared the common intention to commit that offence.)

When two accused are convicted by the Sessions Court under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, and one of them is acquitted by the High Court in an appeal, the other accused cannot be convicted under Section 302 simpliciter in the absence of the proof of the exact nature of injuries caused by each accused. When common intention is not proved, the prosecution must establish the exact nature of the injury caused by each accused and more so when one of the accused had got the benefit of doubt and had been acquitted. In such a case the remaining accused can safely be convicted under Section 325, IPC, instead of Section 302. Baul v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1968 SC 728 : 1968 CrLJ 872 : (1968) 2 SCR 450 : (1968) 2 SCJ 340 : 1968 SCD 599.

[7322] ● Common intention implies acting in concert.—The dominant feature of Section 34 is the element of participation in actions. It need not in all cases be by physical presence. Common intention implies acting in concert. There is a prearranged plan which is proved either from conduct or from circumstances or from incriminating facts. The principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act is embodied in Section 34. The existence of common intention is to be the basis of liability. That is why the prior concert and the pre-arranged plan is the foundation of common intention to establish liability and guilt. The appellants were charged under Sections 302 and 323 read with Section 34, IPC. The evidence established that the accused were related, that all the three of them made sudden appearance on the scene of occurrence, that they started assault as soon as the carts of the prosecution party arrived at the scene, and that the way in which the deceased was attacked by A-1 and A-2 and the stab wounds inflicted on him, and the manner in which A-3 held up another person would show that the three accused were lying in wait under some pre-arranged plan to attack them when they were returning. The contention for the appellant was that there was no common intention to kill the deceased as A-1 and A-2 did not intend to kill the deceased but wanted to attack one Vaghji, but by mistake they had attacked the deceased.

In view of the pre-arranged plan, all the three accused were lying in wait to attack the party of Amarji, Vaghji and two others. Amarji was in the forefront. The accused attacked him. The plea that Amarji was mistaken for Vaghji would not take away the common intention established by the pre-arranged plan and participation of all the accused in furtherance of their common intention. The act might be done by one of the several persons in furtherance of the common intention of them all without each one of them having intended to do the particular act, in exactly the same way as an act might be done by one member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object, which the other members of the unlawful assembly did not each intend to be done. Hence all the three appellants were guilty of murder. Hethubha v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 SC 1266 : 1970 CrLJ 1138 : 1970 SCD 404 : 1970 SC CrR 418 : (1970) 2 SCJ 635 : 1970 MLJ (Cr) 814 : 11 Guj LR 863.

[7323] ● Common object of preventing theft.—Where a person was in possession of a plot and the Mahua trees standing thereon and he went to the plot along with his party with the object of preventing the commission of theft of Mahua fruits by the prosecution party, in the exercise of their right of private defence of property, some of the accused party were armed with bhalas but it was not possible to say who were so armed and which of them inflicted the fatal wounds on the deceased. Though it was found that the persons who caused the two deaths exceeded the right of private defence, none of the accused could be convicted under Section 302, IPC, or under Section 302/149 or 302/34, IPC, as there was no common object or common intention to kill the two deceased persons. State of Bihar v. Nathu, AIR 1970 SC 27 : 1970 CrLJ 5 : 1969 SCD 743 : (1969) 2 SCJ 858 : 1970 SCC CrR 235 : (1970) 1 SCA 370 : (1970) 1 SCR 358 : 1970 ALJ 1 : 1969 PatLJR (SC) 66A : 1969 MLJ (Cr) 856 : 1970 MPWR 1 : 1970 BLJR 91.

[7324] ● Bona fide assertion of right of way through uncultivated portion of private land by villagers not amount to common intention to criminal act.—Where the villagers used to pass through the uncultivated portion of a private land whenever the road was submerged as on the day of occurrence, it cannot be said in the absence of any other evidence that the villagers had a common intention to commit a criminal act within the meaning of Section 34, IPC.

From the fact that one villager had a spade with him and two others had sticks in their hands, it is not safe to draw the inference that they intended to commit any offence. Even if it was the common intention of those villagers to force their way through the uncultivated land by using force, if necessary, they could not have been convicted under Section 304, IPC, in the absence of a finding that they intended to cause any injury to any person. K.N. Virji v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 SC 219 : 1970 CrLJ 363 : 1970 SCD 244 : 1970 SC CrR 311 : 1970 ACrR 281.

[7325] ● Interference with order of acquittal.—Where the trial Court specifically ruled out the application of Sections 34 and 149, IPC, after considering the facts the High Court when reversing that order of acquittal should have discussed the matter and given adequate reasons for holding the accused guilty under Section 149, IPC. The High Court should not have interfered with the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Court, when it had not recorded any finding as to what was the common object or the common intention of the appellants or recorded any finding as to what was the criminal act done by the appellants in furtherance of their common intention. M. Venkatadri v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 1467 : (1971) 3 SCC 254 : 1971 CrLJ 1145.

[7326] ● Common Intention—Participation in commission of offence necessary.—Section 34 embodies the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act, the essence of that liability being the existence of a common intention. Participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention, invites its application. Section 109 on the other hand may be attracted even if the abettor is not present, when the offence abetted is committed provided that he has instigated the commission of the offence or has engaged with one or more other persons in a conspiracy to commit an offence, and pursuant to that conspiracy, some act or illegal omission takes place or has intentionally aided the commission of an offence, by an act or illegal omission. Criminal conspiracy is a substantive offence and it postulates an agreement between two or more persons to do, or cause to be done, an illegal act or an act which is not illegal, by illegal means. Criminal conspiracy differs from other offences in that, mere agreement is made an offence even if no step is taken to carry out that agreement. Though there is close association of conspiracy with incitement and abetment, the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude, than abetment by conspiracy, as contemplated by Section 107, IPC. A conspiracy from its very nature is generally hatched in secret. It is, therefore, extremely rare that direct evidence in proof of conspiracy can be forthcoming from wholly disinterested quarters or from utter strangers. But, like other offences, criminal conspiracy can be proved by circumstantial evidence. Indeed, in most cases, proof of conspiracy is largely inferential though the inference must be founded on solid facts. Surrounding circumstances and antecedent and subsequent conduct, among other factors, constitute relevant material. In fact, because of the difficulties in having direct evidence of criminal conspiracy, once reasonable ground is shown for believing that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence, then anything done by any one of them in reference to their common intention after the same is entertained becomes, according to law of evidence, relevant for proving both conspiracy and the offence committed pursuant thereto. N.M.M.Y. Momin v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 885 : (1970) 1 SCC 696 : 1971 CrLJ 793 : (1971) 1 SCJ 43.

[7327] ● Common intention—Constructive liability.—Where the High Court found that there were the appellants along with several other persons at the scene, there was a fight between the two parties and several persons were injured in the course of that fight, that the appellants were not members of an unlawful assembly and that it was not possible to ascertain from the records whether any particular accused caused any particular injury, the question of constructive liability has to be ruled out and a particular accused would have to be convicted for the offence committed by him only. Halim Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1826 : (1972) 3 SCC 64 : 1971 CrLJ 1299 : 1971 UJ (SC) 627.

[7328] ● No common intention to murder.—Four persons were tried for causing death by inflicting lathi blows to the deceased, who along with some others had engaged in re-ploughing the paddy field which was in the cultivating possession of the accused. No individual injury could be attributed to any individual assailant and the High Court found that no common intention to murder the deceased was found but the accused had a right to defend their property. While defending it, if one or two out of them took into their heads to inflict more bodily harm than was necessary, the others could not be attributed the common intention of inflicting the injuries which resulted in the death of the deceased. No overt acts had been proved on the part of the accused which showed that they share the intention of the person or persons who inflicted the injuries on the head of the deceased resulting in his death. Hence, they cannot be held guilty of an offence under Section 304, Part II read with Section 34, IPC. Joginder Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1834 : (1971) 3 SCC 449 : 1971 CrLJ 1285.

[7329] ● Pre-meditated attack and sharing common intention.—Where the pre-meditated attack on the deceased with knives commenced at the instance of the accused, who shouted "kill, kill" and the ghastly attack in the narrow space, where the incident took place could not by combination of circumstances be preceded by any commotion, even though the accused was not armed with any weapon, it is beyond any doubt that he shared the common intention to commit the murder of the deceased. Gaya Prasad v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 1112 : 1971 CrLJ 824 : (1971) 2 SC CrR 345 : 1971 UJ (SC) 436 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 145.

[7330] ● Common intention means pre-arranged plan.—Under Section 34 when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. The words "in furtherance of the common intention of all" are the most essential part of Section 34, IPC. It is common intention to commit the crime actually committed. This common intention means a pre-arranged plan. On the other hand, Section 149 of the Code speaks of an offence being committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly. The distinction between "common intention" under Section 34 and "common object" under Section 149 is of vital importance. The Sessions Court erred in convicting the appellants under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, holding that if a number of persons assaulting another with a stick mercilessly, their intention can only be to murder that man or at least they should know, that they are likely to cause death of the person concerned. This aspect of their being likely to cause death would be relevant under Section 149 and not under Section 34. Under Section 34 it has to be established that there was the common intention before the participation of the accused. In the present case, the Sessions Court held that if a number of persons assaulted another with a stick mercilessly, their intention could only be to murder that man or at least they should know, that they were likely to cause death of the persons concerned. The Sessions Court fell into the error of convicting the appellants under Section 302/34, IPC, by holding so. That aspect of their being likely to cause death would be relevant under Section 149 and not under Section 34, IPC, for the obvious reason that under Section 34 it had to be established that there was the common intention before the participation by the accused. Devilal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1971 SC 1444 : (1971) 3 SCC 471 : 1971 CrLJ 1132.

[7331] ● Common intention to be anterior in time.—A common intention should be anterior in time to the commission of the crime showing a pre-arranged plan and prior concert. Though it is difficult in most cases to prove the intention of an individual, it has to be inferred from the act or conduct or other relevant circumstances of the case. This inference can be gathered by the manner in which the accused arrived on the scene, and mounted the attack, the determination and concert with which the beating was given or the injuries caused by one or some of them, the acts done by others to assist those causing the injuries, the concerted conduct subsequent to the commission of the offence, for instance, that all of them had left the scene of the incident together and other acts which all or some may have done as would help in determining the common intention. In other words, the totality of the circumstances must be taken into consideration, in arriving at the conclusion whether the accused had a common intention to commit an offence with which they could be convicted. The pre-arranged plan may develop on the spot during the course of the commission of the offence, but the crucial circumstance is that the said plan must precede the act constituting the offence. If that be so, before a Court can convict a person under Section 302 or Section 304 read with Section 34 of the IPC, it should come to definite conclusion that the said person had a prior concert with one or more persons named or unnamed for committing the offence.

Before vicarious or constructive criminal liability under Section 149, IPC, can be called in aid, the Court must find with certainty that there were at least five persons sharing the common object. In some cases though five persons were unquestionably there, the identity of one or more may be in doubt, in which case a conviction of the rest with the aid of Section 149 would be good. Ram Tahal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 254 : (1972) 1 SCC 136 : 1972 CrLJ 227 : (1972) 2 SCJ 303 : 1972 SCD 76.

[7332] ● Evidence of common intention.—Where there is no evidence to show any prior concert or preparation or a common intention of all in the furtherance of which the several acts of a different accused were committed, Section 34 does not apply and each one of the accused is liable for his own act, even though common intention can develop during the fight for which there must be evidence to draw such inference. Amrik Singh v. State of Punjab, 1972 CrLJ 465 (SC).

[7333] ● Assault common intention.—Where the High Court came to the conclusion regarding the attack on the deceased, that the appellant and two others assaulted him with lath is or sticks and also to the conclusion, that their common intention was not to cause death but only grievous hurt, the conviction of all of them could have been only under Section 325 read with Section 34, IPC. When there were two injuries on the head, it was quite possible that one of them only might have been responsible for the death or both of them. The appellant was found to have given only one blow and not more than one. Hence, it is difficult to say whether the blow given by him was the one which ultimately proved to be fatal. Hence, conviction under Section 302 was not correct and conviction under Section 325 read with Section 34 was substituted. Ram Lal v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1972 SC 2462 : (1973) 3 SCC 466 : 1973 CrLJ 17.

[7334] ● Common intention—Development of during course of occurrence.—It was contended on behalf of the State that even if the conviction of Sheoram Singh for the offence under Section 302, read with Section 149, IPC, could not be sustained, he was guilty of the offence under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, because the circumstances of the case showed that Arjun Singh fired the shot at the deceased in furtherance of the common intention of Arjun Singh and Sheoram Singh. That submission was not well founded. There was nothing to show that there was any exhortation by Sheoram Singh to Arjun Singh to fire at the deceased. Even the High Court had not accepted the evidence of exhortation to Arjun Singh by any of the other accused before Arjun Singh fired at the deceased. On the there hand, it was Arjun Singh who told the deceased that, if he did not turn out Ram Dularey Singh from his house, it would be bad for him (deceased) also. Those words indicated the attitude of Arjun Singh. It was difficult to infer from that exclamation of Arjun Singh that Sheoram Singh shared the intention of Arjun Singh and that in furtherance of common intention of both of them Arjun Singh fired the shot at the deceased. Though common intention could develop during the course of an occurrence, there had to be cogent material on the basis of which the Court could arrive at that finding and hold an accused vicariously liable for the act of the other accused by invoking Section 34, IPC. The appeal of Sheoram Singh was allowed so far as his conviction and sentence for the offence under Section 302, read with Section 149, IPC, was concerned. Sheoram Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 2555 : (1973) 3 SCC 110 : 1973 CrLJ 26.

[7335] ● Common intention implies pre-arranged plan.—The common intention within the meaning of Section 34, IPC, implies prearranged plan. If there is no evidence of a prior meeting of minds and any prearranged plan or of participation of the accused in the fight, they could not be convicted with the aid of Section 34. Where no criminal act has been done in concert pursuant to the pre-arranged plan, several persons can simultaneously attack a man and each can have the same intention, namely, the intention to kill and if each can individually inflict a separate fatal blow and yet none would have the common intention required by Section 34 because there was no prior meeting of minds to form a pre-arranged plan. In a case like that, each would be individually liable for whatever injury he caused but none could be vicariously convicted for the act of any of the others. And if the prosecution cannot prove that his separate blow was a fatal one, he cannot be convicted of murder. Parichhat v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 535 : (1972) 4 SCC 694 : 1972 CrLJ 322 : 1971 SCD 1158.

[7336] ● Murder—Common intention as to.—If the facts to be proved and the evidence to be adduced with reference to the charge under Section 149, IPC, would be the same if the charge were under Section 34, IPC, then the failure to charge the accused under Section 34 cannot result in any prejudice and in such cases the substitution of Section 34 for Section 149 must be held to be a formal matter. Amarsingh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1973 SC 2221 : (1974) 3 SCC 81 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 769 : 1973 CrLJ 1409.

[7337] ● Murder constructive liability.—Where the High Court confirmed the conviction of A-2 under Section 302 read with Section 34 on the basis of the evidence of 2 PWs who deposed that while A-1 had a thenga with which he inflicted blows on the head of the deceased while the appellant was catching hold of the deceased, it meant that the High Court had not accepted the evidence of those witnesses regarding A-1 who inflicted the fatal injuries but nevertheless found the appellant guilty for the substantive offence of murder. After A-1 was acquitted, there was no further scope for invoking against the appellant any constructive liability under Section 34. To convict him under Section 302, there should be evidence that he caused the fatal injuries. No attempt was made by the High Court to find out the nature of the offence, if any, committed by the appellant. The evidence of those two witnesses could not be accepted against the appellant also when their evidence had been rejected by the Sessions Court so far as A-3 was concerned and by the High Court when it acquitted A-1. Hence the conviction of the appellant could not be sustained. B. Nath v. State of Orissa, AIR 1973 SC 2337 : (1973) 2 SCC 432 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 880 : 1973 CrLJ 1585.

[7338] ● Proof of common intention—Prior concert or pre-arranged plan.—To convict a person for offence applying Section 34, IPC, it is necessary to establish that the criminal act was done in concert, pursuant to a prearranged plan and it is also to be borne in mind that it is difficult, if not impossible, to procure direct evidence to prove the intention of a person. Therefore, Courts, in most cases, have to infer the intention from the act or the actual conduct of a particular person or from the other relevant circumstances of the case. Such inference of common intention within the meaning of Section 34, IPC should never be reached unless the necessary inference is deducible from the circumstances of the case. The complicity of the accused could be decided under Section 34, IPC only on the basis of facts of each case. State of U.P. v. Iftikhar Khan, AIR 1973 SC 863 : (1973) 1 SCC 512 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 384 : 1973 CrLJ 636 : 2005 (1) Crimes 393.

[7339] ● Murder—Common intention.—Where there were constant quarrels between the deceased and the appellants, the way the appellants had been making a common cause with one of them, the manner in which they responded to the call of one other appellant and emerged together from the house of one of them suggested, that there could have been even a plan to teach a lesson to the prosecution party. When that appellant gave that shout, he should have known that the appellants were there. The way in which one of them emerged with a spear indicated preparation to kill. The other two appellants had enabled him to commit murder by preventing the escape of the deceased. There could be no doubt that they had a common intention with the actual assailant to kill the deceased. S.N. Dubey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 541 : (1974) 3 SCC 771 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 247 : 1974 CrLJ 475.

[7340] ● Joint responsibility for criminal act.—Mere distance from the scene of the crime cannot exclude culpability under Section 34, IPC, which lays down the rule of joint responsibility for a criminal act performed by a plurality of persons. Criminal sharing, overt or covert by active presence, or by distant direction, making out a certain measure of jointness in the commission of the act is the essence of Section 34. Even assuming that presence at the scene is a pre-requisite to attract Section 34 and that such propinquity is absent, Section 107 which is different in one sense, still comes into play to rope in the accused.

Tukaram Ganapath v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1974 SC 514 : (1974) 4 SCC 544 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 580 : 1974 CrLJ 469 : 1974 SCD 258.

[7341] ● Acquittal of two out of three no bar to conviction of third under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC.—The conviction of the appellant under Section 302/34, IPC, was affirmed even though the acquittal of the other two named accused is no bar to his conviction, as the prosecution led evidence to show that the fatal shot was fired by one of the two other persons besides the appellant. Sukh Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 323 : (1974) 3 SCC 656 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 186 : 1974 CrLJ 354.

[7342] ● Common intention to murder—Inference of.—On the question of common intention, the time of murder, the place of murder, the weapons carried by the accused, the relationship and finally their concerted conduct in the wake of murder are all relevant. Where the offence took place in the house of the deceased at about 10.30 P.M., the facts that the other accused did not participate in the assault on the deceased but he played his part truly by his behaviour by carrying spear so as to overcome any outside interference with the attainment of their object and lastly, immediately after the deceased was murdered both the accused ran away together, these facts are sufficient to hold the existence of common intention in committing murder. Lalai v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 2118 : (1975) 3 SCC 273 : 1974 CrLJ 1393.

[7343] ● Vicarious liability—Principle of.—The principle of vicarious liability does not depend upon the necessity to convict a required number of persons. It depends upon proof of facts, beyond reasonable doubt, which makes such a principle applicable. Dharam Pal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 1917 : (1975) 2 SCC 596 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 704 : 1975 CrLJ 1666.

[7344] ● Common intention to commit particular crime.—The common intention must be to commit the particular crime, although the actual crime may be committed by any one sharing the common intention. Then only others can be held to be guilty. The view that even the person not committing the particular crime could be held guilty of that crime with the aid of Section 34 if the commission of the act was such as could be shown to be in furtherance of the common intention not necessarily intended by every one of the participants, is not correct. Hardev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 179 : (1975) 3 SCC 761 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 186 : 1975 CrLJ 243 : (1975) 1 SCJ 459 : 1975 MLJ (Cr) 369.

[7345] ● Common intention—Companion of accused if liable.—Where the companion of the accused had not known the injured and there was no previous enmity between them nor any motive for the assault, the mere fact that the companion continued to pedal the cycle after the accused fired his pistol at the injured and also ran away with the accused, would not necessarily go to show that the shot has been fired by the accused in furtherance of the common intention of both of them. There may be cases wherein innocent persons of the actual culprit have also tried to escape along with him after an incident. Hence, no vicarious liability can be fastened on the companion of the accused. Malkhan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 12 : (1975) 3 SCC 311 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 919 : 1975 CrLJ 32 : 1975 MLJ (Cr) 450.

[7346] ● Prosecution of several accused persons under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC conviction of one alone legality.—Where the charge disclosed only the named persons as co-accused and the PWs. confined their evidence to them, even then it will be permissible to come to the conclusion that others named or unnamed, besides those mentioned in the charge or the evidence of the PWs, acted conjointly with one of the charged accused if there was other evidence to lead to that conclusion, but not otherwise. State of Andhra Pradesh v. K.V. Reddy, AIR 1976 SC 2207 : (1976) 3 SCC 454 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 448 : 1976 CrLJ 1723 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 210 : 1976 SC CrR 277 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 298.

[7347] ● Murder—Common intention—Sharing of.—The mere fact that the members of the mob came together, that Birkha Singh and the appellant came together armed with rifles as per the judgment of the trial Court, was not sufficient to indicate that they had come having shared a common intention to commit the murder. Only one shot was fired on the head of Ajit Singh by Birkha Singh. No shot was fired on him by the appellant and he had no grudge against him. Ajit Singh was not residing in the Haveli wherein the occurrence took place. It was perchance that he happened to be there. It could not, therefore, be said that the appellant and Birkha Singh had any pre-arranged plan to kill Ajit Singh. It might be that he had such common intention though on the facts found it was not possible to be drawn. But it was difficult to fill the gap between "may" and "must" and to say that the appellant "must" have shared the common intention for causing the death of Ajit Singh was difficult to infer. His conviction under Section 302/34, IPC, was not correct. Gajjan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1976 SC 2069 : (1976) 3 SCC 391 : (1976) SCC

(Cri) 414 : 1976 CrLJ 1640 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 139 : 1976 SCCrR 208 : 1976 Chand LR (Cr) SC 122 : 1976 CurLJ (Cr) 61 : 1976 ACrC 104.

[7348] ● Common intention to commit murder of deceased.—Where there is nothing to indicate that the four accused had arrived at the scene with a preplanned common intention of causing the death of the deceased and two of them alone were armed with lathis and caused injuries on his head, it cannot be said that the two accused who were not armed had a common intention with the other two to commit murder of the deceased while the former two were guilty under Section 302 r/w Section 34, IPC. Ram Prasad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 199 : (1976) 1 SCC 406 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 24 : 1976 CrLJ 201.

[7349] ● Application of Section 34, IPC—Essential for.—Section 34 was to be read along with the preceding Section 32 which made it clear that the 'act' spoken of in Section 34 included a series of acts as a single act. It followed that the words "when a criminal act is done by several persons" in Section 34 should be construed to mean "when criminal acts are done by several persons". The acts committed by different confederates in the criminal action might be different but all should in one way or the other participate and engage in the criminal enterprise; for instance, one might only stand guard to prevent any person coming to the relief of the victim or otherwise facilitate the execution of the common design. Such a person also committed an "act" as much as his co-participants actually committing a planned crime. In the case of an offence involving physical violence, however, it was essential for the application of Section 34 that the person who instigated or aided the commission of the crime should physically be present at the actual commission of the crime for the purpose of facilitating or promoting the offence, the commission of which was the aim of the joint criminal venture. Such presence of those, who, in one way or the other facilitated the execution of the common design was itself tantamount to actual participation in the 'criminal act'. The essence of Section 34 was simultaneous consciences of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring about a particular result. Such conscience could be developed at the spot and thereby intended by all of them. In the instant case, A-2 obviously was acting in concert with A-3 and A-4 in causing the murder of the deceased, when he prevented PW-1 from going to the relief of the deceased. Section 34 was, therefore, fully attracted and under the circumstances A-2 was equally responsible for the murder of the deceased. His conviction was, therefore, justified. Ramaswami v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1976 SC 2027 : (1976) 3 SCC 779 (1976) SCC (Cri) 518 : 1976 CrLJ 1563.

[7350] ● High Court correct in altering convic tion from Section 304/34 to 302/34, IPC.— Where the trial Court convicted the accused unde Section 304/34, IPC, the High Court was of the view, that since the injuries caused by the appellants were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the appellants did intend to cause those injuries, and took the view that the offence was one under Section 302/34, the High Court was right in taking that view. Ram Murti v. State of Haryana, AIR 1976 SC 2455 : (1976) 4 SCC 308 : 1976 CrLJ 1888 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 462 : 1976 UJ (SC) 822.

[7351] ● Common intention to cause simple hurt—Inferences to.—Where two of the four accused were unarmed, the 3rd accused had a knife but he was not brandishing it, as it was in his pocket and there was no reason to believe that the other accused knew about the knife with him, the 4th accused was carrying a danda and the High Court did not accept his participation as established beyond reasonable doubt, the Court has to proceed on the basis that the 4th accused was not present and if that were so, no common intention could be attributed to the accused to cause simple hurt. Mitter Sen v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 1156 : (1976) 1 SCC 723 : (1976) SCC (Cri) 190 : 1976 CrLJ 857.

[7352] ● Common intention to cause death—Sharing of.—Where one of the three accused armed with a kulhari inflicted serious injury on the head of the deceased, while the other two were merely armed with lathis and dealt blows on the head of the deceased, the latter two accused shared the common intention with the other accused to cause death of the deceased and hence each of them is guilty of the offence under Section 302 r/w Section 34, IPC. Dashrath Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 1084 : (1977) 1 SCC 197 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 94 : 1976 CrLJ 664 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 326 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 22.

[7353] ● Pre-concert—Evidence as to—Appreciation of.—Where one accused caused one grievous injury to a victim and two simple injuries to another victim, while another accused caused an injury to the deceased on his finger and also caused two simple injuries to one of the victims, in the course of the same incident in which the deceased received fatal injuries from two other accused, it is difficult to hold in the totality of circumstances that there was any pre-concert between these two accrued and the other two.

who killed the deceased, to kill him. Jaspal Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1977 SC 1821 : (1976) 4 SCC 303 : (1976) SCC (Cri) 615 : 1977 CrLJ 1457 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 52 : 1977 UJ (SC) 62.

[7354] ● Common intention to commit murder.—The evidence does not show that she was present throughout when the beating was given to the deceased. From the evidence it also appears that at the time when Vijaya was inciting her brother Ashok to assault Shubhangi she believed that she had been possessed of some spirit and was shouting slogans. As the deceased had recently given birth to a child and there was nothing to show that in her presence any other weapon excepting a stick was used it will be impossible to attribute to Vijaya a common intention to murder which she shared along with appellant No. 1. Moreover, it is quite likely that after having uttered a few words and after having incited her brother to beat the deceased she might have either left the room or ceased to be in possession of the spirit. At any rate in the present state of the evidence it cannot be said that Vijaya shared a common intention to murder the deceased along with appellant No. 1. For these reasons, therefore, we would alter the conviction of Vijaya from one under Section 302, read with Section 34, IPC to that under Sections 325/34, IPC and reduce her sentence from life imprisonment to that of two years' rigorous imprisonment. As Vijaya has already served out the sentence of two years she is directed to be set at liberty forthwith. Ashok Laxuman Sohani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 1319 : (1977) SCC (Cri) 243 : 1977 CrLJ 829 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 158.

[7355] ● Common intention to cause Murder of deceased.—In the instant case, Shingara Singh, Chain Singh and Surat Singh were said to have gone to the house of the deceased, and Shingara Singh raised a lalkara and instigated Chain Singh to kill the deceased whereupon Chain Singh gave a spear blow on the left chest of the deceased. After the deceased fell down Surat Singh gave two hatchet blows on the left arm of the deceased causing simple injuries. All the three were put up on trial for causing the murder of the deceased. The trial Judge acquitted them. On appeal, the High Court gave benefit of doubt to Shingara Singh and maintained his acquittal but convicted the other two appellant for murder under Section 302, r/w Section 34, IPC. After acquittal of Shingara Singh, the words said to have been spoken of by him could not be made use of and had not been used by the High Court for finding the element of common intention. The only fact then remained that Chain Singh gave a spear blow near the chest of the deceased, which according to the opinion of the doctor, was sufficient in the ordinary course of the nature to cause his death. Hence, he was guilty under Section 302 simpliciter. As regards Surat Singh he was guilty only under Section 324, IPC. The appeal was partly allowed. Surat Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 705 : (1976) 4 SCC 311 : (1976) SCC (Cri) 605 : 1977 CrLJ 347 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 53 : 1977 UJ (SC) 76.

[7356] ● Accused causing two simple injuries—Whether share common intention of causing death of deceased.—Where the accused caused only two simple injuries on the arm of the deceased and did not give any blow on any vital part of the body, goes against the view that he had shared the common intention of causing the death of the deceased with the other accused who was guilty of causing the death of the deceased by giving the fatal blow with his spear on his chest. Surat Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 705 : (1976) 4 SCC 311 : (1976) SCC (Cri) 605 : 1977 CrLJ 347 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 53 : 1977 UJ (SC) 76.

[7357] ● Common intention—Victim assaulted by three accused.—Where two out of three persons attacked the deceased, they were found guilty under Section 302, r/w Section 34, IPC, while the third accused who caught hold of both the hands of the deceased from behind was convicted under Section 304, Part II, IPC, by the application of the principle under Section 38, IPC, as he had intentionally joined in the commission of an act with the knowledge that the assault on the deceased was likely to result in his death. Bhaba Nanda v. State of Assam, AIR 1977 SC 2252 : (1977) 4 SCC 396 : (1977) SCC (Cri) 602 : 1977 CrLJ 1930 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 472 : 1977 UJ (SC) 725 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 360.

[7358] ● Murderous assault by more than one person—Plea of extrication.—When murderous assault by many hands with many knives has ended fatally, it is legally impermissible to dissect the serious ones from the others, and seek to salvage those whose stabs have not proved fatal. When people play with knives and lives, the circumstance that one man's stab falls on a less or more vulnerable part of the person of the victim is of no consequence to fix the guilt for murder. Conjoint complicity is the inevitable inference when a gory group animated by lethal intent accomplished their purpose cumulatively, Section 34, IPC, fixing constructive liability conclusively silences such a refined plea of extrication. Even if some out of several accused are acquitted but the participating presence of a plurality of assailants is proved, the conjoint culpability for the crime is inescapable. Not that the story of more than one person having attacked the victim is false, but that the identity of the absolved accused is not firmly fixed as criminal participant. It follows that such of them, even if the number dwindled to one as having knifed the deceased, should be convicted for the principal offence read with the constructive provision. Harshad Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1977 SC 710 : (1976) 4 SCC 640 : (1977) SCC (Cri) 26 : 1977 CrLJ 352 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 481 : 1977 SCCrR 33 : (1977) 1 SCR 626 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 318 : 1976 UJ (SC) 891.

[7359] ● Common intention to murder.—Where the evidence was clear and cogent and established that A1 and A3 suddenly emerged out of darkness, A2 gave an axe blow on the left arm of the deceased and A1 gave an axe blow on his abdomen and the latter injury resulted in his death, these facts clearly show that there was common intention between A1 and A3 to cause the death of the deceased.

A2 was talking to the deceased when A1 and A3 attacked the deceased and he neither had any weapon with him nor did he participate in the attack. The only thing attributed to A2 was that after A1 and A3 had given axe blows to the deceased, A2 said "leave him, kill him" after A1 and A3 had given axe blows on the deceased, there was no reason why A2 should have instigated A1 and A3 after blows were delivered by them and not in pursuance of his alleged instigation. A2 cannot be said to be a party to their common intention. N.B. Dhayagude v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 381 : (1976) 4 SCC 441 : (1977) SCC (Cri) 10 : 1977 CrLJ 238 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 409.

[7360] ● Attack by several accused—Constructive liability of companion of principal culprit—Common intention proof of.—It might be that when some persons started with a prearranged plan to commit a minor offence, they might in the course of their committing the minor offence come to an understanding to commit the major offence as well. Such an understanding might appear from the conduct of the persons, sought to be made vicariously liable, for the act of the principal culprit, or from some other incriminatory evidence, but the conduct or the other evidence should be such as not to leave any room for doubt in that behalf. A criminal Court fastening vicarious liability should satisfy itself as to the prior meeting of the minds of the principal culprit and his companion who were sought to be constructively made liable in respect of every act committed by the former. There was no law which laid down that a person accompanying the principal culprit shared his intention in respect of every act which the latter might eventually commit. The existence or otherwise of the common intention depended upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The intention of the principal offender and his companions to deal with any person who might intervene to stop the quarrel, should be apparent from the conduct of the persons accompanying the principal culprit or some other clear and cogent incriminating piece of evidence. In the absence of such material, the companion or companions could not justifiably be held guilty for every offence committed by the principal offender. In this case, there was no evidence to justify the occlusion that Surta and Samme Singh shared the common intention with Dharam Pal to commit the murder of Sardara Singh or to make an attempt on the life of Singh Ram, and that the said acts were committed by Dharam Pal in furtherance of the common intention of all the appellants. The common intention denoted action in concert and necessarily postulated a pre-arranged plan or prior meeting of minds, and an element of participation in action. The common intention to commit an offence, graver than the one originally designed, might develop during the execution of the original plan, e.g., during the progress of attack on the person, who was intended to be beaten, but the evidence in that behalf should be clear and cogent, for, suspicion, however strong, could not take the place of proof which was essential to bring home the offence to the accused. The prosecution evidence disclosed clearly, that appellant Surta administered a blow on the head of Singh Ram with Pharsa as a result of which the latter slumped on the ground and sustained a fracture of the right parietal bone. After he had fallen down on account of the head injury, Samme Singh appellant gave 4 or 5 blows on his thighs. In those circumstances it was clear that Samme Singh shared a common intention with Surta of causing grievous injury on the person of Singh Ram. Hence, the conviction and sentence of Surta under Section 326 and that of Samme Singh under Section 326/34, IPC, were confirmed. As there was nothing in the prosecution evidence to show, that it was in the contemplation of Surta and Samme Singh not only to give a thorough beating to Hari Ram but also to deal with any other person who might choose to intervene on his behalf, it was difficult to hold that they accompanied Dharam Pal with the common intention of murdering the deceased or with the intention of attempting to murder Singh Ram. Hence the appeals were dismissed to the extent indicated above. Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, AIR 1978 SC 1492 : (1978) 4 SCC 440 : 1978 CrLJ 1538 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 373.

[7361] ● Common intention to cause death of deceased.—Where the evidence showed that the appellant knew well that A-1 and others were armed and that A-1 had caused sword injuries on vital parts of the body of the deceased in the courtyard, and he himself aided A-1 by giving blows to the deceased on some vital parts of the body like the chest, and not content with that the appellant also participated in chasing the deceased, where further injuries were given to the deceased after a call by A-2 to kill the deceased, the appellant clearly shared the common intention to cause the death of the deceased along with A-1 and A-3. Sivam v. State of Kerala, AIR 1978 SC 1529 : (1978) 3 SCC 141 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 364 : 1978 CrLJ 1609 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 149 : 1978 SCCrR 216 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 204.

[7362] ● Common intention to kill—Sharing of.—Where the four appellants had been lying in ambush, to pounce upon the deceased in order to assault him, there is no doubt that all the four appellants had shared the common intention to kill the deceased. The fact that no overt act was committed by one of them against the deceased does not distinguish his case from that of the others. Karamat Ali v. State of Assam, AIR 1978 SC 1392 : (1978) 3 SCC 132 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 356 : 1978 CrLJ 1412 : 1978 UJ (SC) 217 : 1978 ACrR 342.

[7363] ● Common intention Evidence of prior concert.—Appellant reached the place of occurrence along with the other accused who were all armed with deadly weapons. They caught hold of the deceased as soon as he knocked at the 'khirki' of his house, dragged him to the bamboo grove and dealt as many as 11 blows including 3 fatal blows of great intensity. There is evidence, that the appellant was standing outside the house of the deceased with a pistol in his hand and held out threats, in order to prevent the eye-witnesses from coming to the help of their brother, and that the assailants shouted that they had killed the 'police agent' and the appellant fired one shot before they left the place of occurrence. It was, therefore, proved beyond doubt that there was not only ample opportunity for a pre-concert, but that the assailants, including the appellant, committed the murder of the deceased in pursuance of a pre-concerted plan, in a cold blooded manner. Nitya Sen v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1978 SC 383 : (1978) 2 SCC 382 : (1978) SCC (Cri) 191 : 1978 SC CrR 63 : 1978 CrLJ 481 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 39 : 1978 UJ (SC) 123.

[7364] ● Circumstances not indicating that accused shared common intention or took any active part.—Where the circumstances did not indicate that the appellant shared the common intention to murder the deceased or took any active part therein, mere finding of the lot of blood stains on the floor, wall and the stool where the deceased was said to have been attacked, does not implicate the appellant in the offence of murder and there is no reliable evidence to connect her directly with the crime of actual murder. Decision of the Orissa High Court convicting her under Section 302/34, IPC, was reversed. Suryamani Devi v. State of Orissa, AIR 1979 SC 1534 : 1984 Supp SCC 767 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 497 : 1979 CrLJ 959.

[7365] ● Common intention—Murder preplanned.—Both the Courts below found that the murder of the deceased was a pre-planned one in which all the three accused including the appellant participated equally. To begin with, the appellant gave a challenge to the deceased and after returning to their house the accused reappeared on the scene variously armed, two of them with guns and the appellant with a gandasi. They remained present at the time when the fatal blow was given to the deceased by one of the accused. Immediately thereafter, the appellant assaulted another person with gandasi. Thereafter, the three accused left together. These circumstances clearly disclosed that there was a prior meeting of minds between the three accused in which it was decided to kill the deceased, and in pursuance of that plan all the three went away together, armed themselves, arrived at the scene of occurrence together and none of them delivered a gunshot injury. Thus, all the essential conditions for the presence of the common intention were clearly proved. Kashmere Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1435 : (1979) 3 SCC 428 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 496 : 1979 CrLJ 1093.

[7366] ● Common intention—Each and every accused need not have inflicted serious injury.—Each and every accused need not have inflicted serious injury. In this case the three accused persons came together. One of them was armed with a gun, the other two were armed with iron rods. One of them challenged the deceased. The person with the gun opened fire and after the deceased fell down, the other two accused were not content, but went forward to inflict injuries on the deceased person with the iron rods in their hands. Thereafter all of them went away together. The irresistible inference from these circumstances is that the three of them were actuated by the common intention to cause the death of the deceased. Merely, because the injuries inflicted by two of them were not serious injuries, it cannot be said that they were not actuated by common intention to cause the death of the deceased. In order to attract the applicability of Section 34 read with Section 302, IPC, it is not necessary that each and every one of the accused persons must have inflicted a serious injury. Tehal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1347 : (1979) SCC (Cri) 722 : 1979 CrLJ 1031 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 660 : (1979) 1 SCWR 301 : 1979 SCCrR 323 : 1978 CurLJ (Cr) 295.

[7367] ● Common intention to kill deceased.—The Sessions Court convicted the respondents under Section 302/149, IPC, along with others. In appeal the High Court altered the conviction of the 3 respondents to that under Section 326/34. In appeal by the state against respondents 1 and 2, findings of the High Court are legally erroneous. Evidence established that both respondents had a common intention to kill the deceased, which is manifest from the fact that they were armed with sticks, participated equally in the actual assault on the deceased as also in the abuses hurled on him, having come together and having gone together. It clearly leads no room for doubt about the common intention of respondents 1 and 2 to cause the murder of the deceased. Section 34 clearly applied to the facts of the case. Where common intention to kill is established, question of, as to who gave the fatal blow is wholly irrelevant, and once the medical evidence shows that the injuries caused by one or the other of the accused were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, that is sufficient to bring the case of the accused within the purview of Section 302/34, IPC. Decision of the Bombay High Court was reversed and respondents were convicted under Section 302/34, IPC. State of Maharashtra v. Kalu Shivram, AIR 1980 SC 879 : 1980 Supp SCC 224 : 1980 CrLJ 570.

[7368] ● Common intention to commit murder.—Though one of the two brothers accused of murdering the deceased were armed with a lathi, as they made concerted attack on the deceased causing no less than 15 injuries resulting in his death on the spot, the person armed with a lathi is also liable under Section 302/34, IPC.

Two accused who are brothers were alleged to have murdered the deceased by attacking him with a sharp edged weapon and a lathi respectively at midnight. They made a concerted attack on the deceased, causing no less than 15 injuries resulting in his death on the spot. Trial Court convicted both the accused under Section 302 r/w Section 34. The High Court maintained the conviction of the accused armed with a sharp-edged weapon but acquitted the other who was armed with a lathi. The High Court was in error in acquitting the other accused. Acquittal was set aside and the judgment of the trial Court restored. Judgment of the Punjab & Haryana High Court was reversed. State of Haryana v. Tej Ram, AIR 1980 SC 1496 : 1980 CrLJ 1057 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 514.

[7369] ● Murder—Common intention—Sharing of.—In this case of murder, the appellant Kehar Singh, his father and brother and one Hukum Singh were tried. Hukum Singh was acquitted. Relying on the evidence of three eye witnesses, the other three were sentenced for the offences of Section 302/34, IPC. Kehar Singh was a boy of 15 years of age and he was ascribed the role in vague terms.

The meeting at a place where the incident was alleged to have occurred was purely accidental because there was no evidence to show that the accused knew in advance that the deceased and his companions were to pass by that route. It was reasonable to believe that Kehar Singh might have been present at the time of occurrence but mere presence in the circumstances of this case was not indicative of sharing the intention of the father and the brother. Therefore, there was no convincing and reliable evidence to hold that Kehar Singh shared the common intention of his father and brother and participated in the assault on the deceased, and that the charges had been brought home to him. The conviction and sentence were set aside. Ghanshyam v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 293 : (1982) 2 SCC 400 : (1982) SCC (Cri) 449 : 1983 CrLJ 439 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 139 : 1982 AWC 24 : 1983 ALJ 819 : 1982 SCCrR 195 : (1983) 1 ChandLR (Cr) 549 : 1982 CrAppR (SC) 102 : 1982 UJ (SC) 289.

[7370] ● Murder—All accused animated by common intention.—The accused was released on parole, while undergoing sentence of life imprisonment in an earlier murder case. Accompanied by 3 others, he assaulted the deceased at midnight only with blunt side of gandasa. All the accused were animated by common intention. All of them including the accused released on parole were liable to be sentenced to life imprisonment. Surjit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 838 : (1983) 3 SCC 565 : (1983) SCC (Cri) 745 : 1983 CrLJ 1111 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 377 : 1983 Chand CrC (SC) 136.

[7371] ● Murder by several accused— Common intention.—The evidence showed that all the four appellants were acting in concert in dragging the deceased inside the Deli and that all the four persons were concerned in the act of throwing the victim on the road in front of the Deli after the assault. Though no PW could have witnessed what transpired inside the Deli, because the doors of the Deli were closed after the deceased was dragged inside, appellants were acting in concert and were associated with each other in initially dragging the deceased inside the Deli as also in throwing him out on the road. The circumstances which had been established by satisfactory evidence coupled with the circumstance that as many as 20 injuries were inflicted on the deceased, left no room for doubt, that all the appellants had shared the common intention to cause the death of the deceased. The appeal was dismissed. Aher Bitha Vajshi v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1983 SC 599 : 1983 CrLJ 1049 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 231 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1067.

[7372] ● Common intention proof.—Common intention is a question of fact. It is subjective. But it could be inferred from facts and circumstances. In the present case, the appellants were related, they were armed with deadly weapons and they were together. There was an order by some one 'kill, kill' when all of them simultaneously attacked the deceased and some of the PWs. After the occurrence, they left together; they were later arrested from the same place. The High Court, therefore, rightly held that the appellants caused the injuries with the common intention and was, therefore, justified in convicting the appellants under Section 302/34 of the Penal Code. Maqsoodan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 126 : (1983) 1 SCC 218 : (1983) SCC (Cri) 176 : 1983 CrLJ 218 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 50 : 1983 SCC CrR 312 : 1982 ALJ 1524 : 1983 UJ (SC) 175 : 1983 (1) CrLC 181 : (1983) 1 SCJ 184 : 1983 MLJ (Cr) 405.

[7373] ● Common intention—Requisite ingredient.—The three circumstances relied upon by the respondent in support of the conviction were: (i) that the three accused came together; (ii) that the three accused had a common motive to avenge the incident that occurred at the festival; and (iii) that when the victim of assault tried to escape all the three of them chased the deceased. If the three shared the common intention to commit murder of the deceased, obviously appellants Nos. 2 and 3 would not come unarmed. It would be contrary to common sense to hold that appellants 2 and 3 accompanied appellant No. 1 with the avowed object of committing murder and yet came unarmed. Their intention by that very tell-tale circumstances was contradicted. It should be made clear that in order to attract Section 34 it was not sufficient to prove that each of the participating culprits had the same intention to commit a certain act. The requisite ingredient of Section 34 was that each must share the intention of the other. The second circumstances was that all the three of them had a common motive to avenge the incident at the festival. But there was no evidence that appellant No. 1 who was charged with the substantive offence of murder participated in the quarrel. Hence. all the three of them had no common motive. The last circumstance relied upon was that appellants 2 and 3 along with appellant 1 chased the deceased when he tried to escape from the scene of occurrence. But in the evidence no one deposed whether the stones pelted by appellants 2 and 3 hit the deceased. If appellant 1 had some motive other than the one which the prosecution tried to infer, he had nothing to avenge. All the circumstances when viewed in their cumulative effect would not permit an inference that appellants 2 and 3 shared common intention to commit murder. Therefore, the conviction of appellants 2 and 3 for an offence under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Penal Code could not be sustained. But they were guilty of an offence under Section 326 read with Section 34 of the Penal Code. Dajya Moshya Bhil v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1717 : 1984 Supp SCC 373 : 1984 CrLJ 1728 : (1984) 2 Crimes 368.

[7374] ● Murder common intention.—The Doctor who conducted the post-mortem found on the deceased only five injuries and out of them injuries Nos. 1 and 2 are found to be sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death. The other injuries are simple. The other circumstance also would show that all the four accused did not use their weapons indiscriminately. No doubt by virtue of the application of Section 34, IPC, all of then are convicted. Jayaram Shiva Tagore v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1991 SC 1735 (1737) : 1991 Supp (2) SCC 677 : (1992) SCC (Cri) 62 : 1991 CrLJ 2192 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 189.

[7375] ● Murder—Involvement of accused in incident and his giving barchhi blow established—Sufficient to convict him with aid of Section 34, IPC.—Even if it is assumed that PW-3 was not present and that the story regarding the appellant having given the blow on the back of Santa Singh is a subsequent improvement not found in the FIR. The involvement of the appellant in the incident and his giving of a barchhi blow to PW-4, Nanak Singh, when the latter tried to go to the rescue of his grandfather is sufficient to convict him with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Banta Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1991 SC 1379 (1381) : (1991) Supp (2) SCC 403 : (1991) SCC (Cri) 1051 : 1991 CrLJ 1342 : JT 1991 (5) SC 182 (2).

[7376] ● Murder—Common Intention.—Both Sections 149 and 34, IPC deal with a combination of persons who become liable to be punished as sharers in the commission of offences. The non-applicability of Section 149, IPC is, therefore, no bar in convicting the appellants under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, if the evidence discloses commission of an offence in furtherance of the common intention of them all. Keeping in view the manner of attack as disclosed by the eye-witnesses and the number and nature of injuries, we have no hesitation in holding that the appellants made the murderous attack on the deceased and caused his instantaneous death. We are satisfied that the appellants acted in furtherance of their common intention of murdering the deceased." Nethala Pothuraju v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 2214 (2215) : (1992) 1 SCC 49 : (1992) SCC (Cri) 20 : 1991 CrLJ 3133 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 9 : JT 1991 (4) SC 135 : (1991) 3 Crimes 418.

[7377] ● Murder—Conviction of appellant with aid of Section 34, IPC.—The prosecution evidence does not disclose that the fatal blow which caused injury No. 1 was given by the appellant. Inherent of this submission is the assumption that the fatal blow was given by someone else. That establishes the fact that more than one person participated in the commission of the crime. We have also on an independent appreciation of evidence of eye-witnesses PW-1, PW-3 and PW-4 come to the conclusion that several persons had participated in the commission of the crime. We are convinced from the evidence of PW-1, Komal Chand, that some of the co-accused, particularly, Gunda, Parsu and Gopal had participated in the commission of the crime. It is another matter that in the absence of a State appeal, the High Court could not interfere with their acquittal, but as rightly pointed in Brathi's case AIR 1991 SC 318, this Court is not bound by the facts found proved on the appreciation of evidence by the Courts below and is, in law, entitled to reach its own conclusion different from the one recorded by the Courts below on a review of the evidence. In the present case we feel it safe to confirm the conviction of the appellant with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Khujji alias Surendra Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 1853 (1865) : (1991) 3 SCC 627 : (1991) SCC (Cri) 916 : 1991 CrLJ 2653 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 605 : JT 1991 (3) SC 151 : (1991) 3 Crimes 86.

[7378] ● Common intention to cause grievous hurt.—The crux of the prosecution case is that on 25.11.80 while the appellants caught hold of the left and right hands of the Kailash Nonia (deceased herein), Shyambali Nonia on being instigated by his father Sita Ram Nonia, gave one stab with a dagger and inflicted a stab wound, with the result of which the deceased died. Admittedly the appellants did not have any weapon and attacked the deceased. Nor did they even by words express their intention to cause the death of the deceased. The father of Shyambali Nonia who instigated the offence deed even before the committal proceedings of the case. Shyambali Nonia who actually stabbed and murdered the deceased is not before the Court. Further there is no evidence indicating that there was any pre-concert of mind of all the four accused persons including these two appellants in perpetrating the offence of murder.

At the same time it is, however, absolutely impossible to relieve them of any liability whatsoever in connection with the stab injury which was facilitated by their catching hold of the deceased when Shyambali Nonia was inflicting the stab wound. Hence there is no escape from the conclusion on the evidence available that the appellants shared at least the common intention with Shyambali Nonia to cause grievous hurt punishable under Section 326 read with Section 34, IPC. Harbans Nonia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1992 SC 125 (125) : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 485 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 257 : 1992 CrLJ 105.

[7379] ● Murder—Common intention.—Admittedly there was a dispute regarding the claim over the land between the parties. On account of this dispute, there was a long standing and deep-rooted animosity between them. Therefore we have to approach the evidence in the back ground of such hostility that existed between them. Except a general statement that all the appellants dragged the deceased from the railway apartment, it is not the case of the prosecution that anyone of the appellants 1, 3 and 4 either was armed with any weapon or assaulted the deceased. Had these three appellants (appellants 1, 3 and 4) shared the common intention on account of any prior concert and pre-arranged plan, each of the appellants would have carried some weapon and attacked her or at least fisted or kicked her. But in the present case, there is absolutely no evidence that except appellant No. 2, none of the other appellants assaulted the deceased nor any of these three appellants exhorted the appellant 2 to attack the deceased. The evidence let in by the prosecution and the circumstances attending the case do not unfold any prior concert or meeting of minds of the appellants in sharing the intention of the appellant 2, the perpetrator of the murderous assault on the victim. Ram Lal Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1992 SC 59 : (1992) 2 SCC 746 : (1992) SCC (Cri) 904 (906) : 1992 CrLJ 1 : JT 1992 (4) SC 473.

[7380] ● Common intention sharing of.—As regards the other two accused there is no reason to interfere with the finding of the High Court that these appellants did share the common intention of appellant No. 1. They had no doubt come armed with weapons but none of them caused any injury on any vital part of the deceased. The finding of the High Court that the common intention of the appellant was to chastise Kesar Singh and not to kill him, appears to be well founded. Gurdeep Singh v. Jaswant Singh, AIR 1992 SC 987 (988) : 1992 Supp (3) SCC 103 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 278.

[7381] ● Common intention to beat up or assault victim.—The motive for the commission of the crime is stated to be the incident which had taken place on the previous day i.e., April 5, 1975 between Munna and the deceased. On the next day, when the deceased was seen sitting at the Baithak of Islamullah, the two brothers went there and abused the deceased. Thereafter, they caught hold of him and took him to the nearby lane. Ayyia though armed with a razor did not choose to use the same. Ayyia had no idea that his brother would take out the knife and cause the fatal injury to the deceased. In the circumstances, it is difficult to attribute to him a common intention to kill the deceased and convict him with the aid of Section 34. At the most since he knew his brother was carrying a weapon and was smarting under an insult, he could be said to be aware of the fact that there was a possibility of Munna causing injury. In the circumstances his conviction under Section 302/34, IPC needs to be altered to Section 326/34, IPC. Munna and Ayyia v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 278 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 798 (799-800) : 1993 CrLJ 45.

[7382] ● Murder—Common intention.—In the instant case Sheo Karan and his wife, the appellant went to Har Lal's room to question him as to why he has transferred his lands in favour of the son of Sardara to which he replied that it was his will and pleasure. This caused provocation to Sheo Karan and he started beating Har Lal till then no part was attributed to the appellant. At this juncture, according to the eye-witnesses the deceased and his sons and the other people intervened and Sheo Karan dealt blows on the head of the deceased and it is alleged that the appellant also caused one injury on the left side of the face of Sardara. It can thus be seen that in cases, where large number of persons are involved and in the commotion injuries are caused to the prosecution witnesses and others, it becomes the duty of the Court to determine the common intention which could be attributed to those accused who stand convicted, where some of their co-accused stand acquitted and the State chooses not to file any appeal against their acquittal. With a view to determine the common intention, the nature of injuries, the background of the incident and the nature of the weapons used to cause the injuries besides other factors are required to be properly considered and appreciated. Nadodi Jayaraman v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1993 SC 777 : (1992) 2 SCC 28 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 184 (198) : 1993 CrLJ 426 : JT 1992 (3) SC 222 : 1992 Cr App R (SC) 317.

[7383] ● Causing disappearance of evidence—Murder.—It may be correct that the process of digging a grave of five feet deep, the filling of the grave and then erasing the traces, etc. may not have been done by Sardar Singh alone but there is not an iota of evidence on the record not even a whisper to the effect that it was Saraswati who helped him in concealing or causing the evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear. Simply because she is the wife of appellant Sardar Singh and as such is supposed to be living in the same house, it cannot be assumed that she was guilty of the offence under Section 201/34 of the IPC. Sardar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration, Delhi), AIR 1993 SC 1696 : (1993) Supp (2) SCC 393 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 564 (566) : 1993 CrLJ 1489 : JT 1993 (4) SC 534 : (1993) 2 Crimes 13.

[7384] ● Overt act.—Section 34, IPC is applicable even if no injury has been caused, by the particular accused himself. For applying Section 34 it is not necessary to show some overt act on the part of the accused. Chinta Pulla Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1993 SC 1899 : 1993 Supp (3) SCC 134 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 875 : 1993 CrLJ 2246.

[7385] ● Intention to cause death—Inference.—According to the prosecution witness, who have been believed by both the Courts below injuries were caused to the deceased only by kicks and fist blows keeping in view the ocular testimony and the medical evidence, it is difficult to hold that the accused had intended to cause the injuries on the deceased which were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause his death. Had the accused shared the common intention to cause the death of the deceased, nothing prevented them from using the pistol. The Courts have to take into consideration all the attendant circumstances while considering the question of offence. The fact that neither the knife nor the lathi nor the pistol was used, even though the deceased was lonesome and was attacked by four young persons, would go to show that in all probabilities the respondents did not intend to cause death of the deceased and that they wanted to severely assault him only. However, in causing the injuries, as have been noticed in the post-mortem report, the respondents must be attributed the knowledge that by their acts they were likely to cause the death of the deceased, though without any intention to cause his death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause his death. The offence, in this case, would, therefore, be "culpable homicide not amounting to murder" as per the third clause of Section 299, IPC punishable under Section 304, Part II/Section 34, IPC. Ramesh Kumar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1993 SC 2317 (2319) : 1994 Supp (1) SCC 116 : 1993 CrLJ 3137 : JT 1993 (4) SC 463 : (1993) 2 Crimes 491.

[7386] ● Common intention to cause death not established.—If common intention to cause death had been established in the case, the prosecution would not have been required to prove which of the injuries was caused by which accused to sustain the conviction of the accused with the aid of Section 34, IPC but in a case like this, where five of the co-accused stand acquitted and the common intention to cause death is not established beyond a reasonable doubt, the prosecution must establish the exact nature of the injuries caused to the deceased by the accused with a view to sustain the conviction of that accused for inflicting that particular injury. The evidence on the record does not lead to the conclusion that A-2 and A-3 alone caused all the injuries to the deceased with the intention to cause his death. The broad circumstances of the case impel us to hold that the common intention of A-2 and A-3 was not to cause the death of the victim and therefore, neither of them could be held guilty of the offence under Sections 302/34, IPC. Nadodi Jayaraman v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1993 SC 777 : 1992 Supp (3) SCC 161 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 184 (200, 201) : 1993 CrLJ 426 : JT 1992 (3) SC 222.

[7387] ● Murder—Common intention.—The only part attributed to the appellant was that when Sardara intervened Sheo Karan dealt blows on the head and the appellant dealt one blow on the mandible. It can, thus, be seen that there was no common intention on the part of the appellant to kill Sardara. The prosecution version is that their intention was only to question Har Lal as to why he parted his lands to the sons of Sardara instead of giving equally to both the sons. Because of his reply Sheo Karan enraged, it is only at that stage Sardara entered into the picture and the attack on him took place. Viewed from this angle we find it difficult to hold that the appellant had intention to cause the death of the deceased or that she shared the same with her husband Sheo Karan. Both have to be held responsible for their individual acts. In that view of the matter the offence committed by the appellant would be one punishable under Section 326, IPC, simpliciter. Tripta v. State of Haryana, AIR 1993 SC 948 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 843 (845, 846) : 1992 CrLJ 3944.

[7388] ● No common intention to cause death.—Now coming to the nature of the offence, according to the eye-witnesses the three accused came together armed with sharp edged weapons and inflicted injuries which resulted in the fracture of the skull bones. The fracture of the tibia, fracture of the metacarpal bone and some other injuries were also caused. However, if their intention was to cause death, they should have inflicted some more injuries on any vital part of the body but they have given one blow only with the blunt side of the axe and the deceased died only six days later. Therefore, in these circumstances, it cannot be said that they had a common intention for causing the death. But they must be attributed that by inflicting such injuries they were likely to cause the death of the deceased, in which case the offence will amount only to culpable homicide and not murder. Babu Lal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 1941 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 1026 (1028) : 1993 CrLJ 2667.

[7389] ● Accused sharing common intention to beat deceased violently.—Taking the evidence of the witnesses as a whole it emerges that all these four accused inflicted injuries and without knowledge of A-1 the deceased could not have been detained in custody. Therefore no separate case can be made out so far A-1 is concerned. All the four accused shared the common intention to beat the deceased violently and they must have knowledge that by inflicting such injuries, they were likely to cause the death of the deceased. Dalip Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1993 SC 2119 : (1993) Supp (3) SCC 336 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 1005 (1011-1012) : 1993 CrLJ 2092 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 335 : JT 1993 (3) SC 682.

[7390] ● Common intention—Inference of from circumstances.—Common intention is to be inferred from the circumstances particularly the part played by the accused and the surrounding circumstances, namely, nature of the weapon used and the injury inflicted as well as the meeting of the minds among the accused who are being held constructively liable. The facts, would reveal that the appellant tried to pick the pocket of PW-5 who called the deceased and the deceased tried to catch hold of the appellant and it was a sudden act on the part of the William who picked out a knife from his pocket and inflicted a single injury on the deceased. Under those circumstances, it cannot be held that the appellant and Sukhchain Singh had prior knowledge that Willaim was armed with a knife and the part played by William cannot be said to be a conjoint act so as to attract the element of common intention on the part of the appellant as well as Sukhchain Singh. Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1994 SC 1651 (1652) : 1995 Supp (4) SCC 558 : 1994 CrLJ 1974.

[7391] ● Common intention—Constructive liability.—For assuring at a conclusion of constructive liability what the Courts have to see is whether they had common intention or common object and the ingredients are to be considered in convicting by application of Section 149 or Section 34, IPC. The Court has to look into the proved circumstances like the formation of the unlawful assembly, the weapons with which they were armed and the active role played by them. The witnesses have consistently deposed that the members of the unlawful assembly of which these three appellants were members, chased the deceased armed with spears. While chasing they surrounded the deceased and inflicted injuries with their respective weapons and these three accused also inflicted injuries with these sharp edged weapons. At that juncture, the deceased managed to escape and ran into the nearby house. The witnesses have consistently deposed that the members of the unlawful assembly chased the deceased and went into the house and inside the house only PW-13 was there, but he turned hostile. However, the proved circumstances established that they were members of the unlawful assembly, chased the deceased and necessarily they must have also inflicted injuries which ultimately proved fatal. These circumstances are enough to invoke Section 34 or Section 149, IPC even against these three appellants taking the transaction as a whole into consideration. Balineedi Venkataramaiah v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 76 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 732 : 1994 CrLJ 61.

[7392] ● Murder—Common intention.—If this be the factual position it is not known how Section 34 will cease to apply once this conclusion is arrived at then it matters little as to what part Joginder Singh played. No doubt he gave only a lathi blow on the right arm of the deceased. That by itself may not be sufficient to convict him under Section 302, IPC but when he is charged under Section 34, the necessary, corollary is to convict him also under Section 302, IPC. Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1994 SC 461 (462, 463) : (1995) SCC (Cri) 178 : 1994 CrLJ 134.

[7393] ● Common intention—Anterior in time to commission of crime.—It is one of the settled principle of law that the common intention must be anterior in time to the commission of the crime. It is also equally settled law that the intention of the individual has to be inferred from the overt act or conduct or from other relevant circumstances. Therefore, the totality of the circumstances must be taken into consideration in order to arrive at a conclusion whether the accused had a common intention to commit the offence under which they could be convicted. Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1994 SC 461 (462) : 1995 SCC (Cri) 178 : 1994 CrLJ 134.

[7394] ● Common intention—Pre-arranged plan develop on spot.—The pre-arranged plan may develop on the spot. In other words, during the course of commission of the offence, all that is necessary in law is the said plan must proceed to act constituting the offence. In this case, it is clear that there was enmity between Hari Singh and deceased Gurbachan because of the dispute relating to the tenancy. The appellant, Joginder, is none other than the son of Hari Singh. The other two accused, Dara Singh and Bir Singh, had given evidence for Hari Singh in an ejectment case. If Hari Singh was entertaining an idea of getting rid of Gurbachan, certainly he could not have chosen better persons than the three or four accused for carrying out his plan. In the first instance, the accused abused Gurbachan Singh, then went inside the house of Hari Singh, brought deadly weapon and pounced upon Gurbachan. Thereafter, the injuries were caused with those deadly weapons on the deceased. In the ordinary course of events, the head injury caused by Hari Singh with iron pipe was sufficient to bring about his death. Therefore, it is clear that the four accused had the common intention to do away with Gurbachan Singh because only in the event of he being done away with, it would be possible to put further pressure on Hari Singh (sic) to vacate the demised portion of the house. From this, the only inference possible is that all these four accused had a common intention to kill Gurbachan. Not only that even PWs 2 and 3 the son and daughter of Gurbachan also received injuries which brings us closer to the inference in relation to common intention. Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1994 SC 461 (462) : 1995 SCC (Cri) 178 : 1994 CrLJ 134.

[7395] ● Murder—Conviction of accused order Section 302/34—Not under Section 302/149.—"Seven out of nine injuries were incised, and as per Doctor's view, could have been caused by sharp cutting weapon like gandasa. In coming to injury Nos. 8 and 9, the Doctor, no doubt, stated that there may have been some blunt object also. But if the assailants used the weapons in the manner as described by the witnesses, the same could have been resulted also in contusions. It is common knowledge that abrasions also could be caused by coming into contact with rough sickle or even by falling on the ground. Injury No. 8 is only a small abrasion with a width of 1" x 1/10". The injury No. 9 was due to fall on the rough surface. Admittedly, the occurrence had taken place in the field. Even otherwise, the prosecution version that three assailants armed with lathis attacked indiscriminately is not supported by the medical evidence since we find superficial abrasions described in injury Nos. 8 and 9. Therefore participation of the accused Nos. 1 to 3 becomes doubtful. In the result, appellant/accused Nos. 1 to 3 are given the benefit of doubt and they are acquitted, and their conviction under Section 302/149, IPC and the sentence of imprisonment for life thereunder, are set aside. Insofar as accused Nos. 4 to 6 are concerned, they were also convicted under Section 302/140, IPC. The evidence is clearly to the effect that all the three accused used gandasa and inflicted injuries, and they were convicted under Section 302/34, IPC...." Jadu Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 957 (958) : 1994 CrLJ 1209.

[7396] ● Intention to cause injury sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature not established.—It was submitted by the learned counsel for the appellant that the intention to cause injury which was found sufficient to cause the death in the ordinary course of nature was not established. In support of this submission, he relied on the circumstances namely that the whole incident took place because of a trivial incident which resulted in a quarrel and that the weapon used was only a lathi and in the circumstances, it cannot be said that the accused intended to cause the death by inflicting that particular injury which objectively was proved by the medical evidence to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. In other words, he submits that clause 3 of Section 300, IPC is not attracted in this case. We find considerable force in the submission.

The weapon used is not a deadly weapon as rightly contended by the learned Counsel. The whole occurrence was a result of a trivial incident and in those circumstances, the accused dealt two blows on the head with a lathi, therefore, it cannot be stated that he intended to cause the injury which is sufficient, at the most it can be said that by inflicting such injuries he had knowledge that he was likely to cause the death, in which case the offence committed by him would be culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

The accused has committed offence under Section 304, Part II, IPC. Joseph v. State of Kerala, AIR 1994 SC 34 (35-36) : 1995 SCC (Cri) 165 : 1994 CrLJ 21.

[7397] ● Murder—Common intention.—According to the learned counsel for respondents there was no independent charge under Section 302, IPC either against the husband or against the wife. Both were charged under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. He states that the element of sharing the common intention by husband and the wife was the core of the charge. The husband having been acquitted and there being no independent charge under Section 302, IPC against the wife she cannot be convicted for the said offence. We see force in the argument advanced by the learned counsel.

Both husband and wife were charged with an offence under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. The charge which was based on the common intention of the two failed with the acquittal of the husband and there being no charge under Section 302 simpliciter against the wife, she could not be convicted. In any case there is no evidence on the record to show that she independently committed the offence. State of West Bengal v. Vindu Lachmandas Sakhrani, AIR 1994 SC 772 (773) : 1995 SCC (Cri) 175 : 1994 CrLJ 919.

[7398] ● Common intention to cause death.—To draw an inference under Section 34, IPC, the circumstance should be such as to show that a clear common intention was there and it was shared by all the appellants at least these two, who are before the Court.

If the common intention was to cause the death, it cannot be understood as to why Gian Chand gave only one blow. In view of the fact that the deceased died after two weeks, the death may be because of the intervening cause. So it is difficult to hold that the common intention was to commit the murder. In that view of the matter, the applicants have to be found guilty for their individual acts. Kishan Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1994 SC 32 (34) : 1994 CrLJ 19.

[7399] ● Murder—Intention to cause death not spelt out.—It is not even clear whether the other accused were aware that the appellant was even armed with a knife during the quarrel at 9.30 p.m. or 10 p.m. when the occurrence took place. The Doctor found only one stab injury which unfortunately was on the neck because of the blow landing there. Under these circumstances, it becomes very difficult to hold that he intended to cause that particular injury which was found to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death by the Doctor. The cause of death was due to shock and haemorrhage because of the cut cartoid and other surrounding arteries. PW-2's evidence namely that there was a quarrel is also supported by the evidence of PW-3. The evidence of these two witnesses indicate that there was a sudden quarrel. Therefore, the intention to cause that particular injury cannot be spelt out from the act committed by the appellant. Ranjitsinh Chandrasinh Atodarea v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1060 (1062) : 1994 CrLJ 1425.

[7400] ● Common object/intention to cause death—Sharing of.—The appellants and others were lying in wait; on seeing deceased, A-1 and PW-1 and PW-3 coming in Tonga, exhorted others to attack the deceased. A-1 shot at and A-4 and A-5 attacked fallen deceased with knives and inflicted 5 incise injuries. They shared the common object/intention and they left together. The injuries are very grave injuries which are sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. Therefore the offence comes within the four corners of Section 300, IPC. The conviction under Section 302 read with Section 149, IPC at any rate read with Section 34 is sustained. Malkhan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 1443 (1445) : 1995 Supp (4) SCC 560.

[7401] ● Murder—Common intention.—Having regard to the fact that it was a sudden affair and that A-2 inflicted only a simple injury, it is difficult to hold that he had the common intention with A-1 to commit the murder of the deceased. It would be unsafe to convict A-2, for the offence of murder under Section 302/34, IPC and sentence of imprisonment for life awarded thereunder are set aside. Instead he is convicted under Section 326, IPC and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for five years. Babubhai Ranchodbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1400 (1403) : (1994) 1 SCC 410 : (1994) SCC (Cri) 265 : 1994 CrLJ 2099 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 6 : JT 1993 (6) SC 549.

[7402] ● Common intention to kill.—So far as A-3 is concerned, the overt act attributed to her is that she alongwith A-2 caught hold of Ramaswamy and fell him down. The High Court held that she would not have shared the common intention. In our view the same reasoning applies to A-2 so far as the murder charge is concerned. It is only A-1 who inflicted the two fatal blows one on each of the deceased and, therefore, a clear case of murder is made out against him. So far as A-2 is concerned, he inflicted simple injuries with the stick on PW-2 and one on the deceased Ramaswamy. Therefore, common intention to kill the two deceased cannot be made out against him. Rajagopalaswamy Konar v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1994 SC 1621 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 184 : 1994 CrLJ 2195.

[7403] ● Sharing of common intention to commit murder—Inference as to.—There was no injury which can be attributed to a lathi blow on the deceased. It is only on PW-4 that some contusions and swelling could be found by the Doctor and there could not be any doubt that these injuries were caused due to the lathi blows. In these circumstances, particularly, having regard to the fact that no lathi injury was found on the deceased, then it must be inferred that Rajendra did not cause any injury to the deceased. At the most, it can be said that he inflicted lathi blows on PW-4. In the facts and circumstances, it is unsafe to convict Rajendra also under Sections 302/34, IPC holding that he also shared common intention to commit murder with A-1 and A-2, his conviction under Section 325/34, IPC is altered to one punishable under Section 325, IPC and the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment is confirmed. Dharam Pal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1988 (1991) : 1995 CrLJ 3642.

[7404] ● Common intention to cause injuries to deceased.—Besides the evidence of PW-1 of their having assaulted the deceased with lathis—which we have found to be unacceptable—there is no other evidence to indicate that they wanted the deceased to be done away with. It cannot be gain said, however, that their acts facilitated the stabbing of the deceased by Badri Narain but there is nothing whatsoever to indicate that the appellants knew that he intended to kill him though they must have anticipated that he would assault the deceased with the spear that he was carrying. In that view of the matter we conclude that though the common intention of the appellants to cause the death of Shyam Narain has not been established beyond all reasonable doubts, it has been conclusively established that their common intention was to cause injuries to the deceased with a deadly weapon namely, spear. In the result the conviction of the appellants under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC are set aside and instead they are convicted under Section 324 read with Section 34, IPC and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of two years each. Jagannath v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 712 : 1995 Supp (1) SCC 564.

[7405] ● Common intention to kill.—On the day of occurrence, Gaya Ram is said to have exhorted the appellants to kill the deceased and it is at his behest that the appellants opened the attack on the deceased killing him mercilessly by brutally causing him 17 injuries more than half of which were serious and two of them fatal on the head of the deceased resulting in extensive fractures of the scalp and injury to the brain tissues. Other injuries were on vital as well as non-vital parts and since some of them were fractures they were grievous. The common intention of the appellant was, thus, more than manifest from the result could achieve. They beat the deceased to pulp. There is no room to entertain the view that the appellants could be guilty of a lesser offence. Juthel v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1455 (1456) : (1996) 11 SCC 282 : 1995 CrLJ 2909.

[7406] ● Murder—Common intention.—So far as the three eye-witnesses are concerned, their evidence is quite consistent and acceptable. Their presence in the house was natural. PW-4 immediately after the incidence, contacted Tarsem Singh, went to police station, and lodged the FIR, within an hour. She has stated all the material facts in the FIR. The conduct of this witness and promptness with which the FIR was lodged make her evidence trustworthy. The evidence of PW-5 and PW-7 does not suffer form any serious infirmity and no good reason could be urged by the learned counsel for not relying upon their evidence. Their evidence establishes beyond any reasonable doubt that appellant No. 2 had given blows to the deceased and he died as a result thereof. Appellant No. 2 has been rightly convicted under Section 302, IPC. So far as appellant No. 1 is concerned, there is no sufficient evidence to sustain her conviction under Section 302/34, IPC. What the evidence of the three eye-witnesses establish is that immediately before the incident she had whispered something in the ears of her husband, appellant No. 2, had given him a bundle of new clothes, and had told him as to what he was looking for. From their evidence it cannot be inferred, that she had incited him to commit the murder of his brother. Therefore, her conviction under Section 302/34 is not at all proper and that she deserves to be acquitted. Jaswinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 2327 : 1995 CrLJ 3982 : (1995) 3 Crimes 396.

[7407] ● Common intention—Circumstance and evidence of eye-witness sufficient to infer.—"Senior counsel appearing for accused, however contended that when there was only one gun shot wound on the deceased and the prosecution evidence is to the effect that Tej Pal also used a gun and in the absence of any second injury it cannot be said definitely as to which one of them caused the fatal injury to the deceased and that the circumstance that only one empty cartridge was recovered from the scene of occurrence shows that one shot was fired and since it cannot be attributed to Dharampal specifiedly, it is unsafe to convict him under Section 302/34, IPC. We have examined this submission carefully. We find from the evidence of the eye-witnesses that both of them fired guns. May be that one of the shots fired by either of them might have missed the target. For inferring common intention, the fact that both of them used their guns and fired at the deceased by itself is a circumstance which is sufficient to draw an inference that there was a common intention." Dharam Pal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1988 (1990) : 1995 CrLJ 3642.

[7408] ● Murder—Proof—Common intention.—The appellant was tried with other accrued persons under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. The other accused have been acquitted. The doctor found four injuries on deceased caused by firearm collectively sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death. The doctor refused to opine that two injuries attributed to appellant's firing were sufficient to cause death, the appellant cannot be convicted under Section 302, IPC. He can be convicted under Section 326, IPC. Gurdial Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 2468 : 1995 Supp (3) SCC 451 : (1995) SCC (Cri) 947 : 1995 CrLJ 4171 (SC) : (1995) 3 Crimes 615 (SC) : JT 1995 (6) SC 140 : 1995 (4) Scale 837 : 1995 (4) CCR (SC) 37.

[7409] ● Common intention of unlawful assembly to cause single hurt.—If really a mob of 50-60 persons wanted to commit murders nothing prevented them from inflicting severe injuries on the persons of Govindbhai and the two victims, more so, when some of them were armed with sharp cutting and dangerous weapons the fact that the accused appellants Nos. 1 and 2 used blunt edges of the weapons and not their sharp-edges, goes a long way to show that they did not also share a common intention to kill Govindbhai when they assaulted him. The facts and circumstances of the case particularly the fact that most of the members of the assembly only carried ordinary sticks, a few of which, according to the prosecution were recovered from the houses of the accused-appellants clearly indicated that the common object of the unlawful assembly was only to cause simple hurt. Bharwad Jakshibhai Nagjibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1995 SC 2505 : (1995) 5 SCC 602 : 1995 CrLJ 4176.

[7410] ● Common intention conviction sustainability.—In Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116 : (1955) 2 SCR 1140, this Court spelt out the scope of Sections 34 and 149, IPC. There the charge was under Section 302/34, IPC but the only co-accused having been acquitted, the conviction of the left out accused, who was the appellant, was challenged on the ground that the element of common intention having got dropped out, the conviction of the appellant was not sustainable. That the omission to frame a charge or the departure from the charge cannot invalidate conviction unless prejudice has been caused. We would say the same about alternative charge in the present case. Jai Singh alias Bandu v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) SCC (Cri) 672 : JT 1996 (4) SC 728 : (1996) 2 Crimes 127.

[7411] ● No material showing accused having common intention to cause death.—Amrik Singh was an intervenor and as such Section 34 of the IPC would not be attracted against Roor Singh. It was Baldev Singh alone who caused injuries to Amrik Singh resulting in his death.

The injuries inflicted on the thigh of Amrik Singh by Baldev Singh have not been proved to be serious or fatal and Amrik Singh died nearly 8 days after the incident on account of cumulative effect of the injuries. The passage of time should have its impact in taking an over all view of the matter. The appellants have served the sentence of imprisonment for more than two years.

That the appellants are found guilty and sentenced under Section 299 read with Section 304, Part 1 of the IPC to a term of imprisonment, which will be limited to the period they have already undergone for causing the death of Balbir Singh and Amrik Singh. Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 372 : (1995) 6 SCC 593 : (1995) SCC (Cri) 1132 : JT 1995 (7) SC 286.

[7412] ● Common intention sharing of with main perpetrators of crime.—If the Court enters upon a finding that any of the remaining persons who participated in the crime had shared common intention with the main perpetrators of the crime, the Court is not helpless in seeking the aid of Section 34, IPC to enter a conviction against such persons arraigned as accused. This is despite the difference between the scope of Section 34 and Section 149, IPC, yet this have some resemblance between each other and are to some extent overlapping. Dhanna v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 2478 (2480) : (1996) 10 SCC 79 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 1192 : 1996 CrLJ 3516 : JT 1996 (6) SC 652.

[7413] ● Court to take recourse to Section 34 even if Section not specifically mentioned in charge.—It is open to the Court to take recourse to Section 34 of the IPC even if the said section was not specifically mentioned in the charge and instead Section 149, IPC has been included. Of course, a finding that the assailant concerned had a common intention with the other accused is necessary for resorting to such a course. Dhanna v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 2478 (2480) : (1996) 10 SCC 79 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 1192 : 1996 CrLJ 3516 : JT 1996 (6) SC 652.

[7414] ● Murder—Common intention.—In the context of the evidence of PWs-4 and 6 that the appellant had fired on the back of the deceased Sukhdev Singh, the appellant can, therefore, be said to have caused injuries Nos. 2 and 3 and the other injury which according to the Doctor was fatal, was caused by the shot fired by Sukhwinder Singh. Since, however, Sukhwinder Singh stands acquitted, Section 34, IPC would have no application whatsoever and the appellant will be liable only for his act, namely, causing injuries Nos. 2 and 3, which was the result of one shot and by themselves, did not cause the death of Sukhwinder Singh. Resultantly, the appellant cannot be convicted for the offence under Section 302, IPC but as he had fired at Sukhdev Singh with rifle he cannot escape his conviction for the attempt to commit his murder. Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 755 (757) : (1996) 1 SCC 527 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 146 : JT 1995 (8) SC 279.

[7415] ● Murder common intention—Sharing of.—The evidence of PW-1 as to the manner in which D-1 and D-2 were done to death is also corroborated by the evidence of PW-2 in all material particulars including the individual roles that were played by A-2 to A-6 in the murder of D-2. In cross-examination however, it was elicited from him that he did not mention in his statement made under Section 161, CrPC, that D-2 was made to lie down on the log of wood and also did not state that A-3 to A-6 caught hold of him when A-2 struck him with billhook. If in view of the omissions—which, obviously are material and, therefore, amount to contradictions—we proceed on the basis that the evidence of PW-2 and also PW-3—about whose similar omissions—regarding individual roles of the appellants in the murder of D-2 cannot be relied upon, still the fact remains that there is no such contradictions so far as their testimonies seek to prove that A-3 to A-6 chased D-2 and PW-2 when they were rushing for their lives, with billhooks, that A-1 and A-2 joined them and that thereafter A-1 to A-6 caught hold of D-2 and A-2 assaulted him. The consistent evidence of the three eyewitnesses in this regard, coupled with the uncontroverted fact that D-2 met with his death there with a number of injuries unmistakably proves, independent of the actual role of the six appellants in the assault itself, that all of them shared the common intention to commit the murder. To put it differently, even if it is assumed that the prosecution has failed to conclusively prove as to the actual manner in which the appellants brought about the death of D-2, still the circumstances as appearing in the evidence of the three eyewitnesses establishes that all of them shared the common intention to commit the murder. Golla

Jalla Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 3244 : (1996) 8 SCC 565 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 713 (720-721) : 1996 CrLJ 2470 : JT 1996 (4) SC 587.

[7416] ● Murder—Common intention.—Once it is found that appellants entered the "baithak" of witness Ram Pal armed with lathis in company of accused Chandgi and Likhi and facilitated the attack by Likhi and Chandgi on the witnesses and the two deceased, it cannot be urged that they did not share the common intention of murdering the concerned victims of their assault. Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC would squarely get attracted against the present appellants alongwith accused Likhi and Chandgi who actually mounted the assault on these victims in company of the present appellants. Hari Chand v. State of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 1477 (1483) : (1996) 9 SCC 112 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 950 : 1996 CrLJ 1701 : JT 1996 (2) SC 140.

[7417] ● Common intention—Murder— Establishment of commission of overt act.—Establishment of an overt act is not a requirement of law to allow Section 34 to operate inasmuch as this section gets attracted when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of common intention of all. What has to be, therefore established by the prosecution is that all the concerned persons had shared the common intention. Court's mind regarding the sharing of common intention gets satisfied when overt act is established qua each of the accused. But then there may be a case where the proved facts would themselves speak of sharing of common intention. In the instant case, the appellant was a school teacher. He was supposed to be armed with a pen and not a knife. He would be normally found in his school and not on a road at night, and that too in the company of another who was also armed with knife. Not only this, seeing the deceased coming, the appellant and the co-accused came out from behind a tree and proclaimed to the deceased they were waiting for him. Thereafter, the deceased was belaboured, and let it be conceded, only by the co-accused. Question is whether the appellant had also the intention which had animated the co-accused in causing the death? It would definitely be permissible to draw the inference that both the accused had shared a common intention and the criminal act in question had been done in furtherance of the intention. Section 34 does not require anything more to get attracted. Krishnan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1997 SC 383 : 1996 (10) SCC 508, 613 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 1375 : 1996 CrLJ 4444 : JT 1996 (7) SC 613 : 1996 (3) SCJ 173 : 1996 (4) CCR 58 (SC) : 1996 (6) Scale 362.

[7418] ● Assault—Common intention.—The very nature of the assault and the injuries sustained by Bakhtawar Singh (deceased) unmistakably prove the common intention of the assailants. The common intention is to be gathered from the proved facts/circumstances. The evidence of PW-7 and PW-8 clearly indicate that Pritam Singh (A-4) held Bakhtawar Singh from his waist which facilitated A-1 to A-3 to cause assault on him with sticks. Even after Bakhtawar Singh fell down, A-1 to A-3 continued to assault him. In these circumstances there could not be better evidence of common intention. In the facts and circumstances of this case the High Court was totally wrong in altering the conviction of A-1 to A-4 from Section 302/34, IPC to Section 325/34, IPC. State of Punjab v. Amarjit Singh, AIR 1997 SC 167 (169) : (1996) 11 SCC 524 : (1997) SCC (Cri) 321 : 1997 CrLJ 67 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 54 : JT 1996 (9) SC 581.

[7419] ● Murder—Common intention.—According to PWs-3 and 8 at the time of assault A-4 was standing with a knife From the cross-examination of PW-3, we, however, find that before the Investigating Officer he did not state that A-4 was holding a knife in his hand though he spoke of his presence. Even if we proceed on the assumption that A-4 was there with knife still we feel that we will not be justified in reaching the firm conclusion that he shared the common intention with A-1 to A-3 to commit the murder. As earlier noticed, the deceased had sustained 55 incised injuries on his person which indicates that A-1 to A-3 had given repeated blows upon him for sometime. Considered in that context, it was expected of A-4, if really he was sharing the common intention of the other three to commit the murder, to assault the deceased with the knife he was allegedly carrying. He is, therefore, entitled to at least the benefit of reasonable doubt. Chhota v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1997 SC 3501 (3505) : (1997) SCC (Cri) 1143 : 1997 CrLJ 4394 : JT 1997 (7) SC 565 : (1997) 3 Crimes 259.

[7420] ● Common intention to kill—Sharing of with co-accused.—The evidence on record unmistakably proved that while discharging his duties at the cinema hall the Head Constable asked the accused persons not to misbehave with the ladies who were enjoying the movie. Inspite repeated requests the accused persons did not desist from behaving in an objectionable manner. The Head Constable along with another Head Constable whose service he requisitioned tried to apprehend the accused person, one of the accused jumped into the lorry tanker and brought out the wooden lathi obviously to assault the Head constable, simply because he did not assault the deceased with the lathi but another accused did after snatching it from him it cannot be said that he was not a party thereto : he was held to have shared the common intention. Bhuupinder Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1997 SC 642 : 1997 CrLJ 958 : JT 1996 (11) SC 720 : 1997 (1) Crimes 89 (SC).

[7421] ● Common intention—Murderous assault.—Appellant No. 2, according to the evidence of the eye-witnesses, had given sticks blows on the legs of the deceased. Though the eye-witnesses have also stated that some more blows were also given by him to Babu after he had fallen down, they have not stated on which part of the body those blows were given. Thus, there is no clear evidence on record to show that appellant No. 2 had caused a fatal injury. Therefore, conviction of appellant No. 2 under Section 302 cannot be sustained. However, his participation in the murderous assault on Babu along with appellant No. 1 is proved beyond any doubt and, therefore he would be guilty under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Therefore, his conviction will have to be altered from Section 302 to Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. However, the order of sentence imposed upon him is confirmed. Hari Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1997 SC 1505 (1508) : (1996) 11 SCC 551 : 1997 CrLJ 733 : JT 1996 (9) SC 335.

[7422] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object to commit murder.—It is no doubt true that the eye-witnesses had deposed that A-34, A-35 and A-36 were the members of the unlawful assembly/riotous mob which was chasing the deceased and the other injured persons of the Vankar community from the bus stand until they reached Vankarvas but when the mob came near the house of Vinobhai, these three accused persons went to the house of Vinobhai and thereafter set his house on fire and other members of the riotous mob continued to chase Vankars and thereafter they heard the firing sounds coming from that direction. The question that needs to be answered on these proved facts is as to whether A-34, A-35 and A-36 could be said to have shared the common object of committing murders with A-19, A-20 and A-21 who fired from their fire-arms killing Prabhudas and Pochabhai as also other appellants who caused an assault on Khodabhai and Mohanbhai with the deadly weapons as a result of which they also died on the spot. On the evidence on record, we find, it cannot be said to be conclusively established that A-34, A-35 and A-36 also shared the common object to commit the murders of four persons. The time factor in this behalf assumes great importance because when A-34, A-35 and A-36 were engaged in setting the house of Vinobhai on fire, the other appellants committed the murders of four persons by using fire arms and other deadly weapons. The Trial Court convicted A-34, A-35 and A-36 for committing the murders of Prabhubhai, Pochabhai, Khodabhai and Mohanbhai with the aid of both Section 149/34, IPC. The conviction and sentence of A-34, A-35 and A-36 under Section 302/149 or 34, IPC is quashed. However their conviction and sentences under Section 436/34, IPC is upheld. State of Gujarat v. Chandubhai Malubhai Parmar, AIR 1997 SC 1422 (1428, 1429) : (1997) 9 SCC 485 : (1997) SCC (Cri) 661 : 1997 CrLJ 1909 : JT 1997 (4) SC 481.

[7423] ● Dacoity with murder—Proof of common intention or common object of all not necessary.—Under Section 396, if any one of the dacoits commits murder in so committing dacoity every one of the dacoits is liable to be punished either with death or imprisonment for life or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to 10 years. If a dacoit in the process of and in pursuance of, the commission of a dacoity commits a murder, all of his companions who are participating in the commission of the same dacoity may be convicted under this section, although they may have no participation in the murder beyond the fact of participation in dacoity. It is not necessary that the murder should have been within the contemplation of all or some of them when the dacoity was planned nor is it necessary that they should have actually taken part in or abetted, its commission indeed they may not have been present at the scene of murder, or may not have known even that murder was going to be or had in fact been committed. But nonetheless they all will be liable for enhanced punishment provided a person is in fact murdered by one of the members of the gang in commission of the dacoity. Kalika Tewari v. State of Bihar, AIR 1997 SC 2186 : 1997 (4) SCC 445 : 1997 CrLJ 2531 : 1997 (2) Crimes (SC) 15 : 1997 (3) Scale 282 : 1997 (3) Supreme 397.

[7424] ● Common intention implies pre-arranged plan.—Usually the common intention implies a pre-arranged plan which in turn press possess a prior meeting of mind. But in a given case such common intention may develop at the spur of moment in course of the commission of offence. But such intention which develops at the spur of moment is different from a similar intention. The distinction between a common intention and a similar intention may be fine but is nonetheless a real one and if overlooked may lead to miscarriage of justice. Unless such common intention is established as a matter of necessary inference from the proved circumstances of the case, then the accused could be individually liable for their respective overt attacks and not for the act done by any other person. The mere fact that the accused persons were armed with some weapons itself would not be sufficient to attribute common intention of all of them to commit murder. In the instant case the accused persons came to prevent the labours from continuing the transplantation operation but at the spur of moment on account of certain lalkara being given by some of the accused persons, person armed with weapon started assaulting the deceased. But from mere assault even not on vital parts of the body which ultimately resulted in causing some minor injuries, it may not be sufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt that they also shared a common intention of causing murder. The conviction of accused under Sections 302/34 could not, therefore, be sustained and they were held liable under Sections 325/34. The accused who fired in their hands first whereafter all others assaulted with the respective weapons in their hands were held liable under Sections 302/34, IPC. Dukhmochan Pandey v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 40 : (1997) 8 SCC 405 : 1998 CrLJ 66 (SC).

[7425] ● Accused while firing not acting in furtherance of common intention.—There was nothing in the evidence of the eye-witnesses on the basis of which the respondents could have been held guilty for causing the murders of those five persons, on the contrary their evidence supported the defence version. The respondents had merely stated in the statements under Section 313, CrPC that they had fired shots in self-defence without admitting that any of their shots had hit anyone from the opposite party. There was no material before the Court on the basis of which it was possible to say who had caused whose death. There was no material before the Court on the basis of which it could have been said that while firing shots from the guns, they were acting in furtherance of their common intention. Thus, in absence of any reliable evidence, it was not proper to convict the respondents in this case for causing the deaths of those five persons. Harjinder Singh v. Karnail Singh, AIR 1998 SC 1936 (1937) : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1598 : 1998 CrLJ 2556 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 286 : JT 1998 (2) SC 437 : (1998) 1 Crimes 281.

[7426] ● Murder—Common intention.—'H' had not only come out of the house of 'T' along with him but had also taken part in the assault on 'B' even though he was not attacked either by 'B' or any other person accompanying him. It was not 'H' that he had intervened in that manner to stop 'T' and 'B' from fighting. Moreover from the words uttered by 'H' namely, that 'T' should not wait any more and fire at 'B' it becomes apparent that both 'T' and 'H' share the common intention that a shot be fired by 'T' at 'B'. It was in pursuance of this common intention that 'T' had fired the shot which killed 'B'. Both the Courts were, therefore, right in drawing an inference from these facts that both 'H' and 'T' had entertained a common intention to cause death of 'B'. Harpal Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1998 SC 1553 : 1998 CrLJ 1563 at p. 1564 (SC) (P&H) : 1997 (7) Scale 625 : 1997 (10) Supreme 404.

[7427] ● Murder committing of in furtherance of common intention.—Coming first to the evidence of PW-1 this Court finds that he has narrated the entire prosecution case detailed earlier. Next, the unimpeachable evidence of PW-10, who examined him at the Kakinada Hospital at 10.50 p.m. on July 31st, 1992 proves that he had six injuries on his person. PW-10 opined that all the injuries were fresh and one of them (injury No. 6) was grievous. According to him some of the injuries could be caused by axe and knife. The injuries found on the person of PW-1 fully supports his claim of having been present at the scene of offence. Then again, in view of the concurrent finding of the learned Courts below that the evidence adduced by the tow doctors who were examined as defence witnesses, namely DW-4 and DW-5 could not be relied upon a finding with which we are in complete agreement it must be said that the FIR was lodged at the earliest available opportunity. This is another circumstance to corroborate the evidence (of) PW-1. The evidence of other three witnesses, namely PWs-2, 3 and 4 fully support that of PW-1 and in spite of searching cross examination the defence could not make a dent in their evidence to discredit them. The evidence of the four eye-witnesses clearly establishes that the accused persons came there armed with various weapons and all of them participated in the murder of Buchi Reddy. 18 injuries of different nature, shapes and sizes all over his body, which resulted in his immediate death, as testified by PW-9, go a long way to support the version of all the eye-witnesses as to the manner in which the assault took place. Kovvuri Surya Bhaskara Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 1570 : 1998 (9) SCC 504 : 1998 CrLJ 1628 at p. 1632, 1633 (SC) : JT 1998 (2) SC 275 : 1998 (1) Crimes 260 (SC) : 1998 (3) SLT 391 : 1998 (1) CCR 375 (SC) : 1998 (2) Supreme 407 : 1998 (2) Scale 178.

[7428] ● Common intention—Inference that persons kidnapping killed victim be drawn.—The prosecution case against the appellants was that they alongwith six other accused had committed the offences. There is no evidence to show that any of the appellants had himself killed any of the deceased. Therefore, the Designated Court in stead of convicting under Section 302, should have convicted them for the offence punishable under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Gurnam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1998 SC 2673 (2676) : (1998) 7 SCC 722 : 1998 CrLJ 4024 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 597 : JT 1998 (5) SC 444.

[7429] ● Common intention murder.—A-1 gave a gandasa blow from sharp side on the right side of the head of 'K'. A-2 then assaulted 'K' with his gandasa on the backside near the shoulder of 'K' and when he fell down, A-1 gave another gandasa blow near his right ear. These circumstances, therefore, unmistakably indicated that both the accused had a common intention to teach a lesson to 'K' who had slapped A-1 on the previous night. From these proved facts, the only inference that must follow is that A-2 also shared a common intention to teach a lesson to 'K' and in pursuance thereof assaulted him with a gandasa. A strong reliance was placed on the fact that no blood-stains was found on the gandasa recovered at the instance of A-2 but there is positive evidence on the record that the gandasa was washed before the recovery was effected. If this be so, in considered view of the Apex Court was rightly convicted under Section 302/34 of IPC. Charan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1998 SC 323 : 1998 CrLJ 657 at 661 (SC) : (1997) 4 Crimes 147.

[7430] ● Accused acting in concert in furtherance of common intention.—The evidence of four witnesses, clearly establishes that Mahmood died as a result of the shots fired by Ali Ahmad and Mahmod Sher and that Jameelan and Nanhey received injuries as a result of the shots fired by those two accused. The manner in which the appellants had assaulted Nathu initially and chased him right up to the house of Mahmood, their entering the house of Mahmood and then firing shots at him and his wife and child, when Mahmood had protested, clearly indicate that both Ali Ahmad and Mahmod Sher had acted in concert and it was in furtherance of their common intention that they had caused death of Mahmood and bodily injuries to Jameelan and Nanhey. The High Court was, therefore, right in convicting Ali Ahmad and Mahmod Sher for the offences punishable under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC and Section 307 read with Section 34, IPC. The other three accused were rightly convicted under Section 324 read with Section 149, IPC only. Ali Ahmad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 1232 (1233) : 1998 CrLJ 1637 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 527 : JT 1998 (2) SC 241 : (1998) 1 Crimes 211.

[7431] ● Murder—Charge.—The evidence clearly establishes that both the appellants had gone together to the Haveli and had fired shots at the deceased. Gajjan Singh was charged with an offence punishable under Section 302 read with Section 149, IPC. Therefore, the Courts below have not committed any illegality or impropriety in convicting him under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Gajjan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1998 SC 2417 (2418) : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1603 : 1998 CrLJ 3609 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 466 : JT 1998 (4) SC 520 : (1998) 3 Crimes 34.

[7432] ● Common intention—Proof.—In the instant case, it is stated that the deceased alone was assaulted by Nizamuddin with knife and Siddiqui with jathi. The appellant dealt blows with lathi not to the deceased but to other witnesses. There is no direct evidence of common intention. There is no case nor evidence of exhortation by him or of the fact that with a view to keep the said witnesses away from interfering and to facilitate Nizamuddin to kill the deceased, the appellant assaulted the said witnesses. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, it is not possible to arrive at the conclusion that the appellant and others shared common intention to kill the deceased-Shaukat Ali. Consequently, we are unable to sustain the conviction of the appellant for the offence under Section 302/34, IPC. However, on the facts, we confirm the conviction and sentence under Section 323/34, IPC awarded by the Courts below. Badruddin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 3243 (3244) : (1998) 7 SCC 300 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1619 : 1998 CrLJ 4591 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 674 : JT 1998 (6) SC 488 : (1998) 3 Crimes 256.

[7433] ● Murder—Common intention.—The graveness of the charge against the appellant and two others, namely, Daljeet Singh and Ganeshi was that the said three persons came on motorcycle; Ganeshi and the other caught hold of Kailash Soni and exhorted Daljeet Singh to strike him on that Daljeet Singh have 2-3 blows with his Kripan to Kailash Soni which resulted in his instantaneous death. From the averments on the FIR as well as from the statement of PW-1, it cannot be said that the appellant had shared common intention to kill the deceased. The appellant might not have been known that Daljeet Singh was having a kripan under his stockings. The instigation was only "to strike" and as such his conviction under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC is not sustainable. See Jai Narain Mishra v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 1764 and Mata Din v. State of Maharashtra, JT 1998 (5) SC 264. The conviction of the appellant under Section 302/34, IPC is, therefore, set aside; instead he is convicted under Section 324 read with Section 110, IPC and sentenced to the period already undergone. Ajay Sharma v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1998 SC 2798 (2799) : (1999) 1 SCC 174 : 1998 CrLJ 4590 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 667 : JT 1998 (6) SC 378.

[7434] ● Common intention—Murder.—For an inference of common intention to be drawn for the purposes of Section 34 the evidence and circumstances of the case should establish, without any room for doubt that a meeting of minds and a fusion of ideas had taken place amongst different accused and in prosecution if the overt acts of the accused persons flowed out as if in obedience to the command of a single mind. If on the evidence there is doubt as to the involvement of a particular accused in the common intention, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the said accused persons. There is no dispute with the proposition that a common intention can develop at the spur of the moment. Brijlala Prasad Sinha v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 2443 (2453) : (1998) 5 SCC 69 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 1382 : 1998 CrLJ 3611 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 512 : JT 1998 (4) SC 534.

[7435] ● Common intention to kill victims.—At least there is nothing in the evidence of PWs-7 and 8 to indicate that the police personnel left the Police station on being informed that miscreants are speeding up in a Maruti Van with the intention of killing the miscreants. All the accused persons excepting Brijlala Prasad left together in a vehicle with their arms and ammunitions on being informed that some miscreants are speeding up in a Maruti Van. The police personnel chased the vehicle and fired indiscriminately on vehicles and killed three occupants of the vehicle. However as per available evidence the two accused police persons had fired at the occupants of the vehicle when it came to stop due to traffic jam. The accused had developed common intention to kill the victims and were convicted under Section 302/34, IPC. It is, of course, true that when the Police party came, Brijlala Prasad also came together and the three dead bodies had been brought by them. The only evidence which possibly can be said to have been established, so far as accused-Brijlala Prasad is concerned, is that there was some shortage of cartridges which had been supplied to him and no explanation had been offered by him. But merely for such shortage of 9 rounds of cartridges, which had been supplied to Brijlala Prasad, a year before the date of occurrence, it is difficult to come to the conclusion that at 71 Mile Post, Brijlala Prasad who left the Police station half-an-hour after Dudh Nath Ram and others had left, had at all used his revolver and, therefore, from the circumstances established against Brijlala Prasad it is difficult to hold that he also shared the common intention which developed at 71 Mile Post. Brijlala Prasad Sinha v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 2443 : (1998) 5 SCC 699 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 1382 : 1998 CrLJ 3611 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 512 : JT 1998 (4) SC 534.

[7436] ● Common intention inference of.—To apply Section 34, IPC, apart from the fact that there should be two or more accused, two factors must be established:

(i) common intention, and

(ii) participation of the accused in the commission of an offence. If common intention is proved but no overt act is attributed to the individual accused, Section 34 will be attracted as essentially it involves vicarious liability but if participation of the accused in the crime is proved and common intention is absent, Section 34 cannot be invoked. In every case, it is not possible to have direct evidence of common intention. It has to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of each case. Jai Bhagwan v. State of Haryana, AIR 1999 SC 1083 : (1999) 3 SCC 102 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 388 (393) : 1999 CrLJ 1634 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 118 : JT 1999 (1) SC 386.

[7437] ● Co-accused intended to cause grievous hurt not death.—Undoubtedly, the appellants had gone together to the house of the deceased armed with deadly weapons and attacked him, but according to the evidence of the two eye-witnesses, Jagtar Singh assaulted Naib Singh on his left ankle with the weapon he was carrying. From this circumstance and the other attending facts and circumstances appearing on record, it can only be said that Jagtar Singh intended to cause grievous hurt to Naib Singh and not to cause his death. Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1999 SC 75 : (1999) 2 SCC 174 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 120 (122) : 1999 CrLJ 20 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 758 : JT 1998 (7) SC 442.

[7438] ● Common intention—No sharing of.—It was submitted that there was no meditation no enmity and Matadin never intended to cause death. It was submitted that when he exhorted his fellow by saying "maro sale ko" he did not intend that the deceased should be killed. Reliance was placed on the statement of the deceased recorded by the police and the Magistrate. The version of the prosecution that he gave blow with "gupti" on the back of the deceased had been disbelieved. But then Matadin would be aware of the fact that Ramsingh was wearing button knife on his waist and on this exhortation, he used the same by stabbing the deceased. He might not be sharing a common intention with Ramsingh to cause death of Ashok but the circumstances of the case and particularly when the Trial Court itself found that by his words "maro sale ko" instigated Ramsingh and others to assault Ashok, he could nevertheless be guilty for abetment of an offence under Section 324 in view of Section 110, IPC.

The prosecution has failed to prove that the other two accused were also with the appellant and had participated in commission of the offence. In absence of any reliable evidence whether any one else was with the appellant and under what circumstances and by whom further blows were given to the deceased, it cannot be said that the appellant had killed the deceased in furtherance of common intention of himself and some others. Therefore, in view of the facts and circumstances of the case, it was not proper and legal to confirm the conviction of the appellant under Section 302 read with Section 304, IPC. Ramchandra Ohdar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 998 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 462 (463) : 1999 CrLJ 1449 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 135 : JT 1999 (1) SC 450.

[7439] ● Murder—Accused not having common intention.—The learned Counsel for the appellant rightly pointed out that the prosecution version with regard to the part played by A-2, A-3 is inconsistent. Some witnesses deposed that the deceased informed that accused Nos. 2 and 3 surrounded him while other witnesses deposed that the deceased told that they gave fist blows or slaps while some witnesses state that the deceased told that Tulsi Sonar and Satan Yadav caught hold of the deceased. Considering the aforesaid inconsistencies in the dying declaration with regard to the part played by A-2 and A-3, it cannot be said that prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that A-2 and A-3 are guilty for the offence punishable under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Paras Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 644 : (1999) 2 SCC 126 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 104 (108) : 1999 CrLJ 1122.

[7440] ● Common intention implies acting in concert.—The common intention implies acting in concert, existence of pre-arranged plan which is to be proved either from conduct or from circumstances or from any incriminating facts. It requires a pre-arranged plan and it pre-supposes prior concert. Therefore, there must be prior meeting of minds. The prior concert or meeting of minds may be determined from the conduct of the offenders unfolding itself during the course of action and the declaration made by them just before mounting the attack. It can also be developed at the spur of the moment but there must be a pre-arrangement or pre-meditated concert. From the mere fact that accused 'Ram Pravesh and Ramanand came from behind and caught hold of Tapeshwar whereafter Samunder Yadav and Sheo Layak Yadav came with gandasa in their hands and gave blows by means of 'gandasa', it cannot be said that the accused Ram Pravesh Yadav and Ramanand shared the common intention with accused Samundar Yadav and Sheo Layak Yadav. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 3830 (3832) : (1999) 8 SCC 555 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 9 : 2000 CrLJ 12 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 665 : JT 1999 (6) SC 560.

[7441] ● Necessary ingredients of common intention.—On the own showing of the Trial Court, the appellants were merely standing when the act of murder was committed by the other four. Indeed no evidence was laid by the prosecution to prove that any of the appellants committed any criminal act which resulted in the death of the victim. The reliance of the Trial Court on Mer Dhana Sida, 1985 SCC (Cri) 54 was wholly misplaced for in that case the persons who were convicted under Section 304 (II)/34, IPC committed a criminal act, in that, they assaulted the deceased. We do not, however, find any such infirmity in the conviction of some of the appellants under Section 323/34, IPC as their participation in the assault of one of the prosecution witness stands fully established. We, therefore, allow the appeal in part by setting aside the conviction and sentence of the appellants under Section 304 (II)/34, IPC, while maintaining the conviction and sentence for the offence under Section 323/34, IPC. Chandrakant Murgyappa Umrani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1999 SC 1557 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 698 (699).

[7442] ● Common intention sharing of with other accused—Inference as to.—It was the definite case of the prosecution that Debjani died as a result of beating. Neither Jagdish (PW-19) nor Shanti (PW-20) have deposed that Sumitra had taken part in beating Debjani. What they have stated is that about 4 O'clock when Debjani was being beaten by her husband and father-in-law Sumitra was also seen standing outside that room alongwith other family members. This was the only evidence laid by the prosecution to prove the involvement of Sumitra. Mere presence of these persons near the place of the incident cannot lead to an inference that they shared the common intention with the other two accused as they were also residing in that house. They had not entered the room of Debajni at 4 O'clock when the beating took place or thereafter. They had remained standing outside the room. As something was happening in the room of Debajani, it was quite natural for the other family members to go near that place and see what had happened. Merely because they did not try to prevent the other two accused from beating Debjani, no inference of sharing the intention of beating her to death can be inferred in view of their relationship with them and their indifferent attitude toward Debajani. The only positive act alleged against Sumitra is that she had told Jagdish and Shanti to go away from that place. On the basis of this circumstance it would not be reasonable to jump, to the conclusion that she also intended that Debjani be killed on that day. Sumitra Banik v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1999 SC 2594 : (1999) 9 SCC 24 : 1999 CrLJ 4057 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 496 : JT 1999 (5) SC 362.

[7443] ● Common intention—Inference as to.—It was contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant that even if the evidence of the three witnesses is believed, it does not constitute an offence punishable under Section 302, read with Section 34 of the IPC so far as the appellant is concerned. Learned Counsel submitted that in the case regarding possession of a fire-arm by the appellant, he has been acquitted, but that by itself cannot lead to an inference that he did not have common intention with the other accused in respect of what they did on that night. In this behalf learned counsel for the appellant drew our attention to the omission that PW-2 had not stated to the police that the accused Pal Singh had instigated Suba Singh to open fire on Mukhtiar Singh when he refused to part with his tractor. The evidence clearly establishes that both the accused had gone together to the house of Mukhtiar Singh. They had scaled the wall of the courtyard and gone inside his house. At that time Suba Singh was armed with a firearm—an A.K. 56 rifle. They had gone there to take away the tractor of Mukhtiar Singh. When Mukhtiar Singh refused to give it Suba Singh fired a shot and killed him. Both the accused then started running away. This evidence clearly establishes the presence and participation of the applicant in the commission of the crime and sharing of common intention. He has therefore, been rightly convicted for the offence punishable under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Pal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1999 SC 2548 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 100 (102) : 1999 CrLJ 3962 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 511 : JT 1999 (5) SC 224 : 1999 (3) Crimes 196.

[7444] ● Cheating.—In the instant case it is alleged that an agreement was signed between the complainant respondents and the appellant whereby some land was agreed to be sold by the appellant to the complainants on a consideration and allegedly, a part thereof was paid as earnest money, the balance being payable in the manner indicated in the deed. The most important term in the deed was that possession of the plot would stand transferred to the complainants and possession in fact was delivered to the complainants over which they have made certain constructions. The complaint was laid down on the basis that the appellant had cheated the complainants of the sum of money they had paid as earnest money as his subsequent conduct reflected that he was not willing to complete the bargain for which the complainants had to file a suit for specific performance which was pending in the Civil Court. Section 415, IPC which defines the offence of cheating illustrates it well in providing statutory illustrations. Illustration (g) is relevant in this case. The later part thereof illustrates that at the time when agreement for sale was executed, it could have in no event been termed dishonest so as to hold that the complainants were cheated of the earnest money, which they passed to the appellant as part consideration, when possession of the total land involved in the bargain was passed over to the complainant-respondents, and which remains in their possession. Now, it is left to imagine who would be interested in delaying the matter on completing the bargain when admittedly the complainants have not performed their part on making full payment. We, therefore, allow this appeal, and set aside not only the impugned orders of the High Court, but quash the proceedings too which are pending before the Magistrate. The complainant respondents shall pay compensatory costs to the appellant for this vexatious proceedings which we assess at Rs. 10,000 which the respondents are directed to pay to the appellants within six weeks from today. Nageshwar Prasad Singh alias Sinha v. Narayan Singh, AIR 1999 SC 1480 : (1998) 5 SCC 694 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1378 : 1999 CrLJ 598 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 670 : JT 1998 (6) SC 414.

[7445] ● Criminal conspiracy to cheap state exchequer.—There is no evidence, direct or circumstantial in support of the charge of conspiracy amongst the accused persons to cheat the State exchequer and with that object having entered inflated quantities of scabbed apple brought by the growers. It was the duty of the non-official members of the team to certify about the genuineness of the growers and the stock of scabbed apple brought by them having been grown in their orchards. There is no stipulation in the modalities to show that the public servants who are strangers to the area had no role to play in this matter. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Jai Lal, AIR 1999 SC 3318 : (1999) 7 SCC 280 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 1184 : 1999 CrLJ 4294 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 652 : JT 1999 (6) SC 548 : (1999) 4 Crimes 4.

[7446] ● Common intention to cause miscarriage.—To apply Section 34, IPC apart from the fact that there should be two or more accused, two factors must be established (i) common intention and (ii) participation of the accused in the commission of an offence. If a common intention is proved but no overt act is attributed to the individual accused, Section 34 with be attracted as essentially it involves vicarious liability but if participation of the accused in the crime is proved and a common intention is absent, Section 34 cannot be invoked. In every case, it is not possible to have direct evidence of a common intention. It has to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of each case. In the present case Sharma was certainly not competent to terminate the pregnancy of Alpana nor his clinic had the approval of the Government. Even basic facilities for abortion were not available in his clinic. Chauhan took Alpana to the clinic of Sharma with intent to cause her miscarriage and then her death was caused by Sharma while causing abortion, which act was done by Sharma in furtherance of the common intention of both Sharma and Chauhan. There is no escape from the conclusion that Chauhan had been rightly convicted under Section 314/34, IPC. Surendra Chauhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2000 SC 1436 (1439, 1440) : (2000) 4 SCC 110 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 772 : 2000 CrLJ 1789.

[7447] ● Common intention—Existence of.—Under Section 34 a person must be physically present at the actual commission of the crime for the purpose of facilitating or promoting the offence, the commission of which is the aim of the joint criminal venture. The essence of Section 34 is simultaneous consensus of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring about a particular result. Such consensus can be developed at the spot and thereby intended by all of them. The existence of common intention can be inferred from the attending circumstances of the case and the conduct of the parties. No direct evidence of common intention is necessary. For the purpose of common intention even the participation in the commission of the offence need not be proved in all cases. The common intention can develop even during the course of an occurrence. Surendra Chauhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2000 SC 1436 (1439) : (2000) 4 SCC 110 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 772 : 2000 CrLJ 1789.

[7448] ● Common intention—Causing death.—From the evidence on record, it is established that they came together armed with fire-arms and A-1 fired from the pistol and A-2 from the country made gun. From the seizure memo it is found that from the place of occurrence, two 9 mm. empty cartridges and one 12 bore empty cartridge were recovered. From the evidence, we find that A-1 was holding a pistol and other accused were carrying country-made gun. Both pistol and the country-made gun were used and this fact is established from the empty cartridges covered from the place of occurrence. The very fact that accused A-1 to A-3 came together to the place of occurrence with fire arms would prove that there was a pre-arranged plan amongst them to cause death. As there was participation of A-2 and A-3 in furtherance of the common intention of causing death, conviction under Section 302, IPC read with Section 34, IPC can be sustained. Sheelam Ramesh v. state of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2000 SC 118 (120) : (1999) 8 SCC 369 : 2000 CrLJ 51 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 30.

[7449] ● Common intention and similar intention—Distinction between.—It is further established that in the course of the occurrence accused Rajender sustained a grievous injury. The said evidence of PW-8 also indicates that Kameshwar himself was armed with a farsa while Ramdev Singh, Surender, Kishun Pandit and Rudal Singh were armed with lathis and when Rajender Singh gave a lalkara, Prabhunath, Jagnarain and Kishun Pandit assaulted PW-8. It is under these circumstances that Triloki Singh has been ascribed to have given a blow on the leg of the deceased. It is difficult to hold that he also shared the common intention with Rajender for causing murder of the deceased which developed at the spur of the moment. There has a distinction between the common intention and similar intention and question whether there exists common intention in all the persons who made some overt act resulting in death is a question of fact and can be inferred only from the circumstances. The distinction between a common intention and a similar intention may be fine, but is nonetheless a real one and if overlooked, may lead to a miscarriage of justice. Rajender Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 1779 (1784) : (2000) 4 SCC 298 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 796 : 2000 CrLJ 2199 : JT 2000 (4) SC 293.

[7450] ● Common intention—No direct evidence necessary.—No pre-meditation or previous meeting of mind is necessary for the applicability of Section 34 of the IPC. The existence of common intention can be inferred from the attending circumstances of the case and the conduct of the parties. No direct evidence of common intention is necessary. For the purposes of common intention even the participation in the commission of the offence need not be proved in all cases. The common intention can develop even during the course of an occurrence. The circumstances of the present case clearly show that the accused persons had come on spot with deadly weapons and inflicted injuries on Joy Kutty, obviously with the intention of causing his death. The eye-witnesses ran from the spot to save their lives. Rajesh Govind Jagesha v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 160 (164) : (1999) 8 SCC 428 : 2000 CrLJ 380 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 1.

[7451] ● Assault—Conviction of assailant.—The assailants, who had participated in the occurrence in which the deceased was killed so brutally, cannot escape from conviction under Section 302 at least with the help of Section 34, if not with Section 149 of the IPC. The conviction of the assailant or assailants who inflicted grievous injuries which resulted in the death of the victim cannot be limited to Section 326 of the IPC. Malempati Pattabi Narendra v. Ghattamaneni Maruthi Prasad, AIR 2000 SC 2195 (2196) : (2000) 5 SCC 226 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 953 : 2000 CrLJ 3449 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 563.

[7452] ● Common intention to cause death.—Shakil Ahmad, appellant is the co-brother of the deceased and is stated to have caught hold of both the hands of the deceased. If the deceased was intended to be killed by setting him on fire, it could have been done while he was asleep. There was no reason of waking him up which could have necessitated catching hold of his hands by Shakil Ahmad, apparently to over-power him. The mere presence of Shakil Ahmad would have promoted the deceased to mention his name in the statement but the said appellant cannot be held to have been proved to be sharing the common intention of causing the death of Islamuddin. It cannot be excluded that the appellant might have accompanied his in-laws to see that his co-brother does not create any problem by remaining as an unwanted guest in and around their house for 7-8 days. Gulam Hussain v. State of Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 2480 (2484) : (2000) 7 SCC 254 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1343 : 2000 CrLJ 3949 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 634.

[7453] ● Common intention or object of killing deceased.—As far as motive is concerned, PW-6 deposed that Parmeshwar was on inimical terms with Lakhan Sao and Baldeo Chauhan, the first because of a land dispute and the second because of a money lending transaction. DW-1 also stated that before this incident, there were differences between Parmeshwar and both the accused. The fact that either may have had his own motive for killing Parmeshwar is not relevant in determining the common object or intention required under Section 34 of the IPC. The common intention or object in this case was the killing of Parmeshwar. Lakhan Sao's facilitating the offence by holding Parmeshwar and asking Baldeo Chauhan to shoot is sufficient to hold Lakhan Sao guilty under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Lakhan Sao v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 2063 (2066) : (2000) 9 SCC 82 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1163 : 2000 CrLJ 2959 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 497.

[7454] ● Unlawful assembly with common intention of murdering deceased.—Both Sections 149 and 34, IPC deal with the vicarious liability of an accused for an offence committed by another. Under Section 34, IPC "when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the contemplation of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone". Similarly, Section 149, IPC provides for the guilt of every member of an unlawful assembly if in prosecution of a common object, an offence is committed, or which the members know would be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. The similarity of the sections lies in the requirement of a common object or intention or a pre-arranged plan in furtherance of which the act is done. The difference lies in the degree of actual participation required in the criminal enterprise. The nature of participation under Section 34, IPC has been considered in the case of Ramaswami Ayyangar v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1976 SC 2022 : (1976) 3 SCC 779 : 1976 CrLJ 1563. The emphasis is on physical presence, and promotion or facilitation of the crime. As far as Section 149, IPC is concerned, in addition to the common object, merely being a member of an unlawful assembly within the meaning of Section 141, IPC may be sufficient. Section 149, IPC makes a member of the unlawful assembly responsible as a principal for the acts of each & all merely because he is a member of the unlawful assembly. While overt act and active participation may indicate common intention of the person perpetrating the crime, the mere presence in the unlawful assembly may fasten criminal liability under Section 149. It must be noted that the basis of the constructive guilt under Section 149 is mere membership of the unlawful assembly with the requisite common object or knowledge. Thus, the accepted evidence was that there was an unlawful assembly of all the accused, which, with the common object or premeditated plan of murdering Kulwant Singh and Bidhi Shankar, waylaid, chased and attacked them resulting in their death. All the elements of both Sections 149 and 34, IPC were there. This should have been sufficient to hold all the accused guilty under Sections 34 and 149, IPC. And yet the High Court acquitted Gurnam Singh and Iqbal Singh. The order of High Court cannot stand and is set aside. Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 1833 (1838, 1839, 1840, 1841) : (2000) 4 SCC 484 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 991 : 2000 CrLJ 2212 : JT 2000 (4) SC 114.

[7455] ● Murder—Common intention.—It appears that role of Ms Shabnam is not such which could be made a basis of her holding a common intention with the other accused persons in committing the crime of murdering Islamuddin. Without declaring as to what was to be done with the kerosene, her father had asked her to bring it which she did apparently without knowing for what purpose the kerosene had been obtained by her father. It cannot be denied that kerosene might have been obtained to put the deceased in fear or force him to go away from the house of his in-laws where he was stated to have been staying for about 7-8 days before the date of occurrence. No other overt act is attributed to Ms Shabnam who is the unfortunate widow of the deceased. The prosecution has not proved its case beyond doubt so far as Shakil Ahmad is concerned. Gulam Hussain v. State of Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 2480 (2483) : (2000) 7 SCC 254 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1343 : 2000 CrLJ 3949 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 634.

[7456] ● Murder—Common intention to Kill.— The fact that Kapil, Muni and Maheshwar came together and chased the informant and the deceased from the scene of occurrence, and persued them even to the house, and assaulted inside the house, Kapil by means of a saif and Muni by means of barrel of the gun, which he was holding and Maheshwar Singh gave the lalkara, would make each one of them liable for action of the other. The fact that the blow given by Maheshawar was not fatal, will not be of any significance in finding out whether he shared the common intention with the other assailant Kapil, who gave the fatal blow on the occipital region of the deceased. Muni Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 3640 : (2002) 9 SCC 484 : JT (1999) 10 SC 490.

[7457] ● Murder inflicting of dagger injuries.—Learned counsel for the appellants contended that an equally possible room creating doubt regarding the involvement of A-4 (Tileshwar) can be found out of the circumstance pertaining to the recovery of daggers made by the Investigating Officer. It is admitted that daggers were recovered pursuant to the information elicited from A-1 (Babul), A-2 (Sarin) and A-3 (Nagen) but not from A-4 (Tileswar). If all the three persons were armed with dagger and A-4 possibly would not have been armed with daggers, it is reasonable to think that among the three persons who inflicted strikes with daggers on the deceased, would not have included A-4 (Tileswar). Of course, the dying declaration would convince us that (A-4) Tileswar was also present but to fasten him with the liability under Section 34 of the IPC, the statement contained in the dying declaration is too meagre. The possible absence of a dagger with him dissuades us from confirming the conviction passed on A-4 (Tileswar) because there is an area where there is a reasonable doubt as to the role of A-4 (Tileswar). Babul Kalita v. State of Assam, AIR 2000 SC 3592 : 2001 CrLJ 142 : JT 2000 (9) SC 15.

[7458] ● FIR—Quashment of.—The graveman of the appellant's case in the FIR is that certain cheques had been given to the respondents more particularly the Commercial Manager with the specific understanding that these cheques can be presented against delivery of future vehicles and not for any past liability or dues, but the respondents presented the same which, of course, could not be encashed in view of the directions given by the appellant drawer. However, the appellant had to sustain the loss of Rs. 8,982 as commission charges. The necessary ingredients of the offence of cheating or criminal breach of trust have not been made out and on the other hand the attendant circumstances indicate that the FIR was lodged to pre-empt the filing of the criminal complaint against the informant under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The High Court therefore was well within his power in quashing the FIR. Sunil Kumar v. Escorts Yamaha Motors Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 27 : (1999) 8 SCC 468 : 2000 CrLJ 174.

[7459] ● Quashing of complaint—Inherent power.—The factual score depicts that the respondents approached the petitioner for the purpose of securing Ethambutol Hydrochloride drug in bulk for sale and use in various pharmaceutical drugs and products being manufactured by the respondent company. It is at this juncture that the petitioner has come out with a definite case that by reason of a promise of maintaining continuous supply of raw materials to the respondents herein for the purpose of manufacturing Ethambutol Hydrochloride and in such a way so as not to cause any interruption or hindrance to the manufacturing activity of the complaint's factory, the complainant-petitioner entered into an agreement. It is on the basis of the agreement, as noticed above and failure to comply therewith, it is stated that the petitioner herein has lost as substantial amount of money and to the extent of about one crore and the sufferance of loss has been by reason of specific assurance and representation which obviously turned out to be false. Misrepresentation on the part of the respondent-accused persons to the complainant, has been the major grievance and a definite and specific case has been made out that such a misrepresentation was intentionally effected since the accused persons were in the know of things that in the event the supplies are not effected, as per the agreement, the complainant is likely to suffer a wrongful loss which as the complaint proceeds, in the interest of the transaction between the parties, the accused persons were bound to protect. On careful reading of the complaint, it cannot be said that the complaint does not disclose the commission of an offence. The ingredients of the offences under Sections 415, 418 and 420, IPC cannot be said to be totally absent on he basis of the allegations in the complaint considering the factual aspect of the matter, we unhesitatingly state, however that the issue involved in he matter under consideration is not a case in which the criminal trial should have been short-circuited. Medchl Chemicals and Pharma Pvt. Ltd. v. Biological E. Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 1869 : (2000) 3 SCC 269 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 615 : 2000 CrLJ 1487 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 301 : (2000) 2 SC 426.

[7460] ● Cheating—Ingredients of—Distinguished from mere breach of contract.—The distinction between mere breach of contract and the offence of cheating is a fine one. It depends upon the intention of the accused at the time of inducement which may be judged by his subsequent conduct but this subsequent conduct is not the sole test. Mere breach of contract cannot give rise to criminal prosecution for cheating unless fraudulent or dishonest intention is shown right at the beginning of the transaction, that is the time when the offence is said to have been committed. Therefore, it is the intention which is the gist of the offence. To hold a person guilty of cheating, it is necessary to show that he had fraudulent or dishonest intention at the time of making the promise. From his mere failure to keep up promise subsequently, such a culpable intention right at the beginning, that is, when he made the promise cannot be presumed.

The appellants agree to sell their land to respondent No. 2 for a consideration of Rs. 16,00,000. The respondent paid a sum of Rs. 11,00,000 to the appellants by way of drafts drawn in their favour. The appellants executed a registered sale deed in respect of the land in favour of the Society. It is the case of the appellants that on insistence of respondent No. 2, the two other brothers of the appellant signed the sale deed as witnesses. By way of a further safeguard the appellants executed a separate indemnity deed on the same day in which they undertook to indemnify any loss caused to the Society on account of any objection which may be raised by any co-sharer against transfer of the land in future. The appellants assert that they have delivered possession of the land to the Society on the same day. On registration of the sale deed, respondent 2 handed over three cheques to the appellants for the sum of Rs. 5,50,000. When the appellants presented the said cheques in the bank the same were dishonoured on account of insufficiency of amount in the account of the drawer. The respondent No. 2 had issued a separate cheque in favour of Priya Ranjan Prasad Verma which was also dishonoured for the same reason. Appellants lodged an FIR under Sections 406, 420 and 120-B, IPC. The Police after investigating into the allegations made in the FIR, filed a charge-sheet against respondent 2 and Awadesh Narayan Rai. The appellants also filed three suits for realisation of the amount due to them. Shortly thereafter, respondent 2 filed a complaint in the Court of CJM against the appellants alleging commission of offences under Sections 418, 420, 423, 469, 504 and 120-B, IPC. In the complaint respondent 2 alleged inter alia that by conspiring together all the accused have defaulted and cheated the Society and the complainant, by giving false, concocted and wrongful information and assurances saying to have a "soda kara" and, thus, they induced the complainant to enter into negotiations and also to advance them a heavy amount with their ulterior design to acquire wrongful gain to themselves and for wrongful loss to the society and the complainant—both monetary and reputational. Reading the averments in the complaint in entirety and accepting the allegations to be true, the ingredients of intentional deception on the part of the accused right at the beginning of the negotiations has neither been expressly stated nor indirectly suggested in the complaint. All that respondent 2 has alleged against the appellants is that they did not disclose to him that one of their brothers had filed a partition suit which was pending. The requirement that the information was not disclosed by the appellants intentionally in order to make respondent 2 part with the property is not alleged expressly or even impliedly in the complaint. Therefore the core postulate of dishonest intention in order to deceive the complainant respondent 2 is not made out even accepting all the averments in the complaint on their face value. Hridaya Ranjan Prasad Verma v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 2341 : (2000) 4

[7461] ● Cheating and misappropriation.—They are facing charges under Sections 406/420/34, IPC and are in custody for more than nine months by now. The allegation is that the appellants misappropriated to the tune of Rs. 75,000 for giving employment. Having examined the manner in which the trial is proceeding and taking into account the fact that the appellants are already in custody for more than nine months we think that a case for grant of bail has been made out. Ram Narayan Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 1945 : (2000) 9 SCC 55 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1157.

[7462] ● Complaint for offence of cheating.—The petitioner is a Post-Doctoral fellow at Centre for Cellular and Molecular Biology, Hyderabad. He invited marriage proposals for himself through advertisement in newspaper. In pursuance of which respondent No. 1 approached the petitioner and furnished particulars of respondent No. 4 who in his sister. The petitioner himself gave out that he belonged to Gujala Balija community which was a forward community and, therefore, he wanted a wife from a forward community. The marriage took place. The petitioner allegedly came to know that respondents 1 to 4 belonged to Kondakapu community, which was Scheduled Tribe, and it was then that he realised that by misrepresenting themselves as members of Thurupukapu community, they had lured the petitioner into wedlock for which the petitioner would not have agreed at all, had he known that the respondents did not belong to Thurupukapu community but belonged to Kondakapu community. It was in these circumstances that he filed a complaint under Sections 415, 419, 420 read with Section 34, IPC. Section 415 has two parts. While in the first part, the person must "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" induce the complainant to deliver any property; in the second part, the person should intentionally induce the complainant to do or omit to do a thing. That is to say, in the first part, inducement must be dishonest or fraudulent. In the second part., the inducement should be intentional. Thus so far as second part of Section 415 is concerned, "property", at no stage, is involved. Here, it is the doing of an act or omission to do an act by the complainant, as a result on intentional inducement by the accused, which is material. Such inducement should result in the doing of an act or omission to do an act as a result of which the person concerned should have suffered or was likely to suffer damage or harm in body, mind, reputation or property. G.V. Rao v. L.H.V. Prasad, AIR 2000 SC 2474 : (2000) 3 SCC 693 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 733 : 2000 CrLJ 3487 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 416.

[7463] ● Murder—Common intention.—The question is whether the appellants shared the common intention with the real killers who at the same point of time strangulated the deceased to death. The mere fact that they were also included in the crowd which followed the deceased, is not enough to credit the appellants with the common intention sharing with the real killers. The crowd which followed the deceased belonged to a political party and, therefore, running in the crowd need not necessarily be with the common intention to cause death. The intention can be different as well. If there was reliable evidence to show that the appellants inflicted to the blow, on the deceased perhaps we would have persuaded ourselves in believing that they too shared the intention to attack the victim. The post-mortem report does not show even a bruise, much less a contusion or abrasion on the dead body. Kalachand Bhowmik v. State of Tripura, AIR 2000 SC 3583 (3584) : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1585 : JT 2000 (7) SC 304.

[7464] ● Common intention sine qua non for Section 34, IPC.—Participation in he crime in furtherance of the common intention is sine qua non for Section 34, IPC. Exhortation to other accused, even guarding the scene, etc. would amount to participation. Of course, when the allegation against an accused is that he participated in the crime by oral exhortation or by guarding the scene, the Court has to evaluate the evidence very carefully for deciding whether that person had really done any such act. It is difficult to conclude that a person, merely because he was present at or near the scene, without doing any-thing more, without even carrying a weapon and without even marching alongwith the other assailants, could also be convicted with the aid of Section 34, IPC for the offence committed by the other accused. In the present case, the FIR shows that A-3, Pavitri Devi, was standing on the road when the incident happened. Either she would have reached on the road hearing the sound of the commotion because her house is situated very close to the scene, or she would have merely followed her husband and brother out of curiosity since they were going armed with axe and choppers during the wee hours of the night. It is not a necessary conclusion that she too would have accompanied the other accused in furtherance of the common intention of all the three. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 : 2001 CrLJ 1462 : JT 2001 (3) SC 330 : (2001) 2 Crimes 108.

[7465] ● Common intention—Convert act in furtherance of.—Even the concept of presence of the co-accused at the scene is not a necessary requirement to attract Section 34, IPC, e.g., the co-accused, can remain a little away and supply weapons to the participating accused either by throwing or by catapulting them so that the participating accused can inflict injuries on the targeted person. Another illustration, with advancement of electronic equipment can be etched like this: One of such persons in furtherance of the common intention, overseeing the actions from a distance through binoculars can give instructions to the other accused through mobile phones as to how effectively the common intention can be implemented. We do not find any reason why Section 34, IPC cannot apply in the case of those two persons indicated in the illustrations. Thus, to attract Section 34, IPC, two postulates are indispensable :

1. The criminal act (consisting of a series of acts) should have been done, not by one person, but more than one person.
2. Doing of every such individual act cumulatively resulting in the commission of criminal offence should have been in furtherance of the common intention of all such persons.

Looking at the first postulate pointed out above, the accused who is to be fastened with liability on the strength of Section 34, IPC, should have done some act which has nexus with the offence. Such act need not be very substantial, it is enough that the act is only for guarding the scene for facilitating the crime. The act need not necessarily be overt, even if it is only a covert act it is enough provided such a covert act is proved to have been done by the co-accused in furtherance of the common intention. Even an omission in certain circumstances, amounts to an act. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 (610) : 2001 CrLJ 1462 : JT 2001 (3) SC 330 : (2001) 2 Crimes 108.

[7466] ● Co-accused—Sharing of common intention by.—The accused who is to be fastened with liability on the strength of Section 34, IPC should have done some act which has nexus with the offence. Such an act need not be very substantial, it is enough that the act is only for guarding the scene for facilitating the crime. The act need not necessarily be overt, even if it is only a covert act, it is enough, provided such a covert act is proved to have been done by the co-accused in furtherance of the common intention. Even an omission can, in certain circumstances, amount to an act. This is the purport of Section 32, I.P.C. So the act mentioned in Section 34, IPC need not be an overt act, even an illegal omission to do a certain act in a certain situation, can amount to an act, e.g., a co-accused, standing near the victim face to face, saw an armed assailant nearing the victim from behind with a weapon to inflict a blow. The co-accused, who could have alerted the victim to move away to escape from the onslaught deliberately refrained from doing so with the idea that the blow should fall on the victim. Such omission can also be termed as an act in a given situation. Hence, an act whether overt or covert, is indispensable to be done by a co-accused to be fastened with the liability under the section. But if no such act is done by a person, even if he has common intention with the others for the accomplishment of the crime, Section 34, IPC cannot be invoked for convicting that person. In other words, the accused who only keeps the common intention in his mind, but does not do any act at the scene, cannot be convicted with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 : 2001 CrLJ 1462 : JT 2001 (3) SC 330 : (2001) 2 Crimes 108.

[7467] ● Common intention—No overt act necessary.—For the applicability of Section 34, IPC to a co-accused, who is proved to have common intention, it is not the requirement of law that he should have actually done something to incur the criminal liability with the aid of this section. It is now well settled that no overt act is necessary to attract the applicability of Section 34 for a co-accused who is otherwise proved to be sharing common intention with the ultimate act done by any one of the accused sharing such intention. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 (613) : 2001 CrLJ 1462 : (2001) 2 Crimes 108.

[7468] ● Word "act" in Section 34—Meaning of.—Participation in the crime in furtherance of the common intention, cannot conceive of some independent criminal act by all accused persons, besides the ultimate criminal act because for that individual act law takes care of making such accused responsible under the other provisions of the Indian Penal Code. The word "act" used in Section 34 denotes a series of acts as a single act. What is required under law is that the accused persons sharing the common intention, must be physically present at the scene of occurrence and be shown to not have dissuaded themselves from the intended criminal act for which they shared the common intention. Culpability under section 34 cannot be excluded by mere distance from the scene of occurrence. The presumption of constructive intention, however, has to be arrived at only when the Court can, with judicial servitude, hold that the accused must have conceived result that ensued in furtherance of the common intention. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 : 2001 CrLJ 1462 : JT 2001 (3) SC 330 : (2001) 2 Crimes 108.

[7469] ● Common intention, sharing of.—A-1 called the deceased out of house, A-2 and A-3 who were standing near the house caught hold of the deceased and A-1 gave knife blow to the deceased. A-2 and A-3 intervened during that scuffle and tried to hold deceased or separate A-1 and deceased. A-2 and A-3 were unarmed. Prosecution cannot be said to have proved that A-2 and A-3 had shared common intention with A-1 particularly when medical evidence discloses only one knife blow to the deceased. Manubhai Chimanlal Senma (Senwa) v. State of Gujarat, 2001 CrLJ 3275 : JT 2001 (3) SC 482 : 2001 (3) Crimes 104 (SC).

[7470] ● Common intention existence of—Inference from circumstances of case.—Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code recognises the principle of vicarious liability in criminal jurisprudence. It makes a person liable for action of an offence not committed by him but by another person with whom he shared the common intention. It is a rule of evidence and does not create a substantive offence. The section gives statutory recognition to the commonsense principle that if more than two persons intentionally do a thing jointly, it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually. There is no gainsaying that a common intention presupposes prior concert, which requires a prearranged plan of the accused participating in an offence. Such preconcert or preplanning may develop on the spot or during the course of commission of the offence but the crucial test is that such plan must precede the act constituting an offence. Common intention can be formed previously or in the course of occurrence and on the spur of the moment. The existence of a common intention is a question of fact in each case to be proved mainly as a matter of inference from the circumstances of the case. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 (613) : 2001 CrLJ 1462.

[7471] ● Common intention—Sharing of.—The dominant feature for attracting Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code (hereinafter referred to as "the Code") is the element of participation in absence resulting in the ultimate "criminal act". The "act" referred to in the later part of Section 34 means the ultimate criminal act with which the accused is charged of sharing the common intention. The accused is, therefore, made responsible for the ultimate criminal act done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all. The section does not envisage the separate act by all the accused persons for becoming responsible for the ultimate criminal act. If such an interpretation is accepted, the purpose of Section 34 shall be rendered infructuous. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 (613) : 2001 CrLJ 1462.

[7472] ● Common intention—Distinguished from same or similar intention.—To substantiate a charge under section 302 with the aid of Section 34 it must be shown that the criminal act complained against was done by one of the accused persons in furtherance of the common intention of both. Common intention has to be distinguished from same or similar intention. It is true that it is difficult, if not impossible, to collect and produce direct evidence in proof of the intention of the accused and mostly an inference as to intention shall have to be drawn from the acts or conduct of the accused or other relevant circumstances, as available. An inference as to common intention shall not be readily drawn; the culpable liability can arise only if such inference can be drawn with a certain degree of assurance. At the worst Mithu Singh, accused-appellant, knew that his co-accused Bharpur Singh was armed with a pistol. The knowledge of previous enmity existing between Bharpur Singh and the deceased can also be attributed to Mithu Singh. But there is nothing available on record to draw an inference that the co-accused Bharpur Singh had gone to the house of the deceased with the intention of causing her death and such intention was known to Mithu Singh, much less shared by him. Simply because Mithu Singh was himself armed with a pistol would not necessarily lead to an inference that he had also reached the house of the deceased or had accompanied the co-accused Bharpur Singh with the intention of causing the death of Gurdial Kaur. In our opinion, an inference as to Mithu Singh, accused-appellant having shared with Bharpur Singh a common intention of causing the murder of the deceased Gurdial Kaur cannot be drawn. His conviction under Sections 302/34, IPC cannot be sustained and must be set aside. Mithu Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2001 SC 1929 : (2001) 4 SCC 193 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 668 (670) : 2001 CrLJ 1820.

[7473] ● Common intention—Sharing of by accused-3.—Participation in the crime in furtherance of the common intention is sine qua non for

Section 34, IPC. Exhortation to other accused, even guarding the scene etc. would amount to participation. Of course, when the allegation against an accused is that he participated in the crime by oral exhortation or by guarding the scene, the Court has to evaluate the evidence very carefully for deciding whether that person had really done any such act.

It is difficult to conclude that a person, merely because he was present at or near the scene, without doing anything more, without even carrying a weapon and without even marching alongwith the other assailants, could also be convicted with the aid of Section 34, IPC for the offence committed by the other accused. In the present case, the FIR shows that A-3, Pavitri Devi, was standing on the road when the incident happened. Either she would have reached on the road hearing the sound of the commotion because her house is situated very close to the scene, or she would have merely followed her husband and brother out of curiosity since they were going armed with axe and choppers during the wee hours of the night. It is not a necessary conclusion that she too would have accompanied the other accused in furtherance of the common intention of all the three.

Counsel for the State contended that if she remained at the scene without sharing the common intention she would have prevented the other two accused from doing the ghastly acts because both of them were her husband and brother respectively. The inaction of Pavitri Devi in doing so need not necessarily lead to the conclusion that she shared a common intention with the others. There is nothing to show that she had not earlier tried to dissuade her husband and brother from rushing to attack the deceased. Thus we are unable to hold that Pavitri Devi shared common intention with other accused and hence her remaining passively on the road is too insufficient for reversing the order of acquittal passed by the High Court in order to convict her with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 1344 : (2001) 3 SCC 673 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 601 (612) : 2001 CrLJ 1462 : JT 2001 (3) SC 330 : (2001) 2 Crimes 108.

[7474] ● Common intention to rape and in case of resistance to commit murder.—In the instant case the proved facts are : accused were armed with knives; they entered the house of the complainant dead at night; may be to take revenge of quarrel which had taken place at day time or because they are rich and head strong persons; on a refusal to submit and satisfy their sexual lust, accused including the appellant despite resistance by the girl lifted her and brought her in Osara. At that stage when deceased was crying and resisting, her father PW-4, Mani Ram and her mother Nageshari, PW-5 got up and started raising alarm. Tahir, one of the accused, gave knife blow to the deceased and two others gave knife blows to PW-4 and PW-5. From these facts, the only reasonable inference which could be drawn is that common intention of the accused was to ravish the young girl of poor Harijan and in case of resistance to commit murder by inflicting knife blows. Their adventure in criminality cannot be watered down or nullified by contending that injuries caused by them have not resulted in death of PW-4 and PW-5. In this view of the matter, the High Court materially erred in altering the sentence of the accused from the offence punishable under section 302/34, IPC to Section 324, IPC by observing that assault by knife to Mani Ram and Nageshari were individuals act of Jhinkoo (appellant) and Deep Chand and the act of Tahir in inflicting the knife injury on the chest of the deceased appears to be his individual act and, therefore, appellant-Jhinkoo cannot be convicted for the offence punishable under section 302 read with Section 34, I.PC. Hence, the impugned order passed by the High Court cannot be sustained. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Jhinkoo Nai, AIR 2001 SC 2815 : (2001) 6 SCC 503 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1172 (1176) : 2001 CrLJ 3965 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 509.

[7475] ● Abduction and murder—Common intention.—We only reiterate the legal principle adumbrated in State of West Bengal v. Mir Mohammad Omar, (2000) 8 SCC 382 that when more persons than one have abducted the victim, who was latter murdered, it is within the legal province of the Court to justifiably draw a presumption depending on the factual situation, that all the abductors are responsible for the murder. Section 34 of the IPC could be invoked for the aid to that end, unless any particular abductor satisfies the Court with his explanation as to what else he did with the victim subsequently, i.e., whether he left this associates en route or whether he dissuaded others from doing the extreme act, etc., etc. Sucha Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2001 SC 1436 : (2001) 4 SCC 375 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 717 (723) : 2001 CrLJ 1734 : JT 2001 (4) SC 107 : (2001) 2 Crimes 69.

[7476] ● Common intention—Proof of.—"...for common intention, there could rarely be direct evidence. The ultimate decision, at any rate would invariably depend upon the inferences deducible from the circumstances of each case. It is settled law that the common intention or the intention of the individual concerned in furtherance of the common intention could be proved either from direct evidence or by inference from the acts or attending circumstances of the case and conduct of the parties." State of Uttar Pradesh v. Jhinkoo Nai, AIR 2001 SC 2815 : (2001) 6 SCC 503 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1172 (1175) : 2001 CrLJ 3965 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 509.

[7477] ● Murder—Common intention.—Even where some, out of several accused, are acquitted, it is open to the Court to consider whether the remaining accused were guilty of an offence by involving Section 34, IPC by reason of having committed the offence alongwith others acquitted. With a view to determine the common intention, the nature of injuries, background of the incident and the nature of weapon used to cause the injuries besides other factors are needed to be considered. There is no principle of law which prevents from adopting that course set out above by us. Pipal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2001) 2 SCC 292 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 344 (345) : 2001 CrLJ 740 : JT 2001 (1) SC 31 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 91.

[7478] ● Common intention—Simultaneously dealings blows by accused on victim.—In the instant case the place of the incident is inside the house of the victims where the accused persons had reached armed with weapons. The genesis of the incident is known. The standing of Kulwant Singh outside her house was objected by Jagir Kaur and feeling enraged thereby the accused persons came armed with lethal weapons to teach the lady a lesson. On the cogent and reliable evidence coming from the mouth of three eye-witnesses, the two accused were aggressors. They reached and trespassed into the house of complainant and opened assault. They cannot claim any right of self-defence. They simultaneously assaulted the victim and in that process caused injuries. On a hue and cry being raised, they ran away together. Their coming together to the place of the incident fleeing away together therefrom, being armed and simultaneously dealing blows spell out their common intention. Gurmit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2001 SC 2977 (2981) : (2001) 9 SCC 681 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 731, [7479] ● Common intention to Kill deceased.—The continuance of causing of injuries in spite of the intervention of PW-4 and refusal to give water when the deceased asked for it, as stated above, shows the predetermined mind of the accused that they had come with the intention to kill. It is true that there is no evidence of prior meeting of minds. But the sequence of events which unfolded during the course of occurrence clearly indicate the pre-determined minds of the accused persons to kill the deceased. Ranjit Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2001 SC 3853 (3857) : (2001) 9 SCC 528 : 2001 CrLJ 4740.

[7480] ● Common intention—Inference as to.—In order to hold an accused guilty of criminal act by reference of Section 34, IPC the Court should be able to draw an inference that the result reached was the consequence of the concerted action of the person said to be held liable. Recently, this Court has held in Mithu Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2001 SC 1929 : (2001) 4 SCC 193 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 658 : 2001 CrLJ 1820.

[7481] ● Common intention—Springs up any moment.—It is not the case of the prosecution that the appellants carried any weapon with them or that the injuries were inflicted with that weapon. There is every possibility that one of the accused picked up the stone at that moment and decided to hit the deceased in order to silence or immobilise the victim. If the idea was to murder him and take away the ornaments from his person, there was really no need to forcible snatching the ear-rings before putting an end to the victim. It seems to us that there was no pre-mediated plan to kill the deceased. True, common intention could spring up any moment and all the three accused might have decided to kill him instantaneously, for whatever reason it be. While that possibility cannot be ruled out, the possibility of one of the accused suddenly getting the idea of killing the deceased and in furtherance thereof picking up the stone lying at the spot and hitting the deceased cannot also be ruled out. Thus two possibilities confront us. When there is reasonable scope for two possibilities and the Court is not in a position to know the actual details of the occurrence it is not safe to extend the presumption under Section 114 so as to find the appellants guilty of the offence of murder with the aid of Section 34, IPC. While drawing the presumption under Section 114 on the basis of recent possession of belongings of the victim with the accused, the Court must adopt a cautious approach and have an assurance from all angles that the accused not merely committed theft or robbery but also killed the victim. Limbaji v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 491 : 2002 CrLJ 590 : (2001) 10 SCC 340 : (2002) 1 Crimes 63 (SC).

[7482] ● Common intention—Sharing of by accused persons.—To attract Section 34, IPC, it is not necessary that each one of the accused must assault the deceased. It is enough if it is shown that they shared a common intention to commit the offence and in furtherance thereof each one played his assigned role by doing separate acts, similar or diverse. The facts of this case are eloquent and the role played by Bal Mukund Rastogi of preventing the prosecution witnesses from going to the rescue of the deceased was the role played by him with a view to achieve the ultimate objective of killing Shankar Rastogi. We therefore entertain no doubt that all the five persons who came to the shop of the informant had a common intention to commit the murder of Shankar Rastogi and they acted pursuant to a pre-arranged plan. The facts clearly are consistent only with the hypothesis of their acting in furtherance of a common intention. They have, therefore, rightly been convicted with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Nandu Rastogi v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 3443 : (2002) 8 SCC 9 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 177 : 2002 CrLJ 4698 : JT 2002 (7) SC 551.

[7483] ● Unlawful assembly—Ground of assailants—Common object.—According to the prosecution case and the evidence, the accused persons arrived at the village of occurrence, pursuant to a conspiracy hatched up by them, they divided themselves into several groups, different groups went to the houses of different persons in the village, entered the houses by breaking open the door, forcibly took away inmates of the houses after tying their hands, taken them first to the temple and thereafter near the canal where their legs were also tied and there some of them were done to death at the point of firearm, but a vast majority of them were massacred by slitting their throats with pasuli. One thing is clear that all these acts were done by the accused persons pursuant to a conspiracy hatched up by them to completely eliminate members of a particular community in the village and to achieve that object, they formed unlawful assembly and different members of that unlawful assembly had played different role. In view of these facts, merely because the appellants are not said to have assaulted either any of the deceased or injured persons, it cannot be inferred that they had no complicity with the crime, more so according to the evidence they were also armed with deadly weapons, like firearms, bombs etc., but did not use the same. Reference in this connection may be made to a decision of this Court in the case of Masalti (supra) where it was laid down that where a crowd of assailants, who were members of an unlawful assembly, proceeds to commit the crime in pursuance of the common object of that assembly, it is often not possible for witnesses to describe actual part played by each one of them and a large crowd of persons armed with weapons assaults the intended victims, it may not be necessary that of them have to take part in the actual assault as in that case several weapons were carried by different member of unlawful assembly and an accused who was member of the such an unlawful assembly and was carrying firearm cannot take any advantage from the fact that he did not use the firearms, though other members of the unlawful assembly used their respective arms. Krishna Mochi v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 1965 (2002) 6 SCC 81 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1220 : 2002 CrLJ 2645 : JT 2002 (4) SC 186 : 2002 (2) SCR 1 : 2002 (3) SCJ 163 : (2002) 2 Crimes 236 (SC).

[7486] ● Murder—Common intention.—The appellant, who was a sub-inspector of police alongwith A-1 who was then a sub-divisional police officer was charged for an offence under Sections 364, 302, 201 read with Section 34, IPC for committing abduction and murder and causing disappearance of evidence. It is an admitted fact as could be seen hereafter that the appellant was found in the company of A-1 on 12-2-1988 sometime in the afternoon while travelling in the jeep driven by A-1 and searching for the deceased. To the extent that he was with A-1 on that afternoon is admitted by the appellant himself in his statement under section 313, CrPC. From the evidence of PWs 3, 5 to 9, 11 and 12, the prosecution has established that A-1 and the appellant ultimately met the deceased and took him away in the jeep driven by A-1. During that time PW-5 also accompanied these accused persons and the deceased to some distance in the jeep. It is a fact that then the appellant did not in any manner indicate that he shared the common intention of A-1 in taking the deceased away. But then if we examine the conduct of the appellant we find that if really the appellant did not know the object for which the deceased was being taken in the jeep, one would have expected as a natural conduct at least after PW-5 alighted from the vehicle, the appellant would have asked A-1 the purpose of taking the deceased with them. The appellant had done no such thing nor has the appellant given any explanation in his statement under section 313, CrPC in this regard. The explanation in this regard is only found in the argument of the learned counsel in this Court which is that the appellant being an obedient subordinate of A-1, might not have questioned the authority of his superior. We do not think such an explanation is acceptable to anybody. If really the appellant was innocent, having known that a crime is committed, any prudent person if he was innocent, would certainly have tried to dissuade A-1 from committing a crime and if he failed in his attempt, he would have certainly taken steps to see that his non-involvement is safeguarded by seeking help from others. Failure to do so makes us infer that the appellant already knew the intention of A-1 and acquiesced with the same. Here we would also note that in the normal course if the deceased was being taken for interrogation or for the purpose of keeping him away from any mischief that A-1 suspected him of planning to commit in the meeting of the Chief Minister then the normal destination would have been the police station but that was not the direction in which the vehicle was moving, therefore, it is legitimate for us to conclude that the appellant knew that the deceased was being taken towards the checkpost with certain other oblique motive. This conduct of the appellant in not trying to find out the reason for taking the deceased and the destination further strengthens our inference that the appellant knew well in advance what was the reason and the destination to which the deceased was being taken. Then again there is another factor to be taken note of in regard to the sharing of the common object of A-1 by the appellant. It has come in the evidence of PW-5 that the appellant had told him that after the body of the deceased was taken from the place where it had fallen in the first instance, the appellant had taken away certain possible identification materials like panchayat seal and some personal papers with a view to create false evidence as to the whereabouts of the deceased. This also indicates the involvement of the appellant in the crime. These circumstances and inferences drawn from such proved circumstances establish beyond all reasonable doubt that the appellant did share the common intention of A-1 in taking the deceased away in the jeep driven by A-1 and causing the murder, therefore, the hypothesis of innocence pleaded on behalf of the appellant in our opinion is not in consonance with the innocence of the appellant. Mani Kumar Thapa v. State of Sikkim, AIR 2002 SC 2920 : (2002) 7 SCC 157 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1637 (1645, 1646, 1647) : 2002 CrLJ 4069.

[7488] ● Common intention—Sharing of by co-accused.—The prosecution case itself is that there was no prior meeting of minds of all the four accused-appellants. The villagers including the prosecution witnesses and some of the accused persons were accompanying the officials of the Tubewell Irrigation Department for the purpose of surveying the irrigated fields and in this process they reached the filed of accused Ram Swarup. Feelings mounted and verbal exchange got heated resulting in wielding of weapons like lathis and guns on the spur of the moment. Villagers in our country are routinely accompanied by lathis. The guns were licensed guns and it cannot be said that Ram Swarup and Raja Ram had deliberately taken the guns with them with the previous idea of utilizing the weapons in the unfortunate incident which was certainly not preconceived and premeditated. The wielding of lathis by Babu Ram and Deshraj is the earlier part of the incident. While Babu Ram and Deshraj inflicted lathi-blows, Mangali, the deceased also wielded his lathi though in his defence as stated by Shri Krishna, PW-1. Mangali fell down. It was at a point of time when Mangali was about to fall down or was falling down or had already fallen when Ram Swarup and Raja Ram fired. The exact position in which the victim was when the guns were fired has not come in the prosecution evidence. However, what is certain is that Babu Ram and Deshraj have not dealt any blow on the person of the deceased nor are they attributed with any overt act after the guns were fired. According to PW-1 and PW-2, guns were fired at a point of time when assault by lathis was over. The two guns by the two accused persons are said to have been fired almost simultaneously. In short, so far as the assault by Babu Ram and Deshraj is concerned, it had come to an end before the guns were fired; howsoever negligible may be the intervening gap. There is no direct or circumstantial evidence available on record for drawing an inference that Babu Ram and Deshraj could have, while assaulting Mangali with lathis, anticipated that Ram Swarup and Raja Ram or any one of them would fire at Mangali and fatally injure him. We cannot hold Babu Ram and Deshraj accused-appellants sharing common intention with Ram Swarup and Raja Ram to cause the death of Mangali. They can be attributed only with the intention of causing grievous hurt to Mangali. The injuries caused by them have resulted in fractures on the body of the deceased. The medical evidence is clear and specific. None of the lathi injuries either individually or collectively were enough to cause the death of the victim. Babu Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 2815 : (2002) 6 SCC 518 : (2002) SCC (Cri) 1400 (1406, 1407) : 2002 CrLJ 3745.

[7489] ● Common intention distinguished from same intention.—"Common intention has to be distinguished from same or similar intention. It is true that it is difficult, if not impossible, to collect and produce direct evidence in proof of the intention of the accused and mostly an inference as to intention shall have to be drawn from the acts or conduct of the accused or other relevant circumstances, as available. An inference as to common intention shall not be readily drawn; the culpable liability can arise only if such inference can be drawn with a certain degree of assurance." Babu Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 2815 : (2002) 6 SCC 518 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1400 (1407) : 2002 CrLJ 3745.

[7490] ● Common intention—Mere participation in crime with others not sufficient.— Common intention is a state of mind of an accused which can be inferred objectively from his conduct displayed in the course of commission of the crime as also prior and subsequent attendant circumstances. Mere participation in the crime with others is not sufficient to attribute common intention to one of others involved in the crime. The subjective element in common intention therefore should be proved by objective test. It is only then that one accused can be made vicariously liable for the acts and deeds of the other co-accused. Harjit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 3040 : (2002) 6 SCC 739 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1518 (1531).

[7492] ● Murder—Common intention.—Appellant has not been attributed with any other motive to either kill the deceased or any of the members of his family, nor was there any exhortation by A-1 to kill any person other than the deceased. In such circumstances, if the appellant has not chosen to obey the exhortation of his father to kill Manir then it will be extremely difficult to hold that the appellant shared the common intention of his father and his younger brother. Even if the role attributed to this appellant in shooting PWs-4 and 7 is to be accepted even then that cannot be part of the same common intention of killing Manir. Therefore, in our opinion, the prosecution has failed to establish that the appellant had shared the common intention of his father A-1 and younger brother A-3 so as to hold him guilty of murder by invoking Section 34, IPC. Md. Rustam v. State of Bihar, 2002 (9) Scale 286.

[7493] ● Common intention to Kill—Inference as to.—Assuming that the presence of all the accused persons on the date and time of the incident is fully proved but that fact alone cannot lead to an inference that all of them jointly assaulted the deceased and had common intention to kill her. Mere presence of the accused-appellants in the house cannot reasonably lead to an inference of their joint participation in physical assault and common intention on their part with the convicted accused to commit her murder. The medical evidence showing that the death was not "suicidal" but "homicidal" also does not necessarily lead to the inference of involvement of all the accused in the homicidal death of the deceased. Vethal Tukaram More v. State of Maharashtra, 2002 SCC (Cri) 1555 (1562).

[7494] ● Common intention—Sharing of.—The accused with the rest of the accused armed with deadly weapons like chopper etc. and got inside the house and participated in the operation and he admittedly inflicted a cut injury on one of the deceased. This eloquently speaks of his sharing the common intention with the rest of the assailants. Ochathevar v. State, AIR 2002 SC 2392 : (2002) 10 SCC 203 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 468 (469) : 2002 CrLJ 2979.

[7495] ● Common intention—Essential element of.—Essence of Section 34 is simultaneous consensus of the mind of persons participating in the criminal action to bring about a particular result. It is trite to record that such consensus can be developed at the spot. Requirement of statute is sharing the common intention upon being present at the place of occurrence. Mere distancing himself from the scene cannot absolve the accused-though the same however, depends upon the fact-situation of the matter under consideration and no rule steadfast can be laid down therefor. Lallan Rai v. State of Bihar, AIR 2003 SC 333 : (2003) 1 SCC 268 : 2003 CrLJ 465 : JT 2002 (9) SC 334.

[7496] ● Common intention—Prior concert and pre-arranged plan foundation of.—A charge under Section 34 presupposes the sharing of a particular intention by more than one person to commit a criminal act. Participation need not on all cases to be by physical presence. Prior concert and pre-arranged plan is the foundation of common intention to establish liability and guilt. Principle of joint liability in doing of a criminal act is embodied in Section 34. Acts of several persons whether the separate, similar or diverse, if done in furtherance of common intention, each person is liable for result of act as if he had done himself. Krishnan v. State, AIR 2003 SC 2978 : (2003) 7 SCC 56 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1577 : 2003 CrLJ 3705 : JT 2003 (6) SC 151 : (2003) 3 Crimes 197 (SC).

[7497] ● Common intention to commit offence.—A person may by constructively liable for an offence which he did not actually commit by reason of—(1) the common intention of all to commit such an offence (2) his being a member of a conspiracy to commit such an offence. He is a member of an unlawful assembly, the members whereof knew that an offence was likely to be committed. The common sense principle embodied in constructive liability that if two or more persons intentionally do a thing jointly it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually. Krishnan v. State, AIR 2003 SC 2978 : (2003) 7 SCC 56 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1577 : 2003 CrLJ 1705 : (2003) 3 Crimes 197 (SC).

[7498] ● Common intention and common object—Distinction.—It is well settled by a catena of decisions that Section 34 as well as Section 149 deal with liability for constructive criminality i.e. vicarious liability of a person for acts of others. Both the sections deal with combinations of persons who become punishable as sharers in an offence. Thus they have a certain resemblance and may to some extent overlap. But a clear distinction is made out between common intention and common object in that common intention denotes action in concert and necessarily postulates the existence of a pre-arranged plan implying a prior meeting of the minds, while common object does not necessarily require proof of prior meeting of minds or pre-concert. Though there is substantial difference between the two sections, they also to some extent overlap and it is a question to be determined on the facts of each case whether the charge under Section 149 overlaps the ground covered by Section 34. Thus, if several persons numbering five or more, do an act and intend to do it, both Sections 34 and Section 49 may apply. If the common object does not necessarily involve a common intention, then the substitution of Section 34 for Section 149 might result in prejudice to the accused and ought not, therefore, to be permitted. But if it does involve a common intention then the substitution of Section 34 for Section 149 must be held to be a formal matter. Whether such recourse can be had or not must depend on the facts of each case. The non applicability of Section 149 is, therefore, no bar in convicting the appellants under Section 302 read with Section 4, IPC, if the evidence discloses commission of an offence in furtherance of the common intention of them all. Chhitarmal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2003 SC 796 : (2003) 2 SCC 266 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 514 : 2003 CrLJ 889 : (2003) 1 Crimes 363 (SC).

[7499] ● Common intention—Absence of.—It is not the case of the prosecution that all the accused persons came prepared to attack the deceased. It is their case that the fight started suddenly without pre-planning between the two ladies and the others joined in and somebody stabbed the deceased. Assuming this case of the prosecution to be true, in the absence of any material to show that there was any common intention, it will not be possible to attract Section 34. Cherlopalli Cheliminabi Saheb v. State of A.P., AIR 2003 SC 1014 : (2003) 2 SCC 571 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 659 : 2003 CrLJ 1246.

[7500] ● Common intention—Murder.—When the assailant picked up the weapons and came to assault the victims, the appellant held the hand of one of the victims so as to help the assailants assault the victims. There is no material on record to show that he either released the hand of the deceased or tried to dissuade the assailants from attacking. In such a situation, it is reasonable to conclude that the appellant also shared the intention of the assailants which is now held to be one to commit the murder of the deceased. Major Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 342 : (2002) 10 SCC 60 : 2003 CrLJ 473 : JT 2002 (9) SC 576.

[7501] ● Act done in furtherance of common intention.—That in a criminal act, where several persons are engaged or concerned in the commission of it, they may be guilty of different offences by means of their own acts. No doubt, when such criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. If an offence is committed by any member of an "unlawful assembly" in prosecution of the common object of that assembly or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, every person who, at the time of the committing of that offence, is a member of the same assembly, is guilty of that offence. The fact that any one of them may at times even stand wrongly acquitted and no appeal was filed by the State against such acquittal does not ipso facto impede the conviction of the other(s) accused. Equally, the conviction of one such does not automatically result in the conviction of everyone said to be involved in the occurrence, even dehors their actual role, the general and basis principle of criminal liability being that only that person, who commits the crime, would be held guilty and punished, except in cases where the concept of vicarious liability is recognised under law—To that extent and that too subject to the conditions therefor being strictly shown to exist in a given case. Surinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 10 SCC 66 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 793 (799-800) : (2003) 3 Crimes 308.

[7502] ● Common intention to Kill—Absence of concrete evidence to prove.—So far as the case on hand is concerned, Surinder Singh (Accused 1) and Tarsem Singh (Accused 2), since dead, were convicted under Section 302 with the assistance of Section 34 for causing the death of Santokh Singh @ Sokhal, the brother of Accused 1. The positive evidence firmly stated by PW-7 and PW-8 regarding the role of the appellant is that he was holding the hand of the deceased, when he was found lying down and Darshan Singh, Sarpanch, who was proclaimed offender, sat on the chest of the deceased and was said to be trying to throttle him. PW-7 was said to have pushed Darshan Singh away from the chest of the deceased and the appellant also seemed to have released the hands held by him. It was at that stage Darshan Singh was said to have given 3-5 kicks on the testicles of the deceased. The death does not seem to have been instantaneous and the evidence on record is that the occurrence was at 8-9 p.m., but the death occurred late in the night in his house. So far as the appellant is concerned, it could not be held that his holding the hands of the deceased facilitated Darshan Singh to inflict any of the fatal injuries and kicks on the testicles were said to have been given and could normally be possible also to be given only after Darshan Singh was pushed away from the chest of the deceased by PW-7, when it is stated by the witnesses that simultaneously the hands of the deceased also came to be released by the appellant. The appellant cannot, therefore, be indicted as having in any manner been responsible or having rendered it possible for Darshan Singh to inflict the fatal injuries. Section 34, IPC seems to have been resorted to in case mechanically and merely because the assault was by the accused in a group, in the manner spoken to by the witnesses and not on account of any other circumstance indicative of any common intention or premeditation to commit such an act. In the teeth of the acquittal of Darshan Singh, the main accused, and in the absence of any concrete evidence to prove the common intention to kill, the appellant is entitled to be extended the benefit of doubt and exonerated. Surinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 10 SCC 66 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 793 (800) : (2003) 3 Crimes 308.

[7503] ● Common intention to cause death.—All that the prosecution has to establish is that there was a prior concert or meeting or minds between the accused persons and such prior concert or meeting of minds may be determined from the conduct of the offenders unfolding itself during the course of action and the declaration made by them just before mounting the attack. This Court in those cases also held that the common intention can also be developed at the spur of the moment but there must be prearrangement or premeditated concert. In the instant case it is the prosecution case that at the time of the incident when the deceased and PW-1 were walking towards their house the accused persons, out of which A-1 and the appellants herein were armed with deadly weapons, with the help of the acquitted accused persons, waylaid the deceased. The prosecution says that while A-1 attacked the deceased, PW-1 was prevented by the appellants herein from preventing the said attack on her father and when PW-2 came to the spot and tried to help his father, he was also assaulted with a view to thwart his effort to protect his father. This itself goes to show that when these accused persons gathered in front of the house of A-1 and proceeded to assault the deceased, all of them had shared the common intention of causing death of the deceased. Though these appellants did not assault the deceased, it is clear that the manner in which they were armed and the manner in which they prevented PWs-1 and 2 from protecting their father by causing them grievous injuries also shows that this attack on PWs-1 and 2 was aimed at ensuring that the deceased was done away with, and the deceased did not get sufficient protection, therefore, we are of the considered view that the High Court having acquitted three of the accused persons was justified in invoking Section 34 to uphold the conviction of the appellants herein. Balram Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 2213 : (2003) 11 SCC 2861 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 149 (154-155)

[7504] ● Common intention to Kill deceased.—In the present case, it was not possible to hold on the facts noticed that the appellant had no intention to kill the deceased. It is not possible to hold that every case of single injury would show the absence of intent to kill. It would depend on the facts of each case. The type of weapon used would also be one of the important aspects to be kept in view. The submission that is generally made in such cases that it is a case of a single injury resulting in death and, therefore, the offence deserves to be converted from one under Section 302, IPC to one under Section 304, IPC, cannot be accepted as a broad proposition of law. One may sever the head of the deceased by a single injury or may kill him by a single gun-shot on a vital part as in the present case. It cannot be said that because of a single injury, the offence under Section 304, IPC is only made out and not under Section 302, IPC. Hari Prasad v. State of U.P., (2003) 9 SCC 60 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1164 (1166-67) : (2003) 1 Crimes 204.

[7505] ● Common intention—Direct proof of seldom available.—Section 34 has been enacted on the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act. The section is only a rule of evidence and does not create a substantive offence. The distinctive feature of the section is the element of participation in action. The liability of one person for an offence committed by another in the course of criminal act perpetrated by several persons arises under Section 34 if such criminal act is done in furtherance of a common intention of the persons who join in committing the crime. Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and, therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case and the proved circumstances. In order to bring home the charge of common intention, the prosecution has to establish by evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, that there was plan or meeting of minds of all the accused persons to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of Section 34, be it prearranged or on the spur of the moment; but it must necessarily be before the commission of the crime. The true concept of the section is that if two or more persons intentionally do an act jointly, the position in law is just the same as if each of them has done it individually by himself. As observed in Ashok Kumar v. State of Punjab, the existence of a common intention amongst the participants in a crime is the essential element for application of this section. It is not necessary that the acts of the several persons charged with commission of an offence jointly must be the same or identically similar. The acts may be different in character, but must have been actuated by one and the same common intention in order to attract the provision. Under the provisions of Section 34 the essence of the liability is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention. As a result of the application of principles enunciated in Section 34, when an accused is convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34, in law it means that the accused is liable for the act which caused death of the deceased in the same manner as if it was done by him alone. The provision is intended to meet a case in which it may be difficult to distinguish between acts of individual members of a party who act in furtherance of the common intention of all or to prove exactly what part was taken by each of them. As was observed in Chinta Pulla Reddy v. State of A.P., Section 34 is applicable even if no injury has been caused by the particular accused himself. For applying Section 34 it is not necessary to show some overt act on the part of the accused. Girja Shankar v. State of U.P., AIR 2004 SC 1808 : (2004) 3 SCC 793 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 863 (864) : 2004 CrLJ 1388. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Babulal Bhagwan Khandare v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1553 (1560).

[7507] ● Common intention—Meaning and connotation.—Section 34 really means that if two or more persons intentionally do a common thing jointly, it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually. It is a well recognised canon of criminal jurisprudence that the Courts cannot distinguish between co-conspirators, nor can they inquire, even if it were possible as to the part taken by each in the crime. Where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object each and every person becomes responsible for the act of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose : as the purpose is common, so must be the responsibility. All are guilty of the principal offence, not of abetment only. In combination of this kind a mortal stroke, though given by one of the party, is deemed in the eye of law to have been given by every individual present and abetting. But a party not cognizant of the intention of his companion to commit murder is not liable, though he has joined his companion to do an unlawful act. Leading feature of this section is the element of participation in action. The essence of liability under this section is the existence of a common intention animating the offenders and the participation in a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention. The essence is simultaneous consensus of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring about a particular result. The participation need not in all cases be by physical presence. In offences involving physical violence, normally presence at the scene of offence may be necessary, but such is not the case in respect of other offences when the offence consists of diverse acts which may be done at different time and places. The physical presence at the scene of offence of the offender sought to be rendered liable under this section is not one of the conditions of its applicability in every case. Before a man can be held liable for acts done by another, under the provisions of this section, it must be established that (i) there was common intention in the sense of a pre-arranged plan between the two, and (ii) the person sought to be so held liable had participate in some manner in the act constituting the offence. Unless common intention and participation are both present, this section cannot apply. Parasa Raja Manikyala Rao v. State of A.P., AIR 2004 SC 132 (135-36) : 2004 CrLJ 390.

[7510] ● Murder—Common intention.—In view of the cogent, credible and trustworthy evidence of PWs-1 to 4 about overt acts and the instigations, Section 34 has been rightly applied by the High Court. Having regard to the nature of disputes between the two families of the accused and victim, the happening of events immediately before the incident in question, the role found to have been played by them and the utterances said to have been made during the course of the assault are sufficient to provide a safe and sound basis for an inevitable inference of the existence of common intention in this case. Parasa Raja Manikyala Rao v. Sate of A.P., AIR 2004 SC 132 (137) : 2004 CrLJ 390 : (2003) 4 Crimes 375.

[7511] ● Murder—Common intention.—In this case though no charge was framed for an offence under Section 302, IPC read with Section 34, the evidence on record clearly brings out application of Section 34, Section 34 can be applied if the evidence of the eye-witness clearly establishes the role played by the concerned accused. Ramanand Yadav v. Prabhu Nath Jha, AIR 2004 SC 1053 : 2004 CrLJ 640 : (2003) 4 Crimes 399.

[7512] ● Common intention to cause death.—A-1 was armed with a very dangerous weapon like aruval, he had also exhorted the other two accused to kill the deceased and his brother. Appellant No. 2 caused a serious injury on the deceased on a vital artery in the leg, and thereafter the first accused proceeded to attack the deceased. It indicates that all the accused persons including A-1 shared the common intention of each other to cause the death of the deceased and PW-1. Muthusamy v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2004 SC 728 : (2004) 1 Crimes 122.

[7513] ● Common intention essentially being state of mind.—Since common intention essentially being a state of mind and can only be gathered by inference drawn from facts and circumstances established in a given case, the earlier decisions involving almost similar facts cannot be used as a precedent to determine the conclusions on facts in the present case. Ramesh Singh v. State of A.P., 2004 CrLJ 3354 : JT 2004 (4) SC 62.

[7514] ● Common intention—Development of at spot.—The evidence on record did not show that the accused persons shared the common intention to kill the deceased. It is accepted that the first reaction after questioning the deceased and PWs-1 and 2 was that they were criminals, notorious and should be beaten. No further act is attributed. They even did not chase them. It is also accepted that after they had gone some distance, A-1 fired the gun twice. It appeared from the evidence of PWs-1 and 3 that A-1 was also armed with lathi. There was no evidence to show that other accused persons were aware that he was also carrying a gun or that he intended to use it. The Trial Court having accepted that there was no evidence of any type to show pre-concert came to a hypothetical conclusion that it may have developed at the spot. There was no material to support the conclusion. The High Court unfortunately did not specifically deal with this aspect. The inevitable conclusion is that the appellant cannot be convicted in terms of Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. Girija Shankar v. State of U.P., AIR 2004 SC 1808 : (2004) 3 SCC 793 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 863 (868) : 2004 CrLJ 1388 : JT 2004 (2) SC 140 : (2004) 1 JCC 392 : (2004) 1 Crimes 337.

[7515] ● Common intention of causing death.—But question for our consideration is : what was the common intention? Was it to murder the deceased as held by the two Courts below or was it to merely assault in an attempt to take possession of the disputed land? An overall consideration of the material on record like the motive, nature of injuries caused, and the fact that there were also injuries on the accused indicates that there was a fight between the two groups of people during which fight the deceased suffered the injuries. It is difficult to come to the conclusion that the appellants went and assaulted the deceased with the intention to kill him. If that was the intention there would have been many more injuries on other vital parts of the body, as also the fact that no attempt was made to kill the other two brothers of the deceased even though they were outnumbered. The fact that the appellants had sought police help also indicates that they did not intend to take the law into their own hands in the first instance. Further, the fact that though many of the appellants carried axes the doctor who conducted the post-mortem found only one incised wound on the forehead. This also indicates that the accused persons did not really intend to kill the deceased. At the same time, it is to be noted that the prosecution has not been able to identify who really caused Injury 12 which caused the death of the deceased. In such circumstances, it is not safe to infer that the appellants shared a common intention of causing the death of the deceased, but it would be more appropriate to hold the appellants guilty of causing grievous hurt, an offence which is punishable under Section 326, IPC. Daulat Taimbak Shewale v. State of Maharashtra, 2004 SCC (Cri) 1901 (1904) : (2004) 5 Scale 285 : (2004) 4 Supreme 77.

[7516] ● Common intention—Development of at spur of moment.—The common intention of the three accused developed immediately after the shots were fired at Kanhaiya Pandey, as a result thereof he fell down on the ground seriously injured. The plan to ward off attack in retaliation by the complainant-party and the other villagers present nearby and to prevent them from approaching towards place of incident and the accused persons, common intention developed at the spur of the moment at the place of occurrence during the commission of crime. The act of all the three accused persons of firing and throwing spear was in furtherance of the common intention of all of them. When the firearms were used indiscriminately in the open place, the assailants may be presumed to know that result of such use of the weapon will very likely give bodily injury to the persons and when such injuries are caused to the persons, it is the actual result from the assault made, and everyone of the persons concerned in the act will be guilty for that injury irrespective of the fact whether the prosecution has proved that a particular injury was caused by a particular accused person or not. Injury caused to the villagers by the firearm although simple in nature are caused by accused person in furtherance of the common object of all the three accused persons. This Court, therefore, hold the accused, appellants guilty of offence under Section 324 read with Section 34, IPC. Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, AIR 2004 SC 5068 : (2004) 13 SCC 189 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 113 (121-122).

[7518] ● "Common intention" implies prearranged plan.—"Common intention" implies prearranged plan and acting in concert pursuant to the prearranged plan. Under this section a preconcert in the sense of a distinct previous plan is not necessary to be proved. The common intention to bring about a particular result may well develop on the spot as between a number of persons, with reference to the facts of the case and circumstances of the situation. Though common intention may develop on the spot, it must, however, be anterior in point of time to the commission of offence showing a prearranged plan and prior concert. (See Krishna Govind Patil v. State of Maharashtra) In Amrik Singh v. State of Punjab, it has been held that common intention presupposes prior concert. Care must be taken not to confuse same or similar intention with common intention; the partition which divides their bonds is often very thin, nevertheless, the distinction is real and substantial, and if overlooked, will result in miscarriage of justice. To constitute common intention, it is necessary that intention of each one of them be known to the rest of them and shared by them. Undoubtedly, it is a difficult thing to prove even the intention of an individual and, therefore, it is all the more difficult to show the common intention of a group of persons. But however difficult may be the task, the prosecution must lead evidence of facts, circumstances and conduct of the accused from which their common intention can be safely gathered. In Maqsoodan v. State of U.P., it was observed that prosecution must lead evidence from which the common intention of the accused can be safely gathered. In most cases it has to be inferred from the act, conduct or other relevant circumstances of the case in hand. The totality of the circumstances must be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion whether the accused had a common intention to commit offence for which they can be convicted. The facts and circumstances of cases vary and each case has to be decided keeping in view the facts involved. Whether an act is in furtherance of the common intention is an incident of fact and not of law.

From the evidence on record, it is clear that at the time when the second incident took place which led to the death of the deceased even according to the prosecution, none of the accused persons was motivated by any particular desire to attack Jhalar Mandal. The incident in question occurred on the spur of the moment without there being any intention of causing death or of causing such injury as they knew was likely to cause death, and was an act arising out of the enmity they had with the nephew of the deceased and aggravated by the unwanted questioning by the deceased. From the evidence it is clear that the act of the appellants cannot be construed as an act other than causing grievous hurt. In this background, we agree with the learned counsel for the appellants that in the absence of any motive, intention or knowledge as to their act which led to the death of the deceased, the appellants can only be held guilty for an offence punishable under Section 326 read with Section 34, IPC since there is material to show that these two appellants did wield their lathis out of which at least one blow, if not both, struck the head of the deceased causing him grievous injury which ultimately led to his death. Chowa Mandal v. State of Bihar, AIR 2004 SC 1603 : (2004) 13 SCC 231 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 154 (156-157) : 2004 CrLJ 1405.

[7519] ● Common intention—Direct proof of seldom available.—Section 34 has been enacted on the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act. The section is only a rule of evidence and does not create a substantial offence. The destructive feature of the section is the element of participation in action. The liability of one person for an offence committed by another in the course of criminal act perpetrated by several persons arises under Section 34 if such criminal act is done in furtherance of a common intention of the persons who join in committing the crime. Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and, therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case and the proved circumstances. In order to bring home the charge of common intention, the prosecution has to establish by evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, that there was a plan or meeting of minds of all the accused persons to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of Section 34, be it prearranged or on the spur of the moment; but it must necessarily be before the commission of the crime. The true content of the section is that if two or more persons intentionally do an act jointly, the position in law is just the same as if each of them has done it individually by himself. The existence of a common intention amongst the participants in a crime is the essential element for application of this section. It is not necessary that the acts of the several persons charged with commission of an offence jointly must be the same or identically similar. The acts may be different in character, but must have been actuated by one and the same common intention in order to attract the provision. The section does not say "the common intentions of all" nor does it say "an intention common to all". Under the provisions of Section 34 the essence of the liability is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention. As a result of the application of principles enunciated in Section 34, when an accused is convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34, in law it means that the accused is liable for the act which caused death of the deceased in the same manner as if it was done by him alone. The provision is intended to meet a case in which it may be difficult to distinguish between acts of individual members of a party who act in furtherance of the common intention of all or to prove exactly what part was taken by each of them. As was observed in Chinta Pulla Reddy v. State of A.P. Section 34 is applicable even if no injury has been caused by the particular accused himself. For applying Section 34 it is not necessary to show some overt act on the part of the accused. State of M.P. v. Deshraj, AIR 2004 SC 2764 : (2004) 13 SCC 199 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 123 (126) : 2004 CrLJ 415; TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Hari Ram v. State of U.P., 2005 SCC (Cri) 321 (325); (2) Harbans Kaur v. State of Haryana, AIR 2005 SC 2989 : (2005) 9 SCC 195 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1213 (1216, 1217).

[7520] ● Common intention—Sharing of.—All the three respondents were found guilty by the Sessions Court for the offence of murder punishable under Section 302 read with Section 34. The evidence of the three eyewitnesses proves that A-1 Saghir, s/o Zakkan Khan stabbed on the chest of the deceased whereas A-2 Amir Ahmad and A-3 Farid Khan caused injuries on the back and legs of the deceased. The post-mortem report shows that the deceased Khurshid Mian sustained two injuries on the chest whereas the injuries on the right thigh above knee joint and the inner aspect of right ankle were very small in nature and these injuries must have been caused by A-2 Amir Ahmad and A-3 Farid Khan. Having regard to the nature of the involvement of A-2 Amir Ahmad and A-3 Farid Khan, it is difficult to believe that they shared a common intention to cause the death of Khurshid Mian. If at all, they committed an offence punishable only under Section 324 read with Section 34. Conviction of A-2 and A-3 for the offence of murder under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC is set aside. After conviction by the Sessions Court and earlier as undertrials, these accused had been in jail for some period. The imprisonment undergone by them would be sufficient to meet the ends of justice for the offence under Section 324 read with Section 34, IPC. State of U.P. v. Farid Khan, AIR 2004 SC 5050 : (2005) 9 SCC 103 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 51 (55) : 2004 CrLJ 4970.

[7521] ● Absence of any other accused Section 34, IPC would not apply.—In the absence of any other accused person, question of applicability of Section 34, IPC would not arise. Madan Pal v. State of Haryana, (2004) 13 SCC 508 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 357.

[7522] ● Common intention—Joint liability.—Section 34, IPC enacts that when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons, is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. The section thus lays down a principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act. The essence of that liability is found in the existence of "common intention" animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention. The section is intended to meet a case in which it is difficult to distinguish between the act of individual members of a party and to prove exactly what part was played by each of them. It, therefore, enacts that once it is found that a criminal act has been committed by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for the criminal act as if it were done by him alone. It is thus an exception to the general rule of criminal jurisprudence that it is the primary responsibility of the person who actually commits a crime and only that person can be held guilty and punished in accordance with law for his individual act.

It is thus clear that the criminal act referred to in Section 34, IPC is the result of the concerted action of more than one person if the said result was reached in furtherance of the common intention and each person must be held liable for the ultimate result as if he had done it himself. Saravanan v. State of Pondicherry, 2005 SCC (Cri) 161 (164, 165).

[7523] ● Common intention—Doing of criminal act in furtherance of.—It was thus a clear case of doing of a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention. It was in the evidence of Dr. Balaraman that Injury 5 was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Taking into consideration the concession by the learned Public Prosecutor that the case would not be covered by Section 302, IPC, Accused 1, 3 and 4 were convicted by the trial Court for an offence punishable under Section 304 Part II read with Section 34, IPC. In our opinion, by applying Section 34, IPC and convicting the appellants for an offence under Section 304 Part II read with Section 34, IPC, no error of law has been committed either by the trial Court or by the High Court. Saravanan v. State of Pondicherry, 2005 SCC (Cri) 161 (165).

[7524] ● Common intention—Murder.—The facts of the case disclose that murders have taken place on both sides. While the deceased was being tried for the murder of the uncle of the appellant, Ravindra Singh was being tried for the murder of the son of the deceased. The parties are well known to each other. It so happened that on the day of occurrence, while the deceased was proceeding ahead, he was noticed by the appellant herein who was in the company of Ravindra Singh, who was carrying a loaded country-made pistol. He exhorted Ravindra Singh to kill the deceased whereafter Ravindra Singh fired at the deceased from behind and killed him. If these facts cannot be disputed, there can be no doubt about the application of Section 34, IPC. It was pursuant to the common intention of both that Ravindra Singh fired at the deceased resulting in his death. Having heard the parties and persuaded the records, we find nothing which may lead us to hold that the allegation of exhortation by the appellant is not true. Damodar v. State of U.P., AIR 2005 SC 1247 : (2005) 1 SCC 543 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 414 (415) : 2005 CrLJ 330.

[7525] ● Common intention—Difficult to discern element of—Among appellants.—In the instant case it is difficult to discern the element of common intention among the appellants. It is difficult to hold on the basis of the evidence on record that they were activated by the design to kill Kartik Rai or his son. At the most it can be said that the appellants joined the other accused to trespass into the house of the victims with a view to threaten them by show of force by using criminal force. Mukti Prasad Rai v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 69 (71).

[7526] ● Common intention to Kill.—On the conspectus of various relevant features including the genesis and the nature of the quarrel, the absence of motive for taking the extreme step of killing the victims, the short time gap within which the entire incident occurred pursuant to the petty quarrel amongst the women, the nature of weapons used and the part played by the appellants, the conclusion of the High Court that the appellants were prompted by the common intention to kill or that they instigated their fellow accused to kill Kartik Rai and his son is not sustainable. Mukti Prasad Rai v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 69 (71).

[7527] ● Section 34, IPC—Applicability—Nature of liability of person acting in furtherance of "common intention of".—The section does not say "the common intentions of all", nor does it say "an intention common to all". Under the provisions of Section 34 the essence of the liability is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention. As a result of the application of principles enunciated in Section 34, when an accused is convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34, in law it means that the accused is liable for the act which caused death of the deceased in the same manner as if it was done by him alone. The provision is intended to meet a case in which it may be difficult to distinguish between acts of individual members of a party who act in furtherance of the common intention of all or to prove exactly what part was taken by each of them. As was observed in Chinta Pulla Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1993 SC 1899 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 875. Section 34 is applicable even if no injury has been caused by the particular accused himself. For applying Section 34 it is not necessary to show some overt act on the part of the accused. Harbans Kaur v. State of Haryana, AIR 2005 SC 2989 : (2005) 9 SCC 195 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1213 (1217) : 2005 CrLJ 2199 : 2005 (2) Crimes 7.

[7528] ● Common intention—Absence of.—There is evidence to the effect that the appellants only wanted to teach a lesson to Tara Singh. They were aggrieved by the fact that deceased Tara Singh had purchased the agricultural land which they expected to get from Gurdial Kaur. Two of the assailants were armed with axes, but they did not use the sharp edge of those weapons and the injuries sustained by deceased Tara Singh would show that there were no deep penetrating injuries. Most of the injuries were of minor nature, having possibly been caused by the blunt edge of the weapon.

Gora Singh though armed with a Kulhari used the blunt portion of that axe. Sikandar Singh was armed with a Sotti. He caught hold of deceased Tara Singh to enable the other assailants to cause injury to him and Sikandar Singh himself gave sotti-blows on the back of the deceased which resulted in causing fracture of the ribs and, in turn, piercing of the lung tissues of the deceased Tara Singh. It is clear that Sikandar Singh dealt the fatal blows which ultimately resulted in the death of the deceased. If the entire prosecution evidence is considered in the background of the so-called motive alleged, it is very difficult to discern that these appellants had any common intention to cause the death of the deceased. The sotti-blows dealt on the back of deceased Tara Singh proved fatal causing fracture of ribs which pierced his lung tissues.

On careful analysis of the prosecution evidence and the role played by each one of the appellants, the evidence did not show that the appellants shared a common intention to cause the death of the deceased. However, appellant Sikandar Singh caused injuries on deceased Tara Singh which proved to be fatal at the end. The act committed by Sikandar Singh would come within the offence punishable under Section 304, Part I, IPC as he could be attributed with the knowledge that the injury caused by him is likely to cause death. The grievous injuries caused by other appellants, namely, Gora Singh and Balbir Singh, would fall within the mischief of Section 326, IPC. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 9 SCC 299 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1245 (1248) : 2005 (1) Crimes 393.

[7529] ● Common intention—Accused-I gave gandasi blow on right hand of deceased causing grievous injury and Accused-2 gave lathi blow on left foot and also thrust blow of lathi on left side of head of deceased.—When the deceased near the house of Janta Singh A-1, A-2 armed with gandasi and lathi respectively were present there, A-2 made an absence gesture. At this A-2 and deceased exchanged that words and abused each other, A-1 gave a gandasi blow on the right hand of the deceased which caused a grievous injury. A-2 gave a lathi blow on the left foot of the deceased and also gave a thrust-blow of lathi on the left side of his head. When PW-6 and PW-7 raised alarm, both the accused ran away from the spot. Doctor found injury, which was incised wound in the middle phalanx of the index finger of right hand. The second injury was abrasion on the lateral side of upper 1/3rd part of left leg and the patient complained of pain on different parts of the body and expired next day. It was held that Section 34 was rightly applied and both the accused were convicted for offences under Sections 323, 325 and 326 r/w Section 34, IPC. Harbans Kaur v. State of Haryana, AIR 2005 SC 2989 : (2005) 9 SCC 195 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1213 (1215) : 2005 CrLJ 2199 : 2005 (2) Crimes 7.

[7530] ● Common intention if shared—Deceased way laid to extort money from him.— In the instant case the incident happened in the agricultural field where these persons apparently came for their agricultural work. It is true that the accused were armed with weapons but that by itself is not sufficient to hold that all the persons had come there with the intention of causing death of Ran Veer. The evidence in the case only disclosed that the accused persons came in a group and first accused Lakshman Singh fired at deceased Ran Veer. It is also important to note that the deceased Ran veer had sustained one more injury which is incised in nature and the same is alleged to have been caused by the second accused Kirtan Singh who was armed with a "farsa". This injury was not grievous and the second accused was found guilty of offence punishable under Section 307, IPC for having caused grievous injury to PW-2. The fact that the second accused did not cause any grievous injury even though he was armed with deadly weapon, was also taken note of by the High Court for convicting him rather than holding that he shared the common intention to cause the death of the deceased.

When the matter came before the Supreme Court, it was held that it could not be said that the High Court had taken perverse view and the finding of the High Court could not be said to be reasonable. Sukhbir Singh v. Kirtan Singh, (2005) 10 SCC 567 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1624 (1626).

[7531] ● Common intention, sharing of.—The three persons were alleged to have gone to the shop of the deceased. They asked the shop-owner to come out. On the deceased going out of the shop, two of the assailants (one of them is the appellant) held two revolvers to the heard of the victim and the third one had a dagger with him. Keeping the victim in that form they asked him to pay Rs. 5000 plus the entire collection in the shop for that day. As the victim could not pay the said amount he expressed his helplessness. Keeping the victim in this form they asked his son PW-4 Anil Kumar to meet the demand. PW-4 also expressed helplessness to oblige the assailants. Then A-1 plunged the dagger into the abdomen of the victim. Thereafter, all the three ran away from the scene. The deceased succumbed to the injury thereby sustained.

The counsel for appellant's submitted that it was possible that the two persons who held the victim with revolvers would not have intended him to murder because if they had so intended they would have used the revolvers. Second was an alternative contention that they would have caused and shown only toy-revolvers. Held, "Either of the said alternatives is not enough to dispel the possibility of the three persons entertaining common intention to commit the murder of the deceased. Our reasons are the following : if the two persons carried only toy revolvers, that would explain why those two persons could not kill the deceased. If the revolvers were genuine, why one of them at least did not use it need not be countenanced by us because the third one had plunged his dagger which itself was a lethal weapon. If the three persons had decided to go for committing extortion they would have thought of what should be done in case they failed to extract the money. It is unthinkable that the three would have decided to walk back coolly on failure of their mission to commit extortion." Raju Ram v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 571 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1627 (1628).

[7532] ● Common intention—Absence of.— The only evidence on the part played by the appellant-accused is the exhortation made by him not to allow the deceased to go away. There was no exhortation to kill or there is no other overt act attributed to him which can possibly lead to the reasonable inference that the appellant was keen that Kaka Singh should deal a fatal blow on Dildar Singh. In this fact situation as disclosed by the evidence of the eyewitnesses themselves, it is difficult to come to the conclusion that the appellant intended to kill the deceased taking the aid of Kaka Singh. The necessary nexus between the exhortation attributed to the appellant and the act done by the main accused is not, in our opinion, established. At any rate, there is a considerable doubt whether the appellant entertained such intention pursuant to an incident that took place one year earlier, that too when it ended in a compromise. At the same time the conduct of the appellant in exhorting Kaka Singh not to allow him to escape and in not stopping the accused Kaka Singh from attacking with knife more than once would unmistakably indicate that by his exhortation, the appellant wanted his companion Kaka Singh to cause harm to the deceased. Thus the reasonable inference that could be drawn from the proved facts is that the appellant at least instigated Kaka Singh to cause hurt to Dildar Singh and in pursuance of such instigation Kaka Singh acted instantaneously, though the magnitude of injuries inflicted on the deceased was something that was, in all probability, unintended by the appellant. Paramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 10 SCC 143 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1493 (1494).

[7533] ● One of the accused having abrasions—Highly doubtful whether he had shared common intention.—According to the counsel for the appellants, these abrasions could have been caused on account of fall on the ground as stated by PW-6 (Dr. Malik). In any case, it is contended that the second appellant cannot be said to have common intention with the first appellant. If at all they can be convicted for the individual acts. There is force n the contention of the counsel for the appellant as regards the second appellant (A-2) is concerned. PW-5 did not find any injury at all on the knees. May be, that it was so minimal that it could have escaped the attention of PW-5. The other possibility is that this mild abrasion could be caused by reason of fall. In any case, the version of PW-8 that lathi-blow was given with such a force that as a result of its impact, the victim fell to the ground cannot be accepted. That apart, even according to the prosecution case, attack took place suddenly in a public place when PWs-8 and 9 were returning to their home from Palwal. It is highly doubtful whether Appellant 2 shared his common intention with Appellant 1 and both of them wanted to kill PW-8 (Sukhbir). The conviction and sentence of the second appellant (Accused 2) is, therefore, set aside and the appeal is allowed insofar as the second appellant is concerned. He shall be released forthwith from the jail if he is not required in any other case. Jagdish v. State of Haryana, AIR 2005 SC 2576 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 96 (98) : 2005 CrLJ 3073 : JT 2005 (5) SC 579 : 2005 (2) Crimes 220.

[7534] ● Sharing common intention.—From the prosecution evidence it becomes clear that the accused shared the common intention. With Tileshwar Rai to cause the death of the deceased. Therefore there is no difficulty in holding that if the accused Tileshwar Rai would not have died, on the basis of evidence adduced by the prosecution, which is unimpeachable he was liable to be convicted under Section 302 with the aid of Section 34, IPC, but merely because he died before the commencement of his trial and could not be tried the accused cannot take any advantage therefrom. Rajani Rai v. State of Bihar, AIR 2006 SC 433 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 209 : 2006 CrLJ 163 : JT 2005 (9) SC 518 : 2005 (4) Crimes 206.

[7535] ● On the fact of case no common intention was proved.—In the instant case since the original quarrel was between PW-1 and A-5, in our view, it is difficult to say that there was common intention either premeditated or formed on the spot with regard to the murder of Ranjit Das. Ranjit Das was an intervenor to save PW-1 and in such a situation the incident appeared to have occurred on the spur of the moment. By no stretch of imagination can it be said that the murder of Ranjit Das was with the common intention of A-1 and A-5. From the evidence on record it clearly appears that the dao-blow was dealt by only A-1. If at all a conviction under Section 302, IPC is maintained, the death resulted by an independent act of A-1. In such a situation, A-5 cannot be roped in with the aid of Section 34, IPC. We are clearly of the view that the conviction of A-5 under Section 302, IPC with the aid of Section 34, IPC is not sustainable and, therefore, conviction qua A-5 under Sections 302/34, IPC is set aside. Abani K. Debnath v. State of Tripura, AIR 2006 SC 518 : (2005) 13 SCC 422 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 257 (259) : 2006 CrLJ 314 : 2005 (4) Crimes 279.

[7536] ● Circumstances showing that offence was committed in furtherance of common intention.—In the present case, the conviction recorded by the Trial Court was under Section 302 with the aid of Section 34. The two accused armed with country-made pistols accompanied by the other accused armed with SBBL gun and DBBL gun respectively went to the place of occurrence, waylaid the deceased and partly and attacked the deceased. It cannot be said that they accompanied the other accused as an idle curiosity. The aforesaid circumstances would clearly infer the intention of the present two accused for committing an offence in furtherance of common intention. Their conviction under Section 302 with the aid of Section 34 cannot be said to be unjustified. State of U.P. v. Ganga Ram, AIR 2006 SC 20 : (2005) 13 SCC 239 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 154 (160) : 2005 CrLJ 4643 : 2005 (4) Crimes 198 : 2005 (8) Scales 603.

[7538] ● Common intention can be formed even on spot.—No evidence has been brought on record by the prosecution to show that the accused persons met prior to the date of occurrence for the purpose of commission of the said offence. It is true that common intention can be formed even on the spot but for the said purpose, it is essential to consider the role played by the accused. The victim was the appellant's sister's daughter. She may have become enraged because her modesty was outraged. But it is difficult to arrive at a conclusion that she would be a party to the murder. Had she shared the common intention, she could have armed herself with a weapon and she would have played a more active role than what had been attributed to her by the prosecution. Vijayanti v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 13 SCC 134 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 790 (797, 798).

[7539] ● Common intention proved.—In the instant case, it cannot be said that the accused persons were prejudiced merely because charge was framed under Section 302 IPC simpliciter and no charge was framed under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC. From the evidence of two eyewitnesses, namely, PWs. 2 and 3 it would appear that the accused persons shared the common intention to cause death of the victim. They were cross-examined at length from all possible angles and from the suggestions that were put forth to the eyewitnesses, we are fully satisfied that the accused persons were not in any manner prejudiced in their defence. The apart, in their examination, under Section 313 CrPC, the appellants were specifically told that they along with other accused persons armed with Kirpan came to the place of occurrence and assaulted the deceased whereafter they fled away which shows that appellants shared the common intention to cause death of the deceased. Gurpeet Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2006 SC 191 : (2005) 12 SCC 615 : 2006 CrLJ 126 (133) : 2005 (4) Crimes 230 (SC).

[7540] ● No evidence showing that appellant helped accused in murder.—Where there was no evidence to show that the appellant helped the co-accused in committing murder, it was held that the appellant did not share the intention and, therefore, his conviction under Section 302/34 IPC was set aside and he was convicted under Section 326, IPC. Palanisamy v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2006) 10 SCC 297 : (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 341.

[7541] ● Accused helping co-accused in murder.—Where the appellant threatened and prevented PW 3 by causing knife injury when the accused was attacking deceased, it was held that the appellant acted in furtherance of common intention and thus his conviction under Section 302/34 IPC was proper. Kishore Eknath Nikam v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 10 SCC 666 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 62 : 2007 CrLJ 1007 : (2006) 4 Crimes 88.

[7542] ● Essentials of offence.—Before a person can be held liable for acts done by another, under the said provision, it must be established that : (i) there was common intention in the sense of a pre-arranged plan between the two; and (ii) the person sought to be so held liable had participated in some manner in the act constituting the offence. Prakash v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2006 (13) SCC 508 : 2007 CrLJ 798 (800) (SC) : 2006 (Supp-9) SCR 907 : 2007 (1) Supreme 1025 : 2006 (9) SLT 581 : 2007 (2) Crimes 74 (SC) : 2006 (12) Scale 635.

[7543] ● Accused preventing PWs to intervene in matter.—A perusal of the statements of all PWs 1, 2 and 3 shows that there is no manner of doubt that accused appellant in furtherance of the common intention of the A1-Jagdish tried to prevent PWs 2 and 3 from intervening in the matter. So much so that PW 3 who wanted to intervene, effectively was prevented by causing knife injury by accused appellant. Therefore, this conduct of the accused appellant is sufficient to attract Section 34 because he acted in furtherance of common intention of accused A-1. Looking to the facts of the present case there remains no manner of doubt that accused appellant was acting in furtherance of common intention and prevented PWs 2 and 3 to save deceased. He facilitated the commission of the offence in furtherance of common intention of A1-Jagdish in committing the murder of the deceased Parshant. Therefore, Section 34 is attracted in the present case and the accused appellant was rightly convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34 of IPC.—Kishore Eknath Nikam v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 10 SCC 666 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 62 : 2007 CrLJ 1007 (1008, 1009) : 2006 (4) Crimes 88 (SC).

[7544] ● Common intention—Inference from injuries by deceased.—Where a number of injuries suffered by the deceased clearly point out that it could not have been inflicted by one person, common intention on the part of one of the accused persons together with others to commit the murder of the deceased can be inferred. Rotash v. State of Rajasthan, 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 382 : 2007 CrLJ 758 (761) : 2007 (1) Crimes 236.

[7545] ● Direct proof of common intention seldom available—It can only be inferred from circumstances.—Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and, therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case. However, in order to bring home the charge of common intention the prosecution has to establish by evidence whether direct or circumstantial, that there was plan or meeting of minds of all the accused persons to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of Section 34. Laxman Anaji Dhundale v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 1876 : 2007 AIR SCW 3369 : (2007) 10 SCC 771 : 2007 CrLJ 3191 (3192, 3193) (SC) : (2007) 2 Crimes 225.

[7546] ● Common intention proved.—All the accused came at the same time. Each one of the was variously armed. They evidently came with an intention to commit some crime. Their target was known. They did not think of not committing the crime of murder of a son infront of his mother. He was assaulted indiscriminately. The common intention on the part of accused persons stood established. Rotash v. State of Rajasthan, 2007 AIR SCW 44 : (2006) 12 SCC 64 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 382 : 2007 CrLJ 758 (763) : 2007 (1) Crimes 236 :.

[7547] ● Common intention to be inferred from totality of facts and circumstances.—The inference of common intention is to be drawn from totality of facts Rotash v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 12 SCC 64 : 2007 SCC (Cri) 382 : 2007 CrLJ 758 (761).

[7548] ● Intention may be inferred from surrounding circumstances.—Counsel for the appellants submitted that since the appellants had not attacked the deceased Abdul Qayum, they could only be convicted under Section 324 IPC and not under Section 302. Held, Section 34 IPC clearly applied to the facts of the case as found by the High Court. There is no doubt that all the accused came armed with spears and lathies. It has also come in evidence that all the twelve accused surrounded deceased Abdul Qayum as well as the injured person Mustakin (PW 3). The appellants who were armed with spears had inflicted a spear wound on Mustakin in his ileum. Hence, Section 34 clearly applies in this case. It is well settled that common intention may develop on the spot among a number of persons and hence pre-concert in the sense of distinct previous plan is not necessary to attract Section 34 IPC. Also, it is not necessary to adduce direct evidence of common intention. The intention may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties. In the present case, the Court found no reason to disagree with the High Court that Section 34 IPC was attracted to the facts of the case. Imtiaz v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2007 CrLJ 1663 (1666, 1667) (SC) : 2007 (2) SCR 698 : 2007 (3) JT 484 : 2007 (2) Supreme 285 : 2007 (4) SRJ 336 : 2007 CrLJ 1663 : 2007 (2) Crimes 159 (SC) : 2007 (1) JCC 757 : 2007 (3) Scale 204.

[7549] ● Conviction under Section 304. Part read with 34 IPC set aside.—A common intention may be developed on the spot. Although a person may not be held guilty for having a common object, in a given situation, he may be held guilty for having a common intention, but such common intention must be shared with others. The recital made in the first information report which has been noticed by us herein clearly goes to show that the appellant had sought to attack the deceased while he was on motor cycle. The attack was warded off by PW-4. He suffered an injury. The deceased thereafter ran to the school building. The dead body of deceased was found only on the stair case of the school. The FIR as also the Evidence of PWs 4 and 5 revealed that the deceased was chased by all the accused. He was assaulted by all the accused. The specific role played by the appellant has not been disclosed. Whether the appellant alone was responsible for causing the death has also not been stated.

The deceased suffered as many as 19 injuries, some injuries were inflicted on vital parts of the body and some only on the hands and legs. There is nothing on record to show that the appellant inflicted any injury on a vital part of the body of the deceased. In the afore mentioned situation, Section 34 IPC would not be attracted. The conviction of accused under Section 34 was set aside. His conviction under Section 324, IPC only was maintained. Noor v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 84 : 2007 CrLJ 4299 (4303) : 2007 (3) Crimes 231 (SC).

[7550] ● Accused was seen firing shot at deceased and also leaving spot—No common intention.—When only accused appellant was armed with gun, PWs saw him firing shot at the deceased and also saw him leaving the spot, appellant accused cannot be said to have entertained common intention with other accused persons for the murder of the deceased. The conviction of the accused under Section 302 and acquittal of the other co-accused under Section 302 read with Section 34 was held proper. Anil v. State of Haryana, (2007) 10 SCC 274 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 641 : 2007 CrLJ 4294 (4297) : 2007 (3) Crimes 15 (SC) :.

[7551] ● No Common intention.—The prosecution case was that the accused police man entered the house of the deceased with intention to commit rape but he could not succeed in committing rape. On suggestion of the accused that if Harbans Kaur remained alive she would implicate all the accused and hence she should be killed, another accused killed the deceased. It is alleged that thereupon the accused gave a brick bat blow on the head of the deceased, as a result of which she died. As no role was assigned to the appellants, no common intention could be inferred. There was no evidence that the appellants had any role to play in the killing of deceased. The conviction of the two accused appellants under Section 302 was set aside. Surjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 2007 CrLJ 2766 (2769) (SC).

[7552] ● No credible evidence of any common intention.—There is no credible evidence showing that the accused Nos. 2 and 3 (appellants in this appeal) caused the death of the deceased. There is also no credible evidence of any common intention of the appellants along with their son Rajendra to cause the death of the deceased Kalpana. There is no doubt evidence that accused No. 1 Rajendra demanded ornaments from his wife Kalpana for selling the same for the purpose of purchasing tins and wooden ballies for making a roof of his house. However, we are not dealing with the case of accused No. 1 Rajendra in this appeal. We are only concerned with the question whether the guilt of the appellants who are the parents of Rejendra, is proved beyond reasonable doubt. We are of the opinion that it is not. The present case there is no credible evidence, direct or circumstantial, that there was such a plan or meeting of minds of all the accused persons to commit the offence in question. Hence, in our opinion, the charge under Section 34 IPC has not been established. Laxman Anaji Dhundale v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 1876 : (2007) 10 SCC 771 : 2007 SCC (Cri) 675 : 2007 CrLJ 3191 (3192, 3193) : 2007 (2) Crimes 225 (SC).

[7553] ● Applicability and scope of Section 34, IPC.—Section 34 has been enacted on the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act. The Section is only a rule of evidence and does not create a substantive offence. The distinctive feature of the Section is the element of participation in action. The liability of one person for an offence committed by another in the course of criminal act perpetrated by several persons arises under Section 34 if such criminal act is done in furtherance of a common intention of the persons who join in committing the crime. Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case and the proved circumstances. In order to bring home the charge of common intention, the prosecution has to establish by evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, that there was plan or meeting of mind of all the accused persons to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of Section 34, be it pre-arranged or on the spur of moment; but it must necessarily be before the commission of the crime. The true contents of the Section is that if two or more persons intentionally do an act jointly, the position in law is just the same as if each of them has done it individually by himself.

The Section does not say "the common intention of all", nor does it say "and intention common to all". Under the provisions of Section 34 the essence of the liability is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention. As a result of the application of principles enunciated in Section 34, when an accused is convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34, in law it means that the accused is liable for the act which caused death of the deceased in the same manner as if it was done by him alone. The provision is intended to meet a case in which it may be difficult to distinguish between acts of individual members of a party who act in furtherance of the common intention of all or to prove exactly what part was taken by each of them. Hemchand Jha v. State of Bihar, 2008 (11) SCC 303 : 2008 CrLJ 3203 : 2008 (9) SCR 1171 : 2008 (9) Scale 211 : 2008 (4) Supreme 570 : 2008 (3) Crimes 57 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Rajesh Kumar v. State of Himachal Pradesh, 2008 (4) Crimes 252 (SC) : JT 2008 (11) SC 160. (2) Hardeep Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2008 SC 3113 : 2008 (3) Crimes 28 (SC) : JT 2008 (10) SC 593.

[7554] ● Concept.—If two or more persons intentionally, do an get jointly, the position in law is just the same as if each of them has done if individually by himself. Sewa Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 682 : 2008 CrLJ 802 : 2008 (1) Crimes 78 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : Sachin Jana v. State of West Bengal,

(2008) 3 SCC 390 : 2008 (1) Crimes 342 (SC) : 2008 (2) SCR 14.

[7555] ● Applicability of Section 34, IPC.—For applying Section 34 IPC, it is not necessary to show some overt act on the part of the accused. The section applies even if no injury is caused by the particular person. Rajesh Kumar v. State of Himachal radesh, 2008 (4) Crimes 252 (SC) : JT 2008 (11) SC 160. To the same effect : (1) Shashi Mohan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2961 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 439 : 2008 CrLJ 3863. (2) Hardeep Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2008 SC 3113 : 2008 (3) Crimes 28 (SC). (3) Hemchand Jha v. State of Bihar, (2008) 11 SCC 303 : 2008 CrLJ 3203 : 2008 (3) Crimes 57 (SC). (4) Sewa Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 682 : (2008) 15 SCC 705 : 2008 CrLJ 802 : 2008 (1) Crimes 78.

[7556] ● No evidence of common intention and presence of accused on the spot.—Where the presence of accused A2 to A6 an spot was doubtful as they did not assault or cause injuries to any one and there was no evidence to common intention, the accused were acquitted if the charge under Section 302 and 307 etc. Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, 2008 AIR SCW 823 (835).

[7557] ● Common intention and common object—Distinction.—"Common object" is different from "Common intention" as it does not require a prior concept and a common meeting of minds before the attack. It is enough if each has the same object in view and there is fire or more and that they act as an assembly to achieve that object. Maranadu v. State, (2008) 16 SCC 529 : 2008 CrLJ 4562 : 2008 (4) Crimes 16. To the same effect : State of Karnataka v. Chikkahotappa, AIR 2008 SC 2692 : (2008) 15 SCC 299 : 2008 CrLJ 3495 : JT 2008 (7) SC 395.

[7558] ● Ingredients.—The essential conditions for the application of Section 34, IPC are (i) common intention to commit an offence and (ii) participation of all the accused persons in doing act or acts in furtherance of that common intention. Shaik China Brahmam v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 616 : (2007) 14 SCC 457 : (2007) 11 SCC 442 : 2008 (1) Crimes 105.

[7559] ● Essence of liability.—For the applicability of Section 34 IPC, the act may be different but these acts must be actuated by one and the same common intention. Sewa Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 682 : (2007) 15 SCC 75 : 2008 CrLJ 802 : 2008 (1) Crimes 78 (SC).

[7560] ● Essence of liability.—The essence of liability under Section 34 IPC is the existence of a common intention animating the offenders and the participation in a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention.—The essence is simultaneous consensus of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring about a particular result. Aizaz v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 12 SCC 198 : 2008 CrLJ 4374 : 2008 (3) Crimes 352. To the same effect : Shashi Mohan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2961 : (2008) 8 SCC 145 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 439 : 2008 CrLJ 2961.

[7561] ● Common Intention—Development.—Under Section 34, IPC, a pre-concert in the sense of a distinct previous plan is not necessary to be proved. The common intention to bring about a particular result may well develop on the spot as between a number of persons. Though common intention may develop on the spot, it must, however, be anterior in point of time to the commission of offence showing a pre-arranged plan and prior concert. Aizaz v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 12 SCC 198 : 2008 CrLJ 4374 (4376) : 2008 (3) Crimes 352.

[7562] ● Overt act need not be proved.—To attract the applicability of Section 34, IPC, proof of overt act on the part of accused is not necessary. State of Punjab v. Bakhshish Singh, 2008 (14) Scale 183.

[7563] ● Common intention—Accused going together with arms and fatal injuries are caused to deceased.—When persons go together armed with deadly weapons and fatal injuries are caused to the deceased all of them are equally liable in view of Section 34, IPC. Balwant Singh v. State of Pubjab, AIR 2008 SC 1243 : (2008) 12 SCC 237 : 2008 CrLJ 1648 (1650) : (2008) 1 Crimes 392.

[7564] ● Common intention.—In the instant case the prosecution case was that the accused persons assaulted the deceased with lathis and kanta. Litigation enmity was pending between the parties. Held, the accused appellants had common intention to commit the murder of the accused. The conviction of the accused appellants concurrently recorded by the Sessions Judge and High Court under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC was not interfered. Sewa Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2007) 15 SCC 75 : 2008 CrLJ 802 (805) (SC) : (2008) 1 Crimes 78.

[7565] ● Common intention—Proof.—To bring home the charge of common intention, the prosecution has to establish by evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, that there was plan or meeting of minds of all the accused person to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of Section 34, be it pre-arranged or on the spur of the moment; but it must necessarily be before the commission of the crime. Sachin Jana v. State of West Bengal, 2008 (3) SCC 390 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 45 : 2008 (2) SCR 14 : 2008 (1) Supreme 540 : 2008 (1) Crimes 342 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Sewa Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 682 : (2007) 15 SCC 75 : 2008 CrLJ 802 : 2008 (1) Crimes 78 (SC) : JT 2008 (1) (SC) 136. (2) Hardeep Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2008 SC 3113 : (2008) 12 SCC 39 : 2008 (3) Crimes 28. (3) Rajesh Kumar v. State of Himachal radesh, AIR 2009 SC 1 : (2008) 15 SCC 705 : 2009 CrLJ 335 : 2008 (4) Crimes 252 (SC) : JT 2008 (11) SC 160.

[7566] ● Common intention—Meaning.—Section 34, IPC really means that if two or more persons intentionally do a common thing jointly, it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually. It is a well recognized canon of criminal jurisprudence that the Courts cannot distinguish between co-conspirators, nor can they inquire, even if it were possible as to the part taken by each in the crime. Where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object each and every person becomes responsible for the act of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose; as the purpose is common, so must be the responsibility. All are guilty of the principal offence, not of abetment only. Aizaz v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 12 SCC 198 : 2008 CrLJ 4374 (SC) : 2008 (11) Scale 465 : 2008 (6) Supreme 268 : 2008 (3) Crimes 352.

[7567] ● Common intention.—The totality of the circumstances must be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion whether the accused had a common intention to commit offence for which they can be convicted. The prosecution must prove facts to justify an inference that all the participants of the acts had shared a common intention to commit the criminal act which was finally committed by one or more of the participants. Mere presence of a person at the time of commission of an offence by the confederates is not in itself sufficient to bring his case with in the purview of Section 34, unless community of designs is proved against him. Aizaz v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 12 SCC 198 : 2008 CrLJ 4374 : 2008 (3) Crimes 352. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Shaik China Brahmam, AIR 2008 SC 610 : (2007) 14 SCC 457 : 2008 (1) Crimes 105.

[7568] ● Murder—Common intention—Sections 300/34, IPC.—The accused persons, as per the charges, were charged with the offence under Section 302 substantively. In addition to that all the accused were also charged with the aid of Section 149, IPC. Both the appellants had specifically taken part in the assault, their presence was established, their overt acts were also established. It is further established that while Heera had given the blows with the aid of a sharp edged weapon, Murli had assaulted the deceased with lathi on the head. They have also been individually charged with the offence under Section 202, IPC. They came together on the spot, they also gave abuses to the deceased and, thereafter, acted along with each other. Therefore, conviction of bath the accused was upheld but not with the aid of Section 149, IPC but with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Murli v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 9 SCC 417 : 2010 CrLJ 2228 (2234).

[7569] ● Common intention—A question of fact.—The existence of common intention is a question of fact. Since intention is a state of mind, it is, therefore, very difficult, if not impossible, to get or procure direct proof of common intention. Therefore, Courts, in most cases, have to infer the intention from the act or conduct of the accused or other relevant circumstances of the case. However, an inference as to the common intention shall not be readily drawn; the criminal liability can arise only when such inference can be drawn with a certain degree of assurance. Bengai Mandal v. State of Bihar, AIR 2010 SC 686 : (2010) 2 SCC 91 : 2010 CrLJ 1420 (1422) : (2010) 1 Crimes 49.

[7570] ● Common intention—Section 34, IPC —Scope and applicability.—Section 34 IPC does not create any distinct offence, but it lays down the principle of constructive liability. Section 34 IPC stipulates that the act must have been done in furtherance of the common intention. In order to incur joint liability for an offence there must be a pre-arranged and premeditated concert between the accused persons for doing the act actually done, though there might not be long interval between the act and the pre-mediation and though the plan may be formed suddenly. In order that Section 34 IPC may apply, it is not necessary that the prosecution must prove that the act was done by a particular or a specified person. In fact, the section is intended to cover a case where a number of persons act together and on the facts of the case it is not possible for the prosecution to prove as to which of the persons who acted together actually committed the crime. Little or no distinction exists between a charge for an offence under a particular section and a charge under that section read with Section 34. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : JT

2010 (8) 319 : 2010 (4) Crimes 136 (SC). To the same effect : Abdul Sayeed v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 10 SCC 259 : 2010 (4) Crimes 86 (SC).

[7571] ● Common intention—Direct evidence.—Intention being a state of mind its direct proof, through not impossible is very difficult to procure. Therefore, the Courts in most cases have to infer the intention from the act(s) conduct of the accused or other relevant circumstances of the case. However, an inference as to common intention shall not be readily drawn, the criminal liability can arise only when such inference can be drawn with a certain degree of assurance. Bengai Mandal v. State of Bihar, AIR 2010 SC 686 : (2010) 2 SCC 91 : 2010 CrLJ 1420. To the same effect : Ashok Basak v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 10 SCC 660 : JT 2010 (11) SC 123.

[7572] ● Common intention—May develop on spot.—Common intention to bring about a particular result may develop at the spur of moment the spot, with reference to the facts of the case and circumstances existing thereto. Abdul Sayeed v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 10 SCC 259 : 2010 (4) Crimes 86 (SC). To the same effect : (1) Asoke Basak v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 10 SCC 660. (2) Maharashtra State Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd. v. Datar Switchgear Ltd., (2010) 10 SCC 479. (meeting of mind must be prior to the commission of offence).

[7573] ● "Similar intention".—Persons having similar intention which is not the result of the pre-arranged plan cannot be held guilty with the aid of Section 34, IPC. Abdul Sayeed v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 10 SCC 259.

[7574] ● Evidence of common intention.—In most of the cases, it can be inferred from the acts or conduct of the accused and other relevant circumstances. Therefore, in inferring the common intention under Section 34, IPC, the evidence and documents on record acquire a great significance and they have to be very carefully scrutinized by the Court. This is particularly important in cases where evidence regarding development of the common intention to commit the offence graver, then, the one originally designed, during execution of the original plan, should be clear and cogent. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : JT 2008 (8) 319 : 2010 (4) Crimes 136 (SC).

[7575] ● Proof of existence of common intention.—Undoubtedly, it is difficult to prove even the intention of an individual and, therefore, it is all the more difficult to show the common intention of a group of persons. Therefore, in order to find whether a person is guilty of common intention, it is absolutely necessary to carefully and critically examine the entire evidence on record. The common intention can be spelt out only from the evidence on record. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : 2010 (4) Crimes 136 (SC).

[7576] ● Section 134, IPC—Implication.—Section 34, IPC implies pre-arranged plan and acting in concert pursuant to pre-arranged plan. Asoke Basak v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 10 SCC 660. To the same effect : Abdul Sayeed v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 10 SCC 259 : 2010 (4) Crimes 86 (SC).

[7577] ● Common intention—Implication.—The words "common intention" imply a pre-arranged plan and acting in concert pursuant to the plan. It must be proved that the criminal act was done in concert pursuant to the pre-arranged plan. Common intention comes into force prior to the commission of the act in point of time, which need not be a long gap. Under this section a pre-concert in the sense of a distinct previous plan is not necessary to be proved. The common intention to bring about a particular result may well develop on the spot as between a number of persons, with reference to the facts of the case and circumstances of the situation. Though common intention may develop on the spot, it must, however, be anterior in point of time to the commission of the crime showing a pre-arranged plan and prior concert. The common intention may develop in course of the fight but there must be clear and unimpeachable evidence to justify that inference. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : 2010 (4) Crimes 136 (SC).

[7578] ● Common intention must be proved in the sense of pre-arranged plan.—Section 34 is not a substantive offence. It is imperative that before a man can be held liable for acts done by another under the provisions of this section, it must be established that there was common intention in the sense of a pre-arranged plan between the two and the person sought to be so held liable had participated in some manner in the act constituting the offence. Unless common intention and participation are both present, this section cannot apply. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : JT 2010 (8) 319 : 2010 (8) Scale 27.

[7579] ● Section 34 and 249, IPC—Distinction.—(i) Section 34 does not by itself create any specific offence, whereas Section 149 does so;

(ii) Some active participation, especially in crime involving physical violence, is necessary under Section 34, but Section 149 does not require it and the liability arises by reason of mere membership of the unlawful assembly with a common object and there may be no active participation at all in preparation and commission of the crime;

(iii) Section 34 speaks of common intention, but Section 149 contemplates common object which is undoubtedly wider in its scope and amplitude than intention; and

(iv) Section 34 does not fix a minimum number of persons who must share the common intention, whereas Section 149 requires that there must be at least five persons who must have the same common object. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : JT 2010 (8) 319 : 2010 (8) Scale 27 : 2010 (4) Crimes 136 (SC).

[7580] ● Charge under Section 149—Conviction with aid of Section 34.—There is no bar in law on conviction of the accused with the aid of Section 34, IPC in place of Section 149 IPC of evidence exists on record to show that such accused shared common intention to commit the crime and no injustice a prejudice is caused. Abdul Sayeed v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 10 SCC 259 : 2010 (4) Crimes 86 (SC).

[7581] ● Vicarious liability under Section 134, IPC when arises.—The vicarious or constructive liability under Section 34, IPC arises when two conditions are fulfilled i.e. the mental element or the intention to commit the act conjointly with another or others; and the other is the actual participant in one form or the other in commission of act. Virendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2010) 8 SCC 407 : 2010 (4) Crimes 136 (SC).

COMMON OBJECT

[7582-83] ● Common object.—[Note:—In cases in which several accused are tried together at one trial under section 147 and under section 302/149 for the offences of rioting and murder, and the charge under these sections fails against some of them by reason of a doubt as to their identity, if the number of the remaining accused falls below five as a result of the acquittal of the others, the charge under sections 147 and 149/302 or for any lesser offence with the use of Section 149 can yet be sustained, if it is established that they formed an unlawful assembly of five or more persons together with some persons unknown or unidentified, and that those remaining accused must be taken to have known that the offence was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. In such a case, the conviction of less than five person under section 143 or 147 or 149 is not illegal, merely, because their number is less than five. However, the above principle has no application in cases in which the charge and the evidence led is that, the unlawful assembly was constituted by certain specified known persons only, and by none others, and the charge fails against some of them, not because of any doubt as to their identity, but because it is not clearly established that they were members of the assembly. In such cases, if upon the acquittal of some of the accused, the number of the remaining accused falls below five, the charge under Sections 143, 147 and 149 necessarily fails against the remaining accused also, and it is an illegality if they are convicted under these sections or any of them.

In such cases, however, the question still remains, whether the remaining accused could be convicted with the use of Section 34 for murder or any other lesser offence which has been committed but as to which there is no clear evidence as to who dealt the fatal blows and caused the fatal injuries. The question may arise in two ways, (a) when some of the accused charged under Sections 147 and 149 are acquitted of those charges in the Sessions Court itself, or (b) when the Sessions Court has convicted five or more accused on the charge under section 149/302 or 149/326, but the High Court acquits some of them, with the result that the number of the remaining convicted accused falls below five. In either case the principle is the same, and after putting aside the question whether those remaining accused were members of an unlawful assembly, the Court is required to examine the facts and circumstances of the case before it for the purpose of determining its nature, that is, whether it is or is not such as to fulfil the conditions of Section 34, though the conditions of Section 149 have failed. In other words, the question which has to be determined is whether, though the ingredient of 'common unlawful object' shared by at least five persons has failed to be established, it has or has not been established that the fatal injuries were caused by one or more of the remaining accused, and that with a common intention they all participated in the commission of the offence.

If on the examination of the facts of the case, the Court finds them to be of such a nature, that either of the two elements of Section 34, namely, common intention or participation in action, is absent, then, the remaining accused whose number has fallen below five have to be acquitted not only under section 149 but also under section 34. In such a case, conviction under section 34 for murder or even for any minor offence is an illegality, not because of any defect in procedure; but because the very element of the offence of which the accused are being tried has not been established. All that the Court has to do in such a case is to sort out and scrutinize the evidence against each accused separately for the purpose of finding whether it is sufficient to establish that he has committed the murder or any lesser offence with his own hands; if he has, he can be convicted of such offence only, and if he has not, he has to be altogether acquitted.

However, even in a case in which the Court finds that the facts proved in the case are of such a nature that Section 34 can be applied against the remaining accused, or that any one or more of the accused, whether they be those who have been acquitted of the charge under section 149 or those who remain after the others are acquitted of that charge, has committed the murder or any lesser offence with his own hands, the matter does not rest just there, and the Court cannot straightaway proceed to record an order or conviction. The question still remains, whether the charge was properly framed and the accused had a fair trial, that is, whether alternatively to the charge under section 149, each accused has also been charged under section 34 and under the specific offence as to which his guilt has been established, or even when there has been an omission in the charge, the accused have received a clear notice of the accusation against him. It follows that, when a charge under section 149 fails, before the Court can convict any of the accused with the aid of Section 34, both the following conditions must exist, (a) that the case must be of such a nature that the elements of Section 34 are clearly established, and (b) that the charge gives to the accused a clear notice that the accusation against him is that, he has participated in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention of all. If both these conditions are satisfied, there is no difficulty, and it is open to the Court to convict the remaining accused under section 34, whether the other accused have been acquitted by the trial Court itself, or whether they have been acquitted by the High Court in appeal after setting aside their conviction by the trial Court. However, even when a contravention of Section 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code has occurred, and an accused has been convicted of an offence under section 34 without proper charge in respect of that offence having been framed, such omission does not vitiate the trial straightaway. The Court has to consider whether, as a result of the omission, the accused has been deprived of a substantially fair trial. The test for determining this question has been laid down in Sections 225, 232, 535 and 537 of the CrPC and it is this—was the accused misled and prejudiced in this defence as a result of such omission or whether in spite of such omission the accused had otherwise received proper and clear notice of the accusation against him and had not in any way been misled in his defence by such omissions. If the appellate Court is satisfied that such omission has in fact prejudiced the accused, the conviction under section 34 has to be set aside, even though on the evidence on record the elements of Section 34 are clearly established, and the case has to be remanded for a re-trial according to law after framing proper charges against the accused. On the other hand, if the appellants are unable to satisfy the Court, that the omission has occasioned any prejudice to them in their defence, the conviction under section 34 will be sustained and the irregularity in the charge will be treated as having been cured by Section 537, CrPC (Now Section 464). Conviction of less than five persons on a charge under section 143 or 147 or 149 is justified, when it is certain that at least five persons composed the unlawful assembly, and the uncertainty is only as to the identity of some of its members.]

Before Section 149 can apply, the Court must find with a certainty that at least five persons were present at the place of the offence who shared the common unlawful object. That, however, is not to say that five persons must always be convicted before the application of Section 149 is invited. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the total number of persons who being present at the place of the occurrence shared a common unlawful object was unquestionably at least five if not more then even when as result of the acquittal of some of the accused, by reason of their identity not having been established, the number of the accused who are left falls below five, their conviction under section 149 is definitely permissible. However, when the Court comes to such a conclusion, the judgment must clearly state it to be so, particularly in cases in which the offence of which the accused are charged is a grave one like murder and heavy sentences are imposed on the accused. When, however, the uncertainty is as to the very number of the persons who took part in an attack, and not merely as to their identity, and on an examination of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses the Court is of the view that there is a possibility; that the names of some of the accused were falsely included among the assailants for the purpose of swelling the number and bringing it to five, conviction of the remaining accused under section 143 or 147 or with the use of Section 149 is clearly unjustified. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 364 : 1953 CrLJ 1465 : 1953 SCA 709 : 1953 SCJ 532 : 1954 SCR 145 : 1953 MWN 642.

[7584] ● Murder—Common object—Conviction of three.—In the present case twenty-four accused were charged under section 302/149 for rioting and murder. The Sessions Court convicted eight of them and acquitted the rest. On appeal, the High Court acquitted five of them on the ground that their identity had not been established beyond doubt, but it came to a finding that eight persons were involved in the attack in the course of which the deceased had received the fatal injuries. On this finding the High Court confirmed the conviction of the remaining three convicted accused under section 302/149. On the facts of the case, the finding of the High Court was justified, and that being so, there was nothing illegal in the conviction of only three accused on the charge under section 302/149. Nar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 457 : 1954 CrLJ 1167 : 1955 SCR 238.

[7585] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object—Conviction of two under Sections 302 and 149, IPC.—Before Section 149 can be invoked, the Court must find with certainty that at least five persons shared the common unlawful object and were present. If the Court concludes that five persons were unquestionably present, conviction of less than five persons is legal, even though the rest are acquitted because their identity is in doubt. When, however, the uncertainty is not as to identity but as to the very number taking part in the offence committed, conviction of any one with the aid of Section 149 is illegal. For a conviction of less than five persons to be legal it is not necessary in every case that the charge should state that they "along with some persons unknown" committed the offence. When the prosecution case is that at least five named persons took part in the offence, the charge cannot possibly refer to "unknown person." In such a case there is nothing illegal if the Court convicts less than five persons with the aid of Section 149, provided on the facts of the case the Court concludes with positive certainty that five or more persons composed the unlawful assembly, but as a result of the evidence against some of the accused being of a doubtful nature and their identity not having been established, the Court gives them the benefit of that doubt and acquits them. In such a case it could not be contended, that conviction of less than five persons on the charge under section 149 is bad, either because their number is less than five, or because the charge does not refer to "unknown persons". In the present case, seven accused were charged under section 302/149. The Sessions Court found all of them guilty. On appeal, the High Court acquitted five of them because it felt a doubt as to their identity but confirmed the conviction of the remaining two accused under section 302/149. On the evidence on record the High Court had erred in giving the benefit of doubt to the five acquitted accused, but the acquittal had to be allowed to stand in the absence of any appeal by the State. However, such acquittal could not be of any assistance to the two accused, whose conviction had been confirmed on the charge under section 302/149, because, on the facts on record, there was no reason to interfere with the concurrent findings of both the Courts below, that seven persons had actually taken part in the offence. Marachalil Pakku v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 648 : 1954 CrLJ 1668.

State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 31 : 1954 CrLJ 323.

[7587] ● Unlawful assembly free fight common object.—Where there is a clash between rival groups, both sides can be convicted of rioting only when it is established, that from the start both sides intended to fight and were determined to have a trial of strength. Once such intention is established, it does not need to be determined who gave the first blow or which side began the fight.

On the other hand, if it is found that the members of one group had no intention to enter upon a fight and were peacefully employed before the fight began, they cannot be convicted of rioting or even of being members of an unlawful assembly, merely because they are proved to have resisted force by force, or because some members of the other party also received injuries during the ensuing fight. Gajanand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 695 : 1954 CrLJ 1746.

[7588] ● Unlawful assembly—Prosecution of common object.—In the present case it was proved that there was acute rivalry between two groups of Pandas who used to attend to the needs of pilgrims and receive their offerings. On the day of the incident men of group A were busy performing puja when men of group B came up and demanded a share of the offering. When this was refused, group B started an attack which developed into a free fight between the members of the two groups in course of which one man received incised wounds of which he died, and several others of both groups received injuries of varying nature. Members of both groups were separately tried and convicted of rioting under section 147, and further the accused in group A were also convicted under section 324/149, and the accused in group B were convicted under section 302/149. Their conviction cannot be sustained on either charge. So far as the charge under section 147 is concerned, it has been found by both the Courts below that they were peacefully employed before the fight commenced and were attacked when they resisted an unlawful demand. If they joined in the fight and caused injuries, that in itself could not make them guilty of rioting, and their plea that they did so in the course of giving resistance to an unprovoked attack on themselves had to be accepted. So far as the charge under section 149 was concerned, conviction under that section can be legal only when membership of an unlawful assembly is first established, and if a charge under section 143 or 147 fails, there cannot be conviction with the aid of Section 149. Since the accused were being acquitted of the charges under Sections 143 and 147, their conviction under section 324/149 also had to be set aside. Gajanand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 695 : 1954 CrLJ 1746.

[7589] ● Unlawful assembly—Sharing of common object.—Section 149 creates a specific offence, and a conviction on a charge under section 149 read with some other offence under the Code, can follow only upon conviction under section 143 or 147. If the charge of being a member of an unlawful assembly fails against any accused, by reason of absence of sufficient evidence to show that he shared that common unlawful object of the assembly, his conviction under section 149 for any offence committed by any other members of the assembly is illegal. In other words, conviction under section 143 or 147 is a condition precedent to conviction under section 149. Gajanand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 695 : 1954 CrLJ 1746.

[7590] ● Assembly lawful at inception— Common object.—An assembly which is lawful when it assembled, can subsequently become unlawful in its character by reason of the actions of its members, but before it can be held that such assembly, which was originally lawful became unlawful in its character at a later stage, the Court must be satisfied on the facts of the case that both the following conditions have been fulfilled, namely,

(a) that one or more members of that assembly subsequently did an unlawful act, or exhorted the others to do an unlawful act, and

(b) that the other members acquiesced in that unlawful act.

In the absence of evidence proving such acquiescence, the mere fact that one or more members of an assembly which was originally lawful, suddenly committed an offence is not in itself, enough to hold that the assembly subsequently became unlawful. There must in addition be something which shows, beyond doubt, the intention on part of the others to acquiesce in that offence.

In other words, for an offence under Section 143, previous concert is not necessary, as it is for an offence with the aid of Section 34, but what is necessary is a sharing of a common unlawful object, whether originally when the members assembled or at a later stage, and that can be proved either by evidence of participation in the commission of an offence or by proof of conduct establishing acquiescence in that offence. In the absence of evidence proving either active participation or passive acquiescence, the charge under section 143 must be held to have failed.

Held : An assembly lawful at its inception, becomes unlawful if one of its members call upon his companions to assault a man, and they rush at him and start pursuing him when he begins to run away. In such a case even if that man escapes unhurt, the pursuers are guilty of being members of unlawful assembly. Moti Das v. State of Bihar, AIR 1954 SC 657 : 1954 CrLJ 1708.

[7591] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Conditions to be satisfied.—For a conviction with the aid of Section 149 it is essential, that both the following conditions are satisfied:—

(a) it must be established that the accused was guilty either of rioting or being a member of an unlawful assembly, that is, he must be convicted either under section 147 or under section 143, and

(b) it must further be established, that the offence committed was such as he knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly.

If either of these two conditions is absent, the charge under section 149 must fail. Knowledge of the likelihood of the commission of the offence which has been committed can be gathered from the circumstances such as, (a) the nature of the assembly, (b) the weapons openly carried and used, (c) the conduct of the offenders, and (d) the shouts raised. If the established circumstances are not sufficient for concluding that the members knew it to be likely that one of them would commit the offence which has been committed, constructive liability under section 149 for the commission of that offence cannot be attached to the other members. Gajanand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 695 : 1954 CrLJ 1746.

[7592] ● Fight between rival groups—Common object.—In the present case there was a fight between rival groups of Pandas and a member of one group received incised wound and died and other members received injuries of various descriptions which could be caused by lathis. The accused who all belonged to the opposite group were charged and convicted under Sections 302/149 and 325/149. In view of the fact that members of both groups were openly armed only with lathis and it was possible, that the accused may not have known that one of them was armed with a knife which he was likely to use in the fight, conviction under section 302/149 could not be sustained. Conviction under section 325/149 was confirmed. Gajanand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 695 : 1954 CrLJ 1746.

[7593] ● Unlawful assembly—Prosecution of common object.—Section 149 creates a specific offence and declares that if a person is proved to be a member of an unlawful assembly, he shall be liable for any offence committed by any other member of that assembly provided that offence is such as he knows to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly.

The constructive liability under section 149 can arise only against a man proved to have been a member of an unlawful assembly, and if any accused is given the benefit of doubt, and is acquitted on the charge under section 143 or 147, his conviction with the aid of Section 149 for an offence committed by another member of that assembly is illegal.

It cannot be contended, that Section 149 does not create, a specific offence and does not provide any punishment for that offence. Merely because the section prescribes a punishment which is not uniform but is made dependant upon the punishment prescribed for the offence committed by another member of the assembly it cannot be said that the section does not prescribe any punishment. Nanak Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 274 : 1955 CrLJ 721.

[7594] ● Common unlawful object of attacking deceased.—In the present case, five accused, A, B, C, D, and E, were charged under section 302. It was established that A gave a blow which caused only a grievous injury, and that B and C each gave a blow which was necessarily fatal. As to D and E, they were acquitted on the ground that though they were present they did not participate in the attack, and no overt act was proved against them which could show that they shared with A, B and C the common unlawful object of attacking the deceased. It was not the prosecution case that any person other than the five accused took part in the attack. Under these circumstances, the prosecution had failed to prove that there was an unlawful assembly of five persons and A could not be convicted under section 302/149. He could be convicted only under section 326 for his own act. Pandurang, Tukia and Bhilia v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572 : 1955 SCA 228 : 1955 SCJ 106 : 1955 SCR 1083 : 1955 AWR (Sup) 34 : 1955 MWN 161.

[7595] ● Unlawful assembly—Mere presence of person at scene of offence.—Mere presence of a person at the scene of offence does not make him a member of an unlawful assembly. Even when a grave act of rioting takes place, persons proved to have been present can be convicted either under section 147 or with the aid of Section 149 only when it is further proved that they did something or omitted to do something which would show that they shared the common object to commit an offence with those who had actively participated in the riot.

When feelings are running high, and the evidence on record is only to the effect that a man was seen at the place of the occurrence armed with a weapon, that evidence has to be carefully scrutinized in order to eliminate the possibility of a false or mistaken implication, and conviction can be sustained only when the Court is satisfied beyond doubt that the man was not a mere spectator. Otherwise, it may happen that a man who has not joined an unlawful assembly may get falsely or mistakenly branded as an offender, merely because of his presence at the scene of occurrence. Baladin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 181 : 1956 CrLJ 345.

[7596] ● Common object of unlawful assembly.—Section 149 is not confined to offences committed in the actual prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, and applies equally to offences committed by any one of its members which are such as the members knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. If use of violence is implicit in the object of an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons, and in the course of an attack by that assembly upon persons employed in their lawful avocations, murder is actually committed, then every member of that assembly is guilty under section 149/302 even though the common object could not be placed as high as murder, provided on the facts and circumstances of that case it can be held that the members of that assembly knew that murder was a likely consequence of the armed raid if resistance was encountered, and that the implements carried by the raiders would be used with deadly effect if occasion arose.

In such circumstances it is not a good defence to a charge under section 149/302, that the accused did not know the exact nature of the weapon carried by each attacker, and it is enough for the purpose of the application of Section 149 that the circumstances of the case are such as to justify the inference that the members of that assembly had the knowledge, that in case of resistance, it was likely that the implements carried by the members of that assembly would be used for overpowering and killing any man offering resistance.

In the present case, the accused were the members of an armed band which attacked a police-station with deadly weapons for the purpose of rescuing their comrades who had been previously arrested and placed in a lock-up. In the course of the attack the police-station was broken open and two police constables who resisted the attack were killed. Even though it was found that the common object of the assembly was not murder and was only to rescue by use of force, persons lawfully placed in the police lock-up, conviction of the accused who were proved to have taken part in the armed raid for the offence of murder under section 149/302 was fully justified. Even assuming that murder was not the common object, use of violence was implicit in the object of forcible rescue. Armed mobs which go and attack a police-station with implements strong enough to break down police resistance, must be presumed to know that they would encounter resistance, and that those implements would be used with deadly effect in putting down that resistance, and if murder is in fact committed in course of the attack, each accused proved to have been a member of the raiding party is guilty under section 149/302. K.C. Mathew v. State of Trav. Cochin, AIR 1956 SC 241 : 1956 CrLJ 444 : 1956 SCA 175.

[7597] ● Common unlawful object—Sharing of.—In the present case, it was proved that a violent mob assembled before a house in a village, and then having broken into that house subjected its inmates to a murderous attack in course of which as many as six persons were killed either inside the house or after being dragged outside it, and then the house was set fire to and the dead bodies were removed to a remote place. On these facts, a large number of accused were jointly tried of the offences of rioting and murder. On the facts proved in the case, conviction under section 147 or under section 149/302 could be sustained only in respect of those accused who were seen to have broken into the house or attacked the inmates, or dragged them outside, or to have removed the dead bodies, and of those accused who were seen inciting others to these activities. As to all other accused who had not been seen by any reliable witness in any riotous activity or in inciting others to such activities, and as to whom there was only evidence of a general character to the effect that they were seen among the mob armed with weapons, so that no specific conduct indicative of their intention to share the common unlawful object was established, all such person had to be given the benefit of doubt and had to be acquitted of both the said charges, because the possibility remained that they might have been mere spectators who got mixed up in the crowd. Baladin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 181 : 1956 CrLJ 345.

[7598] ● Common object—Developing of after people gather on spot.—Common object can develop after people gather on a spot on hearing an uproar at night. In such circumstances, if there is sufficient evidence on record for the Court to deduce that an unlawful object developed after the people got there, and that more than five persons shared it, and that persons who had come there quite lawfully in the first instance suddenly developed an intention to beat up the members of the opposite faction found there, and that five persons or more who shared the object joined in the beating; then each of those persons becomes the member of an unlawful assembly.

In other words, if persons come together at a spot on hearing a disturbance, law demands that they must be presumed to have gone there lawfully for some lawful purpose. and this is so even if they go armed. The presumption of innocence ceases only when circumstances proved by the prosecution show that the original innocent object changed at a later stage.

Apprehension of thieves or marauders, and defence of person and property, are lawful objects, and they require the carrying of arms, because private defence of person or property can hardly be effective with empty hands. But if it is established that thereafter an unlawful object suddenly developed on the spot, and some five or more of the persons who had so gathered started beating up some innocent man found on the spot, or even a thief for that matter, and thus shared a common object which was unlawful, then every one of such persons becomes a member of an unlawful assembly. This is so because a charge of unlawful assemblage, unlike a charge under section 34, does not require any pre-concert or a prior meeting of the minds.

In principle, there is no difference whatsoever between a case like this, and a case in which the object is from the beginning unlawful. The only difference between the two kinds of cases lies only in the approach which is required of the Court, and the greater degree of care demanded in the scrutiny of the evidence, lest an innocent man who came on the scene with some lawful object, and who did not participate in the attack, may become implicated, merely on the strength of his having been seen by witnesses at the time when the incident occurred. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 : 1956 CrLJ 923 : 1956 SCJ 503 : 1956 SCA 781 : 1956 SCR 288 : 1956 AWR (Sup) 83 : 1956 ALT 583.

[7599] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of.—When a number of persons who are armed with weapons, join in an attack after suddenly gathering at the scene of occurrence, it may be that the original object of those persons when they first gathered there may have been innocent. But the original innocent object ceases to be of any importance in considering the guilt of the accused, once it is established that they joined in the attack with the weapons in their hands. Participation in a murderous attack, particularly after seeing that an injured man has fallen on the ground, indicates beyond doubt a unity and continuity of an unlawful purpose even though it may have suddenly developed on the spot without any premeditation or any previous plan. In such a case it is the unity in a suddenly developed unlawful purpose which makes all the participating members of an unlawful assembly, and it is entirely immaterial whether they joined in the attack of their own accord or at the instigation from someone. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 : 1956 CrLJ 923 : 1956 SCJ 503.

[7600] ● Murder—Common object of unlawful assembly.—If persons armed with lathis join and continue in the attack as a result of which death is caused, unlawful assembly is proved, but the question that yet remains is whether the accused are all liable for murder under section 302/149 or only under section 325/149. That question is not answered merely by showing that the common object of all of them was not murder, because even assuming it to be so, the case may yet fall under the second part of Section 149. When a number of persons join in an attack in which arms are used, each one of them must be presumed to know that any one of them is likely to deal a fatal blow, or at least that the cumulative effect of a number of blows inflicted with lathis is likely to cause death from shock. Any man of reasonable intelligence must know that in a joint attack with weapons, some blow might become fatal or that the victim might succumb to the rain of blows he received. Therefore, in such cases each one of the attackers must be held to have had the knowledge that death was a likely result of the joint attack, and if the attack in fact ends in death of the victim, each must be convicted under section 302/149 and not only under section 325/149. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 : 1956 CrLJ 923 : 1956 SCJ 503.

[7601] ● Dispute between two rival factions—Common object of unlawful assembly.—In the present case the prosecution case was that, there was a dispute in a village between two rival factions over a field. One P was returning to his village from the fields and at that time A and B who belonged to the opposite faction ran into him. A fired a gun at P and the shots hit him on his legs, and then B hit him with a sword. Hearing the sound of the gun-fire a large crowd which included members of both factions gathered on the spot, and then three more persons who all belonged to P's party were attacked with lathis and were so beaten, that they all died. As a result, the accused who were proved to be among the attackers were all charged under section 302/149 and put up at a joint trial. The Sessions Judge convicted them under section 325/149. The accused as well as the State appealed against this order and the High Court allowed the appeal, made by the State and altered the conviction of all the accused to one under section 302/149. Under the above circumstances conviction under section 302/149 had to be sustained. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 : (1956) SCC 355 : 1956 CrLJ 923.

[7602] ● Offence committing of in prosecutions of common object of assembly.—Constructive liability under section 149 for an offence committed by another member of an unlawful assembly can arise either when that offence is committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly or when the offence committed is such as the other members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Mizaji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 572 : 1959 CrLJ 777 : 1959 SCJ 554.

[7604] ● Committal of offence in prosecution of common object of unlawful assembly.—An offence committed in prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly would generally also be an offence which the parties knew to be likely to be committed in such prosecution, that is an offence falling under the first part of Section 149 would generally if not always, fall within the second part of that section. But the converse of that proposition is not true, and there are cases which come within the second part but which will not fall within the first. In every case, therefore, it is an issue whether the offence committed falls under the first part or the second part of Section 149 or does not fall under either part. When people go armed with lethal weapons to take possession of land, which is in possession of others, they must be assumed to have knowledge that they would be opposed, and the extent to which they were prepared to go to accomplish their common object would depend upon their conduct as a whole. Mizaji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 572 : 1959 CrLJ 777 : 1959 SCJ 554.

[7605] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of taking forcible possession of land.—In the present case, the accused who were five in number had gone to a field with the common object of getting forcible possession of that field from the opposite party who were in its legal possession. While they were ploughing the field, the opposite party came up and protested. Thereupon all the accused gathered together and told the complainants 'to go away, otherwise they would be finished'. On their refusing to go, T asked M to fire at them and M took out a pistol from the fold of his dhoti and fired it as a result of which one R was fatally injured. All the five accused were charged and convicted under section 302 read with Section 149. The question for decision was, whether the three other accused besides T could be said to have the knowledge that murder was likely to be committed by M in prosecution of the common object of the assembly which was to take forcible possession of the land. From the facts of the case and the conduct of the accused which was that they went to the filed in the company of T and M armed with lathis, that they surrounded the party of the deceased and used threats, it had to be held that they were prepared to take forcible possession of the field at any cost, and that the murder committed was immediately connected with the common object of the assembly and that they at least knew that murder was likely to be committed to accomplish the common object of obtaining forcible possession. Conviction of all the accused under section 302/149 was confirmed. Mizaji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 572 : 1959 CrLJ 777 : 1959 SCJ 534.

[7606] ● Committal of offence in prosecution of common object of assembly—Conditions to be satisfied.—Section 149 of the Code is declaratory of the vicarious liability of the members of an unlawful assembly for an offence committed by any one or more of them, provided that the conditions laid down in the section are satisfied, namely, (a) that such offence is committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, or (b) that the offence is such as the other members knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Thus, when the offence committed by a member of an unlawful assembly is not one which is committed in the very prosecution of its common object, the constructive liability for its commission attaches to the other members only if the offence is of such a nature that the knowledge of the likelihood of its commission can be legitimately attributed to them, and not otherwise. However, though members of an unlawful assembly may have a community of object it may be up to a certain point only and beyond that point they may differ in the objects and in the same way the knowledge possessed by each member of what is likely to be committed by any other member in prosecution of their common object may vary not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object. As a consequence of this, the effect of Section 149 may be different on different members of the same unlawful assembly. Shambhu Nath Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1960 SC 725 : 1960 CrLJ 1144.

[7607] ● Unlawful assembly common object to cause grievous hurt.—Section 149 cannot be so construed as laying down that the constructive liability of a member of an unlawful assembly must, in every case, be necessarily for the very same offence of which the principal offender is convicted, an that it depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case what knowledge can properly be attributed to each member for the purpose of determining his liability under section 149. If it is found, that the other members could not have known that the offence committed by one of them was likely to be committed, then even when the principal offender is convicted of one offence, they can be convicted under section 149 only of such minor offence as they can be taken to have known to be likely to be committed. The offence of grievous hurt under section 326 is a minor offence in relation to the offence of murder under section 302, and if on the facts of the case it could not be said, that the other members could have known, that murder was likely to be committed by one of them in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, but those facts are such, that they must be taken to have known that grievous hurt was likely to be committed, it is open to the Court to convict the other members of the unlawful assembly under section 326/149 even when the principal offender is convicted under section 302, though there is no evidence that any grievous hurt was caused by any of them. In the present case, it was established that the accused who were armed with diverse weapons such as bhallas, garasas and lathis had gone up to a man working in his field and that one of them had fired several shots which killed him on the spot. On these facts the principal offender was convicted under section 302 and companions were convicted under section 326/149. The trial Judge was of the view that because of the diverse weapons, which the others were carrying they must have known that grievous hurt was likely to be caused, though they might not have known that their leader was likely to use the gun which he was carrying. On these facts conviction of the other members under section 326/149 was entirely legal, and its legality could not be questioned merely because no member of the assembly was proved to have caused any grievous hurt. There is nothing in the language of Section 149 to prevent the Court from convicting the others for a minor offence of which, on the facts of the case, knowledge could properly be attributed to them, even when the offence committed by the principal offender is a graver one. Shambhu Nath Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1960 SC 725 : 1960 CrLJ 1144.

[7608] ● More than five persons constituting unlawful assembly—Identity of four established.—In the present case, there was a definite and clear finding by the High Court that the number of persons who constituted the unlawful assembly was more than five, that their common object was of killing the deceased, and that the murder was committed by one or more of them in prosecution of that common object. However, what had happened was that though twelve accused had been originally charged under section 302/149, seven of them were acquitted in the Sessions Court and only five were convicted and then in appeal the High Court acquitted one more, so that only four convicted accused remained. On its findings as above, the High Court confirmed their conviction under section 302/149. There was ample evidence on record to establish, that the findings of the High Court were entirely correct. Once it was established that the unlawful assembly consisted of five or more persons that the four convicted accused were the members of that assembly and that the murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, Section 149 clearly applied to the case and conviction for murder with the application of Section 149 could not be contended to be bad in law.

Whether such a finding can be arrived at or not is a question of fact which has to be determined in each case on the evidence given therein. But there is nothing in law to prevent such a finding, and it cannot be argued as though it were a matter of law that it is not at all open to the High Court to arrive at such a finding. In such a case, it cannot be said, that such a finding amounts to making out a new case, merely because of the omission in the charge to state that some persons unknown were members of the assembly. But even assuming that such an omission is an irregularity, it will not invalidate the finding as a matter of law in the absence of any prejudice to the convicted accused as a result of such omission. Convictions under section 149/302 and the sentences of death were upheld. Bhardwad Mepa Dana v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 289 : 1960 CrLJ 424.

[7609] ● Unlawful assembly—Conviction of accused even when total number less than five.—The essential question in a case under Section 149 is, whether there was an unlawful assembly as defined in Section 141 of five or more persons. The identity of the persons comprising that assembly is a matter relating only to the determination of the guilt of the individual accused; it has nothing to do with the question of the applicability of Section 149. Even when by reason of the lack of evidence, as to identity some accused are acquitted and the number of the remaining accused falls below five, Sections 143, 147 and 149 still apply, if upon the evidence in the case the Court is able to hold that the remaining accused were members of an unlawful assembly of five or more persons, be they known or unknown, identified or unidentified. In other words, the test for the applicability of Section 149 is not whether the number of persons convicted is at least five, but whether at least five persons comprised the unlawful assembly and shared the common unlawful object, and whether the accused before the Court, whatever their number, were definitely its members. If on the evidence in the case the Court can find with certainty, that this test is satisfied, the individual accused who are found to be members of such assembly can be convicted under section 149 even when the total number of such accused is less than five. Bhardwad Mepa Dana v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 289 : 1960 CrLJ 424 : (1960) 2 SCR 172.

[7610] ● Right of private defence of property against criminal trespass.—The accused who were armed with lathis and hatchets took two loaded carts through that field for the purpose of reaching a public passage which ran on the other side of the field. When the carts had almost crossed the filed, H protested against the trespass which damaged his crops. Thereupon there was a fight in the course of which the accused gave severe blows to H and his companions. H received seven injuries, including one incised wound on the head and one contused bone-deep wound on the head. As a result of these injuries H died.

In the appeal it was contended that the criminal trespass by the accused had come to an end when the trespassers indicated their intention to cease the trespass and not to repeat their action in the future, that thereafter no common unlawful object remained and hence the assembly ceased to be unlawful, and that as the assembly had ceased to be unlawful, Section 149 could not be applied to any act of the accused done thereafter, and each person would be liable only for his own acts, and hence the conviction with the aid of Section 149 for the offence under section 302 and other offences was bad in law. So long as the accused and their carts were in the field of H, the criminal trespass committed by them was continuing, whatever be the spot where they were at the time when H stopped them. That being so, H had the right to prevent the accused from proceeding towards the public passage, however short the distance which remained to be covered might be. In such a case, it could not be said that the trespass had come to an end, even though it be assumed that the defence put up by the accused was true, namely, that they had requested H to be allowed to go across the short remaining distance in the field and had undertaken not to repeat the trespass. Hukam Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 1541 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 711.

[7611] ● Intention to use violence in prosecution of common object.—In such a case, if H insisted upon their going back, the accused were bound to abide by his directions, and their refusal to do so clearly indicated the frame of their minds. The difficult position, in which the accused found themselves was of their own creation, and it did not give them any right to insist that they must continue the criminal trespass. Such insistence amounted to continuation of the criminal trespass, and it could not be said that the trespass had ceased. That being so, the unlawful assembly continued to be unlawful and all the members of that assembly were liable under section 149 for the offence committed by any one of them if it was such as they knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of their common unlawful object.

When several persons armed with lethal weapons, commit criminal trespass upon the land of another, it must be held that they had the common object of using those weapons in case they were thwarted or resisted in the achievement of their object; that they were prepared to use violence in prosecution of that common object, and that they knew that it was likely that in the use of such violence someone resisting the trespass may be attacked by one of them and may be so injured as to die of the injuries caused to him. Where violence is used in prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, and an assaulted person dies as a result of the injuries inflicted upon him, the offence committed on account of the death caused by the concerted acts of the several accused is the offence of murder. In the present case, it had been rightly held by the High Court that the common object of the accused was to force their way through the field of H and to use force if resistance was offered, even to the extent of causing death, and that the offence made out by causing the death of H was murder committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. Hukam Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 1541 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 711.

[7612] ● Unlawful assembly—Constitution of.—In a case in which more than five persons are charged under section 149, even when some of the accused are acquitted, the remaining accused can be legally convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly, if it is clearly established that the actual number of the members in the party of the assailants was more than five, even though the number of the remaining accused who are convicted is less than five.

It is only when the number of the assailants is definite, and all of them are named, and the number of persons proved to have taken part in the incident is less than five, that it cannot be held that the assailants' party must have consisted of five or more persons. In such a case, the acquittal of some of the named persons must mean, that they were not in the incident. The fact, that they were named, excludes the possibility of other persons to be in the assailants' party, especially when there be no occasion to think that the witnesses naming all the accused could have committed mistakes in recognising them. The witnesses were all from one village and the accused were from the other villages. All the witnesses had stated that the number of the assailants' party was thirteen though some of them had not been able to name all the assailants and hence ten of them had been acquitted giving them the benefit of doubt. In the circumstances, the Courts below were justified in the conclusion that the assailants' party constituted an unlawful assembly of more than five persons, that the three accused who were clearly identified were members of an unlawful assembly, and that they were constructively liable of the offence under section 302/149. Conviction was upheld and the appeal was dismissed. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1961 SC 1787 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 853.

[7613] ● Unlawful assembly—Essential ingredient of.—Section 149 prescribes for constructive criminal liability of all the members of an unlawful assembly, for an offence committed by any member of that assembly which is committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly or is such as the other members knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Under Section 141 an unlawful assembly is born, only where five or more persons compose that assembly with one of the common unlawful objects mentioned in that section. Thus, it is an essential ingredient of Section 149 that the offence must have been committed by any member of an unlawful assembly, and it is an essential condition of an unlawful assembly that its membership must be five or more. That being so, where the charge is that only the five persons named therein constituted the unlawful assembly, as soon as any one or more of the five named persons are acquitted, the assembly must be deemed to have been composed of less than five persons, and in that case Section 149 cannot apply. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7614] ● Unlawful assembly—Applicability of Section 149, IPC.—When considering the applicability of Section 149, one has to bear in mind the several classes of cases which come before the Criminal Courts for their decision :

(1) The first class of such cases is where more than five persons are named in the charge as composing the unlawful assembly. In such a case, if the evidence proves the charge against five or more of them, it is a clear case where Section 149 can be invoked.

(2) The second class of such cases is where the charge is that the persons included in the charge along with others named in the charge constituted the unlawful assembly, and that the other persons so named are not available for trial for any such reason that they cannot be traced or are absconding. In such a case, if the evidence shows that the persons before the Court together with the others who are not before the Court constituted an unlawful assembly of five or more persons, Section 149 becomes applicable even though the number of the accused before the Court is less than five.

(3) The third class of such cases is where the prosecution case, is that, the accused before the Court together with other persons not identified and so not named composed the unlawful assembly. In such a case, if the evidence shows that the persons before the Court along with unidentified and unnamed other assailants—composed the unlawful assembly of five or more persons, the accused before the Court can be convicted under section 149 even though they number less than five.

(4) The fourth class of such cases is where the prosecution case is that, the unlawful assembly was constituted by the five or more persons named in the charge. In such a case, if the evidence is confined only to the persons named in the charge, and on some of them being acquitted, less than five persons are left before the Court, Section 149 cannot be invoked against them. However, even in such cases, it is possible that, though the charge names only certain persons, the evidence may show that the unlawful assembly consisted of the persons named in the charge as well as some other persons who were not identified and named. In such a case, the trial Court or even the High Court in appeal may be able to come to the conclusion that even after leaving out the accused who are acquitted, the accused who remain along with the others who have not been identified composed an unlawful assembly of five or more persons, in that case, the acquittal of one or more of the accused before the Court will not affect the validity of the charge under section 149, and the remaining accused can be convicted under that section.

It is true that in the last category of case, the Court will have to be very careful before reaching the conclusion that Section 149 applies. But in such a case there is no legal bar which prevents the Court from reaching such a conclusion. The failure to refer in the charge to the other members of the unlawful assembly, who are unnamed and unidentified may conceivably raise the point, as to whether prejudice would be caused to the persons before the Court, by reason of the fact, that the charge did not indicate that the unnamed persons also were members of the unlawful assembly. But apart from the question of prejudice, which has to be carefully considered, there is no legal bar preventing the Court from holding that, though the charge specified only the named persons, the unlawful assembly in fact consisted of the accused remaining after the acquittal of one or more of them, along with the other persons who have not been named and identified. This is the true legal position in respect of the several categories of cases which may fall to be tried when the charge framed is under section 149 of the Penal Code.

It cannot be contended that the prosecution case must always be confined to the charge framed against the accused, and that when the charge is confined to certain named persons, the Court would be making out a new case of unlawful assembly if it holds that it consisted of the persons before the Court together with other unnamed and unidentified persons. In such a case, the finding of the Court is not about the existence of a new assembly, but about the same assembly as was referred to in the charge, and the only difference is that while according to the charge all the members of that assembly were known, the evidence led before the Court has established that other unnamed and unidentified persons were also the members of that unlawful assembly. It is true, that where the charge specifically names only certain persons as having composed the unlawful assembly, the Court would have carefully to examine the evidence before coming to the conclusion that persons other than those named in the charge were also the members of that assembly, but if that fact is clearly established by the evidence, there is no legal bar which prevents the Court from reaching that conclusion. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7615] ● Constructive criminal liability—Existence of common intention.—In the present case, five persons, M, J, D, P and S were charged under section 302 of the Penal Code read with Section 149. No other persons except the five accused was referred to in the charge as composing the unlawful assembly and there was no evidence that any other person was a member of that assembly.

Two of the accused, P and S were acquitted, but the remaining accused were convicted, M and J under section 302/149 and D under section 302 substantive.

The Court held that in the circumstances conviction of M & J under section 302/149 could not be sustained and had to be set aside.

The question then remained, whether M and J could be convicted on the facts of the case under section 302/34.

Like Section 149, Section 34 also deals with cases of constructive criminal liability. The essential constituent of the constructive criminal liability under section 34 is the existence of the common intention of the several persons who do a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention of all of them. If it can be shown by the evidence that all the accused persons were animated by the common intention to commit an offence, and have taken part in the commission of that offence, every one of them is constructively liable for the criminal act done by any one of them. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7616] ● Common intention different from common object.—Just as the combination of persons, sharing the same common object is one of the features of an unlawful assembly, so the existence of a combination of persons sharing the same common intention is one of the features of Section 34. In some ways the two sections are similar and in some cases they may overlap. But nevertheless, the common intention which is the basis of Section 34 is different from the common object which is the basis of an unlawful assembly. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7617] ● Common intention denotes action in concert.—Common intention denotes action in concert and necessarily postulates the existence of a pre-arranged plan and that must mean a prior meeting of the minds. Further, for the application of Section 34 there must be the element of participation in action on the part of all the accused persons. The acts done by each may be different and may vary in their character but they must all be actuated by the same common intention. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7618] ● Common intention—Implies pre-arranged plan.—The common intention required by Section 34 is not the same intention or similar intention. The common intention within the meaning of Section 34 implies a prearranged plan, and application of Section 34 can be involved only when it is proved that the criminal act was done in concert pursuant to the pre-arranged plan. The inference of common intention should never be reached unless it is a necessary inference deducible from the circumstances of the case. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7619] ● Common intention of totally assaulting victim.—In the present case it was proved that the appellants shared with D the actual assailant the common intention of fatally assaulting the victim. They were armed with lathis and were laying in wait hidden behind the trees. As soon as he came, they all rushed on him and chased him. This conduct clearly indicated the existence of a common intention. After chasing the victim, they surrounded him and then D gave the fatal blows. Thereafter, the assailants ran away together. All these facts established the common intention to kill by which all of them were actuated. On these facts the conviction of the appellants was altered from one under section 302 read with Section 149 to conviction under section 302 read with Section 34, and the sentence of imprisonment for life passed by the High Court was confirmed. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 174 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 100.

[7620] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object.—In the present case seven accused persons were charged with the offence under section 302 read with Section 149, Penal Code. The Sessions Court acquitted four of the accused, and convicted the other three accused under section 304 read with Section 149. On appeal, the High Court confirmed the conviction of all the three accused but altered it to one under section 326 read with Section 149.

Both the Courts below had rejected the defence version, that the party of the victim were the aggressors. In the appeal, the findings of the Courts below were not challenged, but it was contended that the clear case of the prosecution was against seven named persons and four of them having been acquitted, the conviction of the remaining three accused persons with the aid of Section 149 was illegal, and that as the three accused had been acquitted of the offence under section 302/149, none of them could be convicted under section 326/149, Penal Code, and that all that it was.

It is competent to a Court to come to the conclusion that there was an unlawful assembly of five or more persons even where less than five persons have been convicted by it,—

(a) if the charge states that apart from the persons named, several other unidentified persons were also members of the unlawful assembly whose common object was to commit an unlawful act, and the evidence led to prove this charge is accepted by the Court; or

(b) if the first information report and the evidence show such to be the case, even though the charge does not state so; or

(c) if, even though the charge and the prosecution witnesses have named only the acquitted and the convicted accused person, there is other evidence which clearly establishes the participation in the unlawful assembly of other persons besides those named in the charge:

Provided that in cases (b) and (c) no prejudice has resulted to the accused persons who have been convicted by reason of the omission to mention in the charge that the other unnamed persons had also participated in the offence. Ram Bilas Singh v. State of Bihar, (1964) 1 CrLJ 573 : (1964) 1 SCR 775.

[7621] ● Unlawful assembly—Committal of acts in furtherance of common object.—In the present case, only seven persons were named in the charge as having been the members of the unlawful assembly of whom one person had fired the fatal shot which caused death. Some of the witnesses in the case had vaguely stated that 40 or 50 persons took part in the incident including the 7 persons mentioned in the first information report and the charge-sheet, but the prosecution case throughout had been that only the seven named persons took part in the incident. In the circumstances, it was necessary for the High Court to arrive at a definite finding as to whether the evidence of some of the witnesses, that the unlawful assembly consisted of many more persons than the seven persons put up for trial was true and acceptable, or whether that evidence should be rejected in view of the fact that the first information report was that only seven persons were named therein had committed the offence. The High Court had also to consider the further question of prejudice by reason of the defect in the charge. Without arriving at any positive findings of the nature required, the High Court had proceeded on the assumption that there was an unlawful assembly of a large number of persons, of whom seven were put up for trial and of these seven persons four had been acquitted by the trial Court and three had been convicted, and in doing so, the High Court had acted in disregard of the settled law in this behalf. The High Court should have fully examined the evidence and come to a definite conclusion, as to whether there was an unlawful assembly consisting of five or more persons including the three accused convicted by the trial Court and other unidentified persons and should have stated its reasons for arriving at such a conclusion. It should then have ascertained the particular acts committed by any member or members of that assembly in furtherance of the common object, as also the question whether any of the appellants had participated in the incident. In the light of its findings on these matters, the High Court should then have proceeded to consider whether all or any of the appellants could be liable vicariously for all or any of the acts found to have been committed by the unlawful assembly or any member or members thereof other than those alleged to have been committed by the four accused persons whose acquittal had become final. All these questions were essential for the determination of the High Court. In the circumstances, the order of conviction passed by the High Court was set aside and the case is sent back to the High Court for deciding it afresh in the light of the directions contained in this judgment. Ram Bilas Singh v. State of Bihar, 1964 (1) CrLJ 573 : (1964) 1 SCR 775.

[7622] ● Object of assembly unlawful object.—In the present case, the accused were convicted of offences under Sections 304 and 336, Penal Code read with Section 149. The established facts in the case were that the accused were the tenants of certain fields in respect of which the Civil Court had made decrees in favour of certain persons and warrants had been issued for delivery of possession. When the party of the decree holders sought to execute those warrants, the accused attacked them with lethal weapons and caused the deaths of two of them and serious injuries to the others. The warrants had ceased to be executable under the law by reason of the provisions of Rules 24 and 25 of Order 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the decree holders were not aware of that fact. Relying on this fact, it was contended that the party of the decree holders were guilty of criminal trespass, and that the common object of the assembly constituted by the accused was to defend their own property against criminal trespass, and that as the object was lawful and the assembly was not an unlawful assembly as denied in Section 141, conviction with the aid of Section 149 was bad in law. Even though the warrants had ceased to be executable some time before the date of the incident, that did not make the act of entry upon the fields in the possession of the accused, criminal trespass as the dominant intention of the party of the decree holders was not to intimidate or insult or annoy the persons in possession of the fields. Their main intention was to execute the warrants. Therefore, it must be held that the object of the assembly was an unlawful object, namely, to resist by force the execution of the warrants and that the assembly was an unlawful assembly. That being so, conviction under section 149 was justified. Matri v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 986 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 57 : 1964 SCD 557.

[7623] ● Common object to Kill deceased.—In a case in which the accused are charged with the offence under section 302 read with Section 149, it is not necessary, for the purpose of establishing the common unlawful object of the assembly, to prove that the accused were lying in wait to kill the victim. Merely because the incident in the course of which the victims were severely beaten with lethal weapons had developed suddenly, it cannot be said that there was no common object to commit the offence. In the present case, it was clearly established that all the accused were armed with deadly weapons and had taken an active part in inflicting serious injuries on the deceased, that after coming up to the deceased one of them grasped the victim from behind and the others gave him blows on the head, and that even after he had fallen down, they continued to give him severe blows, and that when another person tried to rescue him, they rushed at him and conjointly used their weapons and thus gave to both the victims such serious injuries that they ended in their immediate death. In the circumstances, the object to kill the deceased was written large on the evidence, and conviction under section 302 read with Section 149 of the Penal Code was justified. Nihal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 26 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 106 : 1964 SCD 853 : 1965 1 SCJ 160.

[7624] ● Common unlawful object—Sharing of.—Where the whole group of persons who constituted the assembly were members of a hostile faction, and they had assembled together armed with various weapons with the common unlawful object to taking the lives of the members of the opposite faction, there is no scope for suggesting on behalf of any of the accused that he was only a passive bystander who was there without sharing the common unlawful object. In such a case, each member of the assembly would be guilty under section 302/149 without proof of actual active part taken by him in the killing. Masalti v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 202 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 226 : 1964 SCD 980.

[7625] ● Murder—Common intention—Sharing of.—The only question argued in this appeal is whether in view of the acquittal of Ramhans by the learned Sessions Judge, from which there had been no appeal by the State, was it open to the High Court to hold that the appellant was guilty of murder under section 302 read with Section 34 by finding on the evidence that Ramhans who shared a common intention with him, shot the deceased and attempted to murder Ramchandra. Ramhan's case, depended on the evidence laid there while the appellant's case had to be decided only on the evidence laid in it. The evidence laid in Ramhan's case and the decision arrived at on that evidence would be wholly irrelevant in considering the merits of the appellant's case. We are, therefore, of opinion that the judgment in Krishna Govinda Patil's case, AIR 1963 SC 1413, does not assist the appellant at all. On the other hand, we think that the judgments earlier referred to on which the High Court relied clearly, justify the view that in spite of the acquittal of a person in one case, it is open to the Court in another case to proceed on the basis, of course, if the evidence warrants it that the acquitted person was guilty of the offence of which he had been tried in the other case and to find in the latter case that the person tried in it was guilty of an offence under section 34 by virtue of having committed offence along with the acquitted person. There is nothing in principle to prevent this being done. The principle of Sambasivam's case, 1950 AC 458 has no application here because the two cases we are concerned with, are against two different persons, though for the commission of the same offence. Furthermore, as we have already said each case has to be decided on the evidence laid in it and this irrespective of any view of the same act that might have been taken on different evidence led in another case. Karan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1037 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 142 : 1965 SCD 338.

[7626] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Vicarious liability.—It is not the law, that in a case in which several accused persons are charged under section 302/149, some overt act must be proved against a person before he can be said to be a member of an unlawful assembly. What has to be proved against a person who is charged with the offence of being a member of an unlawful assembly is that he was one of the persons, constituting the unlawful assembly and entertained the common unlawful object of the assembly. The crucial question in such a case is whether the assembly consisting of five or more persons entertained a common unlawful object, and whether the accused was one of such assembly by intentionally joining it or continuing in it being aware of the facts which rendered the assembly an unlawful assembly. In determining this question, it becomes relevant to consider whether the assembly consisted only of persons who were aware of its common unlawful object and had intentionally joined it or whether the assembly also included some persons who were there without entertaining the common unlawful object of the assembly. Where the assembly is of the latter character and while some of the persons assembled together share the common unlawful object, others are only passive witnesses, it becomes necessary to see whether a particular individual who is charged with the offence of being a member of the unlawful assembly, had done something or omitted to do something indicative of the state of his mind, and in the absence of any evidence establishing his awareness and intention to join the unlawful assembly, his mere presence in the assembly does not make him a member of the assembly. It is only in such a context, that the part taken by a person in the incident assumes significance. Otherwise, in law, for holding a person to be a member of an unlawful assembly, it is not necessary to show, that he had himself committed some illegal overt act or had been guilty of some illegal omission in pursuance of the common unlawful object of the assembly of which he was a member. Section 149 which lays down the principle of vicarious liability, for the offence committed by any other member of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, makes this aspect of the matter quite clear. Masalti v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 202 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 226 : 1964 SCD 980 : (1965) 1 SCJ 605.

[7627] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object —Offender accused of offence under Section 302 read with Section 149, IPC.— Sections 146 and 149 represent conditions under which vicarious liability arises for the acts of others. It is not obligatory to charge a person under section 143 or 147 when charging him with Section 147 or 148. Similarly, it is not obligatory to charge a person under section 143 or Section 147 when charging him for an offence with the aid of Section 149. These sections are implied. In may be useful to add a charge under section 147 and Section 148 which charges under other offences of the Penal Code read with Section 149, but it is not obligatory to do so. A person may join an unlawful assembly and be guilty under section 143 or 147 or 148 but he may cease to be its member at the time when the offence under section 302 or some other offence is committed. He would not in that event be liable for the other offence for Section 149 would not apply to him. The present case is not of that kind. Offences under Sections 143 and 147 must always be present when the charge is laid for an offence like murder with the aid of Section 149, but the other two charges need not be framed separately unless it is sought to secure a conviction under them. It is thus, that Section 143 is not used when the charge is under section 147, or Section 148, and Section 147 is not used when the charge is under section 148. Section 147 may be dispensed with when the charge is under section 149 read with any other offence under the Indian Penal Code. There can be proof under section 149 of the existence of an unlawful assembly, of the common object and of the part played by the unlawful assembly or any of its members, same as under section 143 or Section 147 or under section 148. There may be additional charges under these sections to guard against failure of the charge for an offence read with Section 149 but the other charges cannot be regarded as condition precedent. We agree with the conclusion of the Full Bench and therefore confirm the judgment under appeal. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 302 : 1966 CrLJ 197 : (1966) 1 SCA 146.

[7628] ● Unlawful assembly—Prosecution of common object.—Where a member of an unlawful assembly is named as an offender who committed an offence for which the members of the unlawful assembly are liable under section 149, IPC, and the evidence at the trial is insufficient to establish, that the named person committed the act attributed to him, he may still be convicted of the offence, if it is proved that he was a member of the unlawful assembly and that the act was done by some member of the assembly in prosecution of the common object or which the members knew was likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Failure to prove the presence of the named offender among the members of the unlawful assembly will not affect the criminality of those who are proved to be members of the assembly if the other conditions of the applicability of Section 149 be established. If the Court refuses to accept the testimony of the witnesses who speak to the presence of and part played by a named offender, the weight to be attached to the testimony of those witnesses insofar as they involve other may undoubtedly be affected, but it cannot be said that because the testimony of witnesses who depose to the assault by the named offender is not accepted, other members proved to be members of the unlawful assembly escape liability arising from the commission of the offence, in the prosecution of the common object of the assembly. Ramu Gope v. State of Bihar, AIR 1969 SC 689 : 1969 CrLJ 1061 : (1969) 1 SCJ 939 : (1969) 2 SCA 216 : 1969 ACrR 312 : 1969 AWR (HC) 473 : 1969 ALJ 635 : 1969 MLJ (Cr) 482.

[7629] ● Free fight—Common object.—Once the Court comes to the conclusion that the injuries sustained by the persons were in the course of a free fight, then only those persons who are proved to have caused them can be held guilty for the injuries caused by them. K.N. Virji v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 SC 219 : (1970) 3 SCC 103 : 1970 CrLJ 363 : 1970 SCD 244 : 1970 SCCrR 311 : 1970 ACrR 281.

[7630] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object.—Under the Fourth clause of Section 141, and assembly of five or more persons is an unlawful assembly, if the common object of the members thereof, is to enforce any right or supposed right by means of criminal force or show of criminal force to any person. Section 141 must be read with Sections 96 to 106 dealing with the right of private defence. The assertion of a right of private defence within the limits prescribed by law cannot fall within the expression "to enforce any right or supposed right" in the Fourth clause of Section 141. The assembly could not be designated as an unlawful assembly if its object was to defend property by the use of force within the limit prescribed by law. State of Bihar v. Nathu, AIR 1970 SC 27 : (1969) 2 SCC 207 : 1970 CrLJ 5 : 1969 SCD 743 : (1969) 2 SCJ 858 : 1970 SCCrR 235 : (1970) 1 SCA 370 : (1970) 1 SCR 358 : 1970 ALJ 1 : 1969 MLJ (Cr) 856.

[7631] ● Unlawful assembly—Crime committing in prosecution of common object.—In order to attract the provisions of Section 149 the prosecution must establish that there was an unlawful assembly, and that the crime was committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. State of Bihar v. Nathu, AIR 1970 SC 27 : (1969) 2 SCC 207 : 1970 CrLJ 5 : 1969 SCD 743 : (1969) 2 SCJ 858 : 1970 SCCrR 235 : (1970) 1 SCA 370 : (1970) 1 SCR 358 : 1970 ALJ 1 : 1969 MLJ (Cr) 856.

[7632] ● Unlawful assembly in prosecution of common object.—It is an offence committed by a member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, and it is an offence such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Section 149 creates a specific offence and deals with the punishment of that offence. The emphasis is on common object. There is no question of common intention in the section. S.M. Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1970 SC 1492 : (1970) 3 SCC 46 : 1970 CrLJ 1389.

[7633] ● Mutual fight—No common object.—In a mutual fight, there is no common object. None of the accused can be convicted by having recourse to Section 149, IPC. Munir Khan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 335 : 1971 CrLJ 288 : 1970 UJ (SC) 725 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 93 : 1971 ACrR 151 : 1971 AWR (HC) 156.

[7634] ● Unlawful assembly—Carrying out illegal common object.—Mere presence of a person at the place where members of an unlawful assembly have gathered for carrying out their illegal common object, does not incriminate him. But the question is one of fact in each case as to whether he happens to be innocently present at the place of occurrence or was actually a member of the unlawful assembly. Bishambar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 2381 : (1972) 3 SCC 260 : 1971 CrLJ 1700 : 1971 SCD 1012.

[7635] ● Common object of assembly—Sharing of.—In this case the appellants were present at the spot at the time of the occurrence not merely as passive or innocent spectators, without intending to share the common object of the assembly, nor did they happen to be there out of idle curiosity, content by merely gazing on having nothing to do with the assaults. Chandrika Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 109 : (1972) 4 SCC 140 : 1972 CrLJ 22.

[7636] ● Common object of unlawful assembly.—The mere fact that the victim, who was not one of those who accompanied the Court Nazar for attaching the crop of the J.D., happened to be the first target of use of violence in accomplishing the common object, does not imply that the members of the assembly participating in the assault, on the deceased had a different common object from that of the original assembly. Gokul v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1972 SC 209 : (1972) 4 SCC 812 : 1972 CrLJ 42 : (1972) 1 SCJ 499 : 1972 MLJ (Cr) 278.

[7637] ● Grievous hurt by particular accused not in prosecution of common object.—Where the appellant struck a blow with a kencha which fell on the left thigh of a workman working in the house of one K whom the appellant and others wanted to attack, and as the appellant struck at the very first person who opened the door and that was how that man came to receive the injury, the conviction of the appellant alone for causing the said injury is correct. Other accused were not guilty of any vicarious liability for the appellant's assault on the workman. Kshudiram v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 1221 : (1972) 3 SCC 479 : 1972 CrLJ 756.

[7638] ● Common object—Minor differences in FIR and evidence of witnesses.—Where injuries were caused to the deceased in prosecution of the common object of all the accused to cause the death of the deceased, the accused cannot derive any benefit from the inability of the PWs to state as to which particular injury was caused by which of the accused relying upon some discrepancies in the FIR and in the evidence of witnesses. Ram Prasad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 2673 : (1974) 3 SCC 388 : 1973 CrLJ 1807.

[7639] ● Accused not formed unlawful assembly with common object.—Where there was no pre-meditation and the occurrence was a sudden affair as a result of remonstrance and counter remonstrance, each of the accused will be liable for his individual act and not vicariously liable for the acts of others and it cannot be said that the accused formed an unlawful assembly and had a common object. Lalji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 2508 : (1973) 2 SCC 567 : (1973) SCC (Cri) 921 : 1973 CrLJ 1769 : 1973 SCD 879.

[7640] ● Occurrence chance encounter—Assembly not becoming unlawful at any stage.—Where the occurrence was a chance encounter and the fatal assault was a sudden, unanticipated and individual act of the unascertained assailant, their assembly did not become unlawful at any stage, and as such the accused are not liable for the fatal assault by the application of Section 149, IPC. State of Uttar Pradesh v. J.N. Gupta, AIR 1974 SC 753 : (1974) 4 SCC 471 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 507 : 1974 CrLJ 625 : 1974 SCD 467.

[7641] ● Common object of accused either to murder or injuries deceased or witnesses not established.—Where some of the accused were not initially involved in the incident of rescuing a girl from her father-in-law's house and the common object of the accused either to murder or injure the deceased or PWs 2 and 3 was not established, and those persons merely joined the other villagers in trying to stop the accused from taking away the girl, and it was at that stage that the main accused fired his gun resulting in the death of the deceased and injures to PWs 2 and 3, none of the other accused could be held to have at any time entertained an intention to commit murder and they cannot, therefore, be held liable under section 307/149, IPC. Tarlok Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1797 : (1973) 2 SCC 458 : (1973) SCC (Cri) 872 : 1974 CrLJ 1265.

[7642] ● Unlawful assembly—Committal of offence by.—It is incumbent upon the prosecution to show that the person concerned was a member of the unlawful assembly at the time of the commission of the offence. If the person concerned goes away and ceases to be a member of the unlawful assembly before the commission of the offence, no vicarious liability can be fastened upon him under section 149 because of any subsequent act done by the other members of the unlawful assembly. Nawab Ali v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1228 : (1974) 4 SCC 600 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 636 : 1974 CrLJ 921 : (1974) 2 SCJ 249 : 1974 SCD 575 : 1974 MLJ (Cr) 500.

[7643] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object originally to beat deceased.—It was clear on the evidence, that all the five accused came armed with deadly weapons and one of them caught hold of the deceased and shouted that he should be beaten and another said that they would decide the matter on the spot. Hence, the five accused were members of an unlawful assembly with the common object to kill the deceased. Not much importance could be given to the word "beat" used in the charge. The appellants having come armed with deadly weapon and attacked the deceased in the desperate manner they had done, and if the members of the assembly knew that by using those weapons upon the deceased, death would be caused, they were guilty under section 302/149, IPC. Even assuming, that the unlawful assembly was formed originally only to beat, it was clearly established in the evidence that the said object was well-knit with what followed as the dangerous finale of, call it, the beating. This was not a case where something foreign or unknown with the object had taken place all of a sudden. It was the execution of the same common object which assumed the fearful character, implicit in the illegal action undertaken by the five appellants. Bhajan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1564 : (1974) 4 SCC 568 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 604 : 1974 CrLJ 1029.

[7644] ● Acquittal of some accused and conviction of others.—Where the case against some of the accused, whose conviction was maintained by the High Court was not at all distinguishable from the case against one of the other co-accused whom the High Court acquitted, the Supreme Court on appeal against acquittal reversed the same and convicted the accused. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sheo Ram, AIR 1974 SC 2267 : (1975) 3 SCC 136 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 760 : 1975 CrLJ 14.

[7645] ● Nature of offence under Section 149, IPC.—Section 149, IPC, constitutes per se a substantive offence although the punishment is under the section to which it is tagged, being committed by the principal offender in the unlawful assembly, known or unknown. Bhajan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1564 : (1974) 4 SCC 568 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 604 : 1974 CrLJ 1029 : 1974 SCD 620.

[7646] ● Members of unlawful assembly armed with lathis and spears—Common object.—Where the members of an unlawful assembly were armed with lathis and spears, the common object of which was to assault the victims, the common object may not be to murder one of them, but the members of the assembly must have known that at least grievous hurt with a sharp cutting weapon was likely to be caused by any member of the assembly in prosecution of the common object. Ram Anjore v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 185 : (1975) 3 SCC 379 : (1975) SCC (Cri) 5 : 1975 CrLJ 249 : 1975 ACrC 66.

[7647] ● Unlawful assembly—Fourteen out of eighteen acquitted on ground of benefit of doubt.—In this appeal, the four appellants along with 14 others were tried for rioting and murder. The trial Court acquitted 11 of them giving them the benefit of doubt and convicted the rest including the four appellants. Each of them was convicted under section 302, r/w 149, IPC. The High Court came to the conclusion that the admissions of the four appellants, corroborated by the injuries on the bodies of three of them, left no doubt that they were in any case among the assailants. The others were given the benefit of doubt lest some injustice was done by relying implicitly on partisan witnesses in which innocent persons were not infrequently sought to be roped in with the guilty. That did not mean, that the total number of assailants was actually less than five as contended for the appellants from the fact that 14 out of the 18 accused persons were actually acquitted. It was true that the acquittal of an accused person did raise, in the eye of law, a presumption that he was innocent, even if he was actually guilty. But it was only the acquitted accused person and not the convicted accused persons who could, as a rule, get the benefit of such a presumption. The effect of findings on questions of fact depended upon the nature of those findings. If, for example, only five known persons were alleged to have participated in an attack but the Courts found that two of them were falsely implicated, it would be quite natural and logical to infer or presume that the participants were less than five in number. On the other hand, if the Court held that the assailants were actually five in number, but there could be a doubt as to the identity of two of the alleged assailants and therefore, acquitted two of them, the others would not get the benefit of doubt about the identity of the two accused so long as there was a firm finding, based on good evidence and sound reasoning, that the participants were five or more in number. Such a case was one of doubt only as to the identity of some participants, and not as to the total number of participants. But where a large number of known persons such as 18 as in this case were alleged to have participated, and the Court acted on the principle that it was better to err on the side of safety and benefit of doubt was reaped by a large number, with the result that their acquittal reduced the number of those about whose participation there could be no doubt to less than five, it might not be really difficult at all to reach the conclusion that, having regard to undeniable facts, the number of participants could not possibly be less than five. It had to be remembered that doubts might arise with regard to the participation of a particular accused person in circumstances whose benefit could only be reaped by the accused who raised such doubt. Doubts might also arise about the veracity of the whole prosecution version and doubts about the participation of individual accused persons, might contribute to the emergence of such doubts, which might cover and engulf the whole case. Nevertheless, if, as in the instant case, the Court, whose duty it was to separate the chaff from the grain, did hold, that the convicted persons were certainly members of an unlawful assembly which might have consisted of more than five persons, there was no principle of law or justice which could stand in the way of the application of Section 149, IPC for convicting those found indubitably guilty of participation in carrying out of the common object of an unlawful assembly. Dharam Pal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 1917 : (1975) 2 SCC 596 : (1975) SCC (Cri) 704 : 1975 CrLJ 1666.

[7648] ● Unlawful assembly—Having common object.—The High Court having found that the common object of the assembly was to re-divert the water by use of force, if necessary, and that the respondents had armed themselves along with their followers with guns and gandasas were carrying out that object, the conclusion was unavoidable that the members of the assembly knew that the prosecution of even the limited object of the assembly was likely to result in the murder of the opponents. That aspect was overlooked by the High Court. Therefore, every member of the unlawful assembly would be vicariously liable for the acts committed by any member of that assembly. Their varying participation in the different stages of the incident was directed at achieving the common object— first the murders and then the destruction of evidence establishing the murders. Some fired the fatal shots, some severed the limbs of the victims, some threw the dead bodies into the fire and some led the victory march parading the heads of the victims as prizes. But whether one did this or that act, there was identity of interest among the members of the unlawful assembly and they were actuated by a common object. There was thus but one unlawful assembly and its members were animated by a unity of purpose. Five of the respondents were convicted under section 302 r/w Section 149, IPC, and the other 3 were found not guilty. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Mahendra Singh, AIR 1975 SC 455 : (1975) 3 SCC 314 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 922 : 1975 CrLJ 425.

[7649] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of killing.—In this case the appellant and certain others were convicted under section 304(1)/149, IPC, and certain minor sections. One appeal by the State, the conviction of the appellant was altered from Section 304(1)/149 to Section 302/149 and the other convictions against him were maintained. The question was, whether on the evidence on the record, whether the killing of any of the three men who died was within the common object of the large number of persons who took part in the riot in various ways in a fairly widespread area. It might well be that those who actually inflicted the injuries on the three deceased, could be held liable for causing death in a particularly cruel manner. But the question was whether each of the large number of other rioters in the village, who took part in various ways in the upsurge of resentment and hostility against a party of whom three lost their lives, shared the common object to kill them or to do acts whose natural and probable results would be their deaths. Every offence which might be committed by a member of an unlawful assembly, would not necessarily be ascribed to or vicariously fastened upon every other member of that assembly by using Section 149, IPC. The likelihood of causing of death by the nature of the actions of the members of the assembly should be shown to be within the knowledge of a member who was to be made vicariously liable for a death. Such knowledge might be inferred from the nature of the actions committed by others in an unlawful assembly which the member, held vicariously liable, continued to associate himself with, despite those actions seen by him or known to him. In the present case, there were two factions in the village, one of the oppressors and the other of the oppressed, smarting under the pain of injuries inflicted by their oppressors, the intention of a member of an assembly of such faction would be initially quite lawful. His object might not go beyond joining a procession for purposes of protest. On the evidence on record, it could be seen that the participation of the appellant went beyond exhibiting a mere intention to protest. It not only embraced knowledge of likelihood of hurt of some kind to members of the party attacked, but it included an attack by the appellant on PW1, though it was relatively mild. At most, from the concerted action of so many men a member of the unlawful assembly in this case could be reasonably held to be aware, that grievous hurt would result. As it was doubtful whether the appellant could be held guilty of participation in an unlawful assembly which had the common object of killing or even maiming the three men who lost their lives, the appellant could not be convicted under section 302/149, IPC. The trial Court was in error in holding the appellant guilty under section 304(1)/149, IPC. For a conviction under that section, it should be shown that the case of the convicted person fell within one of the five Exceptions found in Section 300, IPC, and in this case it was doubtful, whether the common object of the unlawful assembly jointed by the appellant was to commit any acts which were either intended to cause death, or, from which knowledge of likelihood of death would be inferred. Persons other than those who actually committed the acts resulting in death could not be held vicariously liable for murder. The appeal was, therefore, allowed setting aside the conviction of the appellant under section 302/149, IPC, while maintaining his other convictions. Santosh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 654 : (1975) 3 SCC 727 : (1975) SCC (Cri) 182 : 1975 CrLJ 602.

[7650] ● Common object—Accused party not being aggressors.—If the accused were not the aggressors, no case either under section 147 or Section 148, IPC, can be maintained against them. Then it is for the prosecution to prove the individual assaults. If there is no evidence regarding the same, conviction under Sections 323, 324 or 326 cannot be founded against each of them on the basis of Section 149, IPC. Ishwar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 2423 : (1976) 4 SCC 355 : 1976 CrLJ 1883 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 357 : 1976 AWC 672 : 1976 ACrC 307.

[7651] ● Case of sudden mutual fights Section 149, IPC not to be invoked.—There were concurrent findings recorded by the two lower Courts that it was a case of sudden mutual fights, that there could be no question of invoking the aid of Section 149 for imposing constructive criminal liability on the appellant. The appellant would, therefore, be convicted only for the injuries caused by him by his individual acts. Secondly, the fight between the parties took place in one stage and not two stages as deposed to by the PWs. Once those two circumstances were accepted, it would be impossible to sustain the conviction of the appellant. When the fight began, according to the prosecution case, the appellant was armed with a dantli and it was with that dantli that he gave a blow on the back side of the head of one L.

But the injury, which resulted in the death of the deceased was, according to prosecution, caused by an axe blow. The medical evidence confirmed that the injury should have been caused by a heavy blow with some sharp cutting object like an axe since the injury had gone deep into the brain matter. It was, therefore, obvious that the appellant, who was armed with a dantli, could not have inflicted the fatal blow on the head of the deceased. The appeal was allowed. Puran v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1976 SC 912 : (1976) 1 SCC 28 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 750 : 1976 CrLJ 674.

[7652] ● More innocent presence in assembly not to make accused member of unlawful assembly.—Both the Courts did not make a correct approach in examining the individual cases of the accused with reference to their actual presence or participation in the incident in question. All the incidents starting from a hotel and ending with the chawl of Jogendra Singh were all parts of the same transaction, nevertheless they were separate incidents in which different members of the mob had participated. Hence it could not be inferred as a matter of law that once the appellants were members of the mob at the hotel they should be deemed to have participated in all the other incidents at various other places up to the end. It was well-settled that a mere innocent presence in an assembly of persons, as for example a bystander, did not make the accused a member of an unlawful assembly, unless it was shown by direct or circumstantial evidence that the accused shared the common object of the assembly. Thus, a Court was not entitled to presume that any and every person who was proved to have been present near a riotous mob at any time or to have joined or left it at any stage during its activities was in law guilty of every act committed by it from the beginning to the end, or that each member of such a crowd should from the beginning have anticipated and contemplated the nature of the illegal acts in which the assembly would subsequently indulge. In other words, it should be proved in each case that the person concerned was not only a member of the unlawful assembly at some stage, but at all the crucial stages and shared the common object of the assembly at all those stages. The evidence in this case was wholly lacking in that behalf and it merely showed that some of the accused were members of the unlawful assembly at one particular stage but not at another. Further, framing of a charge under section 395, r/w Section 149, IPC, was a mere surplusage as an offence under section 395 would come into existence only when an act of dacoity was committed by 5 or more persons jointly. On consideration of the evidence only three of the appellants were found guilty under minor offences. Musa Khan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 2566 : (1977) 1 SCC 733 : 1976 CrLJ 1987 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 466.

[7653] ● Common object—Murder.—Where the original common object was to kill a particular person but who was not available, and the common object to kill the deceased developed at the second stage when the accused decided to teach him a lesson also, and where there was no reliable evidence at all to show, that the appellants also shared the changed new common object and on the other hand there were clear circumstances that the appellants did not participate in the offence, there was a serious doubt that the appellants being close relations of the other accused and the possibility of their being falsely implicated due to enmity, cannot be reasonably excluded particularly having regard to the admitted enmity which existed between the parties. Roshan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 672 : (1976) 4 SCC 65 : (1976) SCC (Cri) 523 : 1977 CrLJ 259 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 44.

[7654] ● Conviction under Section 302 and 149, IPC—When proper.—Where the evidence showed that no less than 12 injuries were caused to the deceased and at least one of them was on a vital part of the body, namely, the parietal region and the weapons used were lohangis and iron-shod sticks, which were clearly lethal weapons, the conviction of the accused under section 302 r/w Section 149, IPC, was correct. Inder Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 2040 : (1977) 1 SCC 2 : (1977) SCC (Cri) 32 : 1977 CrLJ 1605.

[7655] ● Unlawful assembly—In prosecution of common object.—An offence will no doubt fall within the purview of Section 141, IPC, even if members of the assembly knew that it was 'likely to be committed' in prosecution of their common object, or if the offence was such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. In the instant case there is nothing in the testimony of the PWs to show that the party of the accused who were armed with guns fired them in pursuance of the common object of the other persons who were on the terrace, at that time as they did not go to the terrace of their own accord for committing any offence, but they went there when the complainant's party made an aggressive call. It is also not in evidence, that the other accused exhorted those who fired the guns or knew that the guns would be fired. There is, however, nothing in the statements of the three police witnesses to prove that this was so. Section 149, IPC, will not, therefore, fasten criminal liability on the other accused. K. Neelkantha v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1978 SC 1021 : (1978) 2 SCC 473 : (1978) SCC (Cri) 285 : 1978 CrLJ 780 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 95.

[7656] ● Sharing of common object of unlawful assembly—Occurrence in rural area involving rival factions.—In the instant case, the appellants were acquitted for offences under section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, Section 302 read with Section 149, IPC, and for offences under Sections 323, 324, 325 read with Section 149 and Section 427 read with Section 34, IPC. The High Court convicted them under section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, and other offences. If some persons had collected at one place and on seeing the deceased alighting from the bus, emerged from that place and chased him, and some of them belaboured him, it could be said that they had met for a purpose and had a common object and acted in concert. If some persons combined to attack him, and if they emerged together one could say that those who were the members of the latter assembly, shared the common object of the assembly, viz., to assault and even to cause hurt to the deceased. At that stage an unlawful assembly was formed.

In a case where a large crowed collected, all of whom were not shown to be sharing a common object of the unlawful assembly, a stray assault by any one accused on any particular witness could not be said to be an assault in prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, so that the remaining accused could be imputed the knowledge that such an offence was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly.

Whenever in uneventful rural society, something unusual occurred, more so where the local community was faction ridden and a fight occurred amongst factions, a good number of people appeared on the seen not with a view to participate in the occurrence but as curious spectators. In such an event mere presence in the lawful assembly should not be treated as leading to the conclusion that the person concerned was present in the lawful assembly as a member of the unlawful assembly. Vicarious liability would attach to every member of the unlawful assembly if that member of the unlawful assembly either participated in the commission of the offence by overt act or knew that the offence which was committed was likely to be committed by any member of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly and became or continued to remain a member of the unlawful assembly. Muthu Naicker v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1978 SC 1647 : (1978) 4 SCC 385 : 1978 CrLJ 1713 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 378.

[7657] ● Unlawful assembly to commit murder.—In case of an unlawful assembly to commit murder, the manner in which the five respondents were lying in wait, the fire-arms they were having with them, the exhortation by A-4 and A-5, followed by 3 shots aimed at the deceased by A-1 to A-3 from short distance, threats given by A-1 to A-3 to witnesses not to question them, the manner of running away after snatching the rifle and belt of cartridges from the deceased—all these are sufficient to come to the conclusion that these five accused had constituted an unlawful assembly and as members thereof committed the various offences with which they were charged. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sughar Singh, AIR 1978 SC 191 : (1978) 1 SCC 138 : (1978) SCC (Cri) 83 : 1978 CrLJ 141.

[7658] ● Common object—Proof of.—Before the appellants could be convicted of sharing the common object of the assembly or of being members of the same at a time when the assembly became unlawful, it had to be proved by the prosecution, that the appellants were members of the unlawful assembly at the time when the assembly became unlawful. There was evidence in the case to that effect but the evidence merely shows that the appellants were members of the morcha but there is absolutely nothing to show that they were members of the unlawful assembly when its members started pelting stones. The FIR lodged by a full-fledged eye-witness did not mention the names of any of the appellants. That by itself, is a serious infirmity in the prosecution case sufficient to throw doubt on the truth of the version presented by the prosecution to say that as the morcha moved on it must be presumed to be unlawful and any person who was a member of that assembly must be presumed to share the common object of the unlawful assembly is over-stating the law on the subject. It must be shown either from a person's active participation or otherwise that he shared the common object of the unlawful assembly. It is not necessary that the accused should be guilty of any overt act. It is sufficient if it is shown that as a participant of the unlawful assembly, he was sharing the common object of the same. Even that evidence is wholly lacking in the present case. Decision of the Delhi High Court was reversed. P.S. Sawant v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 1265 : (1979) 4 SCC 727 : 1979 CrLJ 856 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 698.

[7659] ● Common object of committing lurking house trespass.—Appellants were variously armed with dangerous weapons and had committed lurking house-trespass by entering the wireless station after breaking open the doors and windows and assaulted the witness. In these circumstances, all the appellants must be deemed to have shared the common object of committing lurking house-trespass punishable under section 455, IPC. Appellants are liable under section 149/455, IPC. C. Chellappan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1979 SC 1761 : (1979) 4 SCC 312 : (1979) SCC (Cri) 1029 : 1979 CrLJ 1335 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 744.

[7661] ● Murder—Common object.—Where the appellant exhorted the other accused to assault the victims with guns and other weapons and one of them fired at the deceased, the appellant's conviction under section 302/149 was fully justified.

The appellant exhorted other assailants of the deceased persons and the injured, to open the assault by guns and other weapons. The appellant was also armed with a gun. Consistent evidence of the eye-witnesses is that all the three guns were fired though only one fired hit the deceased. Mere fact, that only one person was hit by the gun cannot exclude the possibility of the other guns having been fired, because it may be that, even though the other guns were also fired their bullets did not hit any body. High Court was, therefore, not justified in holding that appellant RR was armed with a lathi. Moreover, RR in his statement under section 342, CrPC (Section 313 of the 1973 Code) did not deny his presence at the spot but had admitted his presence there and had even stated in his statement that he had also assaulted the prosecution party with a lathi. There is, therefore, absolutely no reason to acquit RR of the charges under section 302/149 and his conviction was fully justified. Kunwar Bahadur v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1509 : (1979) 4 SCC 494 : (1980) SCC (Cri) 109 : 1980 CrLJ 831 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 722 : (1979) UJ (SC) 885 : 1980 SimLC 60 : 1979 ALJ 903.

[7662] ● Rioting—Common object of unlawful assembly.—It is not necessary that in a case of rioting under section 149, any specific act should be attributed. It is sufficient if it is proved, that all the members of the unlawful assembly shared the common object of the said assembly which was undoubtedly to cause the murder of the deceased. Bhe Ram v. State of Haryana, AIR 1980 SC 957 : (1980) 1 SCC 201 : (1980) SCC (Cri) 206 : 1980 CrLJ 735 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 741 : (1980) 2 SCJ 141 : 1980 MLJ (Cr) 572.

[7663] ● Formation of unlawful assembly with common object—No evidence as to.—Whole fight started suddenly on the spur of the moment in a heat of passion. Therefore, the accused could only be liable for the individual act committed by them. No conviction for rioting under the said sections can be recorded. Decision of the Madras High Court was reversed. Mariadasan v. State of T.N., AIR 1980 SC 573 : (1980) 3 SCC 68 : (1980) SCC (Cri) 523 : 1980 CrLJ 412 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 177 : 1980 SCCrR 178 : 1980 UJ (SC) 300 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 115 : 1980 Srinagar LJ 10 : 1980 SimLC 279.

[7664] ● Clear finding as to object of assembly pre-condition.—In a conviction under section 326 read with Section 149, there should be a clear finding as to what was the object of the unlawful assembly and if so whether the object was unlawful, that is, to commit murder, grievous hurt or simple hurt. No overt act was attributed to any of the appellants on the deceased. Merely being armed with lathis by itself would not prove that they shared the common object with which the other appellant armed with a bhala was inspired. Conviction was set aside. Bhudeo Mandal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 1219 : (1981) 2 SCC 755 : (1981) SCC (Cri) 595 : 1981 CrLJ 725 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 427 : 1981 BBCJ (SC) 104 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 180 : 1981 BLJR 411 : 1981 Chand CrC (SC) 110 : 1981 Chand LR (Cr) 419.

[7665] ● Murder unlawful assembly.—In a conviction under section 302 read with Section 149, participation of the accused was not shown to extend to his being a member of the unlawful assembly which took away the deceased to the flag-post and gave him a beating. But he was one of those who broke open the door of the house and dragged out the deceased. He cannot be convicted for murder with the aid of Section 149. Badruddin v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC

1223 : (1981) SCC (Cri) 610 : 1981 Supp SCC 1 : 1981 CrLJ 729 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 198 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 187.

[7666] ● Murder—Act done by several presence in furtherance of common object.—Accused were coming in two trucks, those coming in one truck attacked the deceased and those coming by the other truck attacked P W3. Attacks on both the deceased and PW-3 were part of the same transaction. That the accused came by the different truck did not make any difference. It was a clear case where there was prior concert and planning by all the accused. Appeal was dismissed. Jagdeo Singh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 648 : (1980) SCC Supp 360 : (1981) SCC (Cri) 267 : 1981 CrLJ 166 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 308 : 1981 UJ (SC) 31.

[7667] ● Common object to form unlawful assembly.—Where the judgment of the High Court setting aside the order of acquittal of the trial Court did not at all discuss the evidence of the PWs, nor the case of each accused considered and not even a finding about common object was given and the accused was not examined under section 342, CrPC of Jammu & Kashmir, the judgment of the High Court was set aside but remand was not ordered due to the passage of time and as the injuries caused to the complainant were simple. Naba Parray v. State of J&K, AIR 1982 SC 1200 : 1982 CrLJ 1576.

[7668] ● Murder—Common object.—The approach made by the High Court was purely wooden, artificial and based on pure speculation and the Supreme Court, was not at all impressed by the process of reasoning, adopted by the High Court. The grounds taken and the process of reasoning adopted by the High Court, for disbelieving injured eye-witnesses was manifestly wrong and perilously bordered on perversity. From the proved facts the irresistible inference that could be drawn was that the charge under section 302/149 was unassailable. The High Court merely discussed the evidence of the eye-witnesses and on trivial grounds rejected the same without at all taking into consideration the fact, that the accused could not escape conviction under the said section even if the individual assaults were not proved. State of Gujarat v. Naginbhai, AIR 1983 SC 839 : (1983) 3 SCC 316 : (1983) SCC (Cri) 590 : 1983 CrLJ 1112 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 359.

[7669] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object.—In this case the appellant was A-1 out of nine accused. The Sessions Judge convicted all of them: A-1, 6, 7 and 9 under Sections 303 read with Section 149, IPC, A-2, 3, 4, 5 and 8 under section 302 read with Section 149, IPC. On appeal the High Court found that there was no unlawful assembly and acquitted all the accused of the various charges under Sections 147, 148 and 149 read with the other substantive Sections of the Penal Code. The first accused, whose sentence of death was confirmed, appealed to the Supreme Court by special leave. The facts mentioned above were substantially found by the High Court. Yet the High Court, by a curious process of reasoning came to the conclusion, that there was no unlawful assembly and that each of the accused persons was liable for his own individual act. The High Court thought, that because the accused arrived on the scene at different times and at different stages of the assault, they could not' be said to be animated by any common object. The said reasoning was totally fallacious. It was obvious from the evidence, that the several accused persons were lying in wait at different places near the scene of occurrence. They had apparently split themselves into smaller groups, so that they might not attract attention. It was not as if there was any appreciable interval of time, between their joining each other in the attack. It was a continuous process without any noticeable time lag. First, according to the evidence, A-3 caught him from behind; immediately A-4, 5 and 8 joined him and dragged the deceased in the direction of the temple. They were joined by A-2, 6 and 7 also in dragging him towards the said temple. A-1, who was already sitting near the other temple, first took care of PW3 and then joined the others in assaulting the deceased. Even if there was any interval of time between the various stages of the attack in which the several accused joined and participated, it was a clear case where all of them should be held to have been animated by a common object. There was a point of time in which all of them took part in the assault simultaneously and they also took away the body together. Even if they had come to the scene of offence separately and without any prior arrangement, on facts of the case, clearly they had become members of an unlawful assembly when they joined together to assault the deceased.

The common object could and did develop eo instanti. Unfortunately, the High Court gave a categoric finding that there was no common object and, therefore, no unlawful assembly. The High Court acquitted the accused under Sections 147, 148, 302 read with Sections 149, 303 read with Sections 149 and 307 read with Section 149. There was no appeal by the State and the Supreme Court had, therefore, to proceed on the basis that A-1 could only be convicted for the individual acts established against him. On an analysis of the evidence, A-1's conviction under section 303 and the sentence of death had to be set aside. Instead, he was convicted under section 324, IPC. Vithal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 179 : (1983) 1 SCC 431 : (1983) SCC (Cri) 219 : 1983 CrLJ 340 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 46.

[7670] ● Common intention—Inference of.— In the instant case two appellants were convicted for an offence under section 304, Part II, r/w Section 149, IPC, altering their conviction by the trial Court under section 302, r/w 149. It was contended, on their behalf that there was no evidence to establish the common object and an unlawful assembly and that the High Court also only considered the question of common intention to kill the deceased and came to the conclusion that such intention could not be attributed to these appellants and, therefore, chose to alter the conviction as aforesaid. There was no material at all to come to a conclusion that they were the members of an unlawful assembly with some unlawful common object in pursuance of which they inflicted injuries to the deceased and others. The counsel for the State contended that even if the appellants could not be convicted with the aid of (Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, 6th Edn., 2000) Section 149 they could safely be convicted with the aid of Section 34, as the common intention could be inferred from the circumstances that all the persons assaulted the deceased and other PWs simultaneously. It was clear that so far as those who participated in the incident it could not be doubted that they shared the common intention to beat the deceased and other PWs. So the conviction of appellant G was maintained under section 304, r/w Section 34, IPC. But so far as appellant B was concerned, there was a clear finding, that he did not participate in the incident. The only act alleged against him was that he by shouting directed the other accused to beat the deceased and other PWs. He was, therefore, acquitted. Gupteshwar Nath v. State of Bihar, AIR 1986 SC 1649 : (1986) 2 SCC 589 : (1986) SCC (Cri) 191 : 1986 CrLJ 1242.

[7671] ● Formation of unlawful assembly by accused with common object.—Where the firing started somewhat suddenly, and the accused party armed with rifle and guns had collected themselves near a culvert and attacked the persons going in a jeep on the road, there was possibility of mistake as to whether it was a rifle or the guns that had been used by the culprits. But where the oral evidence was clear and was fully corroborated by the medical evidence, the accused had formed themselves into an unlawful assembly with the common object of fatally injuring the deceased and members of his party, the motive being very clear. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1986 SC 316 : 1995 Supp SCC 471 : (1985) SCC (Cri) 486 : 1986 CrLJ 313 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 453 : (1985) 2 Crimes 860 : 1985 UJ (SC) 1047 : 1985 CurCrJ (SC) 488.

[7672] ● Unlawful assembly—Conviction under Section 148, IPC.—Where the manner in which the incident took place clearly established, that the appellants were members of an unlawful assembly and were lying in wait for the two deceased persons, their conviction under section 148 cannot be assailed and, in that context, as they were members of an unlawful assembly it is not necessary to go into the question as to which of them inflicted what particular injury. Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1987 SC 1328 : (1987) 3 SCC 360 : (1987) SCC (Cri) 519 : 1987 CrLJ 1065 : 1987 IJR 265 : JT 1987 (3) SC 580 : (1987) 2 UJ (SC) 116 : 1987 ACrC 345.

[7673] ● Unlawful assembly—Must be of five or more persons.—Where it is not the prosecution case that, apart from the 7 accused persons, there were other persons who were involved in the crime, on the acquittal of 3 of them, the remaining 4 accused persons cannot be convicted under section 148 or Section 149, IPC, for any offence. Amar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1987 SC 826 : (1987) 1 SCC 679 : 1987 CrLJ 706 : (1987) 1 (1) IJ Rep 424.

[7674] ● Common object—Conviction of members of unlawful assembly on basis of.— Section 149 of Indian Penal Code creates a specific offence and makes every member of unlawful assembly vicariously liable. But in order to fasten vicarious responsibility on any member of an unlawful assembly the prosecution must prove that the act constituting an offence was done in prosecution of the common object of that assembly or the act done is such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly. Under this section, therefore, every member of an unlawful assembly renders himself liable for the criminal act or acts of any other member or members of that assembly provided the same is/are done in prosecution of the common object or is/are such as every member of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed. Since Section 149 of Indian Penal Code imposes a constructive penal liability, it must be strictly construed as it seeks to punish members of an unlawful assembly for the offence or offences committed by their associate or associates in carrying out the common object of the assembly. What is important in each case is to find out if the offence was committed to accomplish the common object of the assembly or was one which the members knew to be likely to be committed. There must be a nexus between the common object and the offence committed. Thus accused in prosecution of common object to kill the father of the victim went to their house. The victim's father, the target of attack going inside to fetch spear to ward off the miscreants. Two miscreants killing the victims, the innocent daughters—held only two persons can be held guilty of murders, the others had no object to kill the victims, they cannot be roped by aid of Section 149 of Indian Penal Code. Decision of Patna High Court, Reversed. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[7675] ● Act done must be shown to have been committed to accomplish common object.—In order to fasten vicarious responsibility on any member of an unlawful assembly, the prosecution must prove, that the act constituting an offence was done in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or the act done is such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly. Section 149 creates a specific offence. It must be strictly construed. There must be a nexus between the common object and the offence committed, and if it is found that the same was committed, to accomplish the common object every member of the assembly will become liable for the same. Allaudin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[7676] ● Common object of unlawful assembly.—In this case the common object of the unlawful assembly as per the charge was to kill PW 6, but as he ran away to fetch a spear to defend himself, his wife PW 5 blocked his way and did not permit him to go out. The common object having thus been frustrated, A-1 and A-2 took out their wrath on the innocent girls, which was no part of the common object of the unlawful assembly. Those two girls were playing outside the house and had not prevented A-1 and A-2 from reaching PW6. Hence the other members of the unlawful assembly could not be punished for the acts of A-1 and A-2. But A-1 and A-2 can be punished for their individual acts. Therefore, the conviction of A-3 to A-6 under section 326/149, IPC is set aside. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[7677] ● Unlawful assembly—Member of—Not to be acquitted for lack of corroboration.—Section 149, IPC, makes every member of an unlawful assembly at the time of committing of the offence guilty of that offence. Thus this section creates a specific and distinct offence. In other words, it created a constructive or vicarious liability of the members of the unlawful assembly for the unlawful acts committed pursuant to the common object by any other member of that assembly. However, the vicarious liability of the members of the unlawful assembly extends only to the act done in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly, or to such offences as the members of the unlawful assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Once the case of a person falls within the ingredients of the section the question, that he did nothing with his own hands would be immaterial. He cannot put forward the defence that he did not with his own hands commit the offence committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Everyone must be taken to have intended the probable and natural results of the combination of the acts, in which he joined. It is not necessary, that all the persons forming an unlawful assembly must do some overt act. When the accused persons assembled together, armed with lathis and were parties to the assault on the complainant party, the prosecution is not obliged to prove which specific overt act was done by which of the accused. This section makes a member of the unlawful assembly responsible as a principal for the acts of each, and all, merely because he is a member of an unlawful assembly. While overt act and active participation may indicate common intention of the person perpetrating the crime, the mere presence in the unlawful assembly may fasten vicariously criminal liability under section 149. It must be noted that the basis of the constructive guilt under section 149 is mere membership of the unlawful assembly, with the requisite common object or knowledge. Lalji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 754 : (1989) 1 SCC 437 : 1989 CrLJ 754.

[7678] ● Unlawful assembly—Member of—Guilty of offence.—Thus, once the Court holds that certain accused persons formed an unlawful assembly and an offence is committed by any member of that assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, every person who at the time of committing that offence was a member of the same assembly is to be held guilty of that offence. After such a finding it would not be open to the Court, to see as to who actually did the offensive act or require the prosecution to prove which of the members did which of the offensive acts. The prosecution would have no obligation to prove it. Lalji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 754 : (1989) 1 SCC 437 : 1989 CrLJ 850.

[7679] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of.—In the instant case, after having held that the appellants formed an unlawful assembly carrying dangerous weapons with the common object of resorting to violence as described in the charge, it was not open to the High Court to acquit some of the members on the ground, that they themselves did not perform any violent act, or that there was no corroboration of their participation. Doing so would amount to forgetting the very nature and essence of the offence created by Section 149, IPC. Lalji v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 754 : (1989) 1 SCC 437 : 1989 CrLJ 850.

[7680] ● Unlawful object—Police resorting to violence while pursuing investigation.—Where a Police Sub-Inspector and some constables were investigating a case of alleged theft and murder and they apprehended one suspect and he volunteered to get the dead body recovered and as he was being taken to the spot, he tried to escape from police custody wielding a lathi but was ultimately overpowered after giving him a beating, but he soon died on the spot, the Sub-Inspector could not be said to be pursuing in his investigation any unlawful object. Therefore, Section 147 or 149, IPC, could not be attracted. The object was either to recover the dead body or the stolen property and it cannot be said to be an unlawful object so as to attract Section 147. If they could not be convicted for an offence under section 147, they also could not be convicted under any Section of the IPC with the aid of Section 149. Hence conviction under section 147 and with the aid of Section 149 cannot be sustained.

The injuries on the body of the deceased were by hard and blunt object and not on any vital part of the body. According to the medical evidence, none of them could be said to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. as the accused could not be convicted with the aid of Section 149, it is very difficult to come to a conclusion about the individual acts of each of the accused. The general nature of the evidence was that torture was done and that there was harassment under the guidance of the SI but there was no precise statement about what injuries were caused by whom and to which person. Consequently the accused are entitled to acquittal. Maiku v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 67 : (1988) 4 SCC 669 : 1989 CrLJ 860 : (1988) 3 Crimes 638.

[7681] ● Common object of committing murder.—In the instant case a rioting took place during the course of which the attack on Pawer also took place in the manner stated above. Therefore, it is difficult to hold that all the persons who were in the crowd or who were running towards the Union office had the common object of committing the murder of the deceased. Taking each stage of the occurrence into consideration and if the same is considered in the background, the persons who entered and ran towards the Union office and if some of them entered the Union office dealt some stick blows, it cannot also be held that all of them had the common object to kill the deceased. The circumstances show it is only during the third stage by the time of which some of the accused have also received the injuries, unlawful assembly developed a common object of inflicting fatal blows on the deceased and this occurrence took place in the open space while the deceased was running away. Taking all the circumstances into consideration the appellants and the 4 other convicts who are identified among the group of persons who entered in the Union office cannot be said to have shared the common object of the group which later surrounded and attacked the deceased. S.P. Sinha v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1992 SC 1751 : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 658 : 1992 CrLJ 2754.

[7682] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object.—"The Doctor who conducted the post-mortem strangely found that except the gun-shot injuries all other injuries including the cutting of the hand were all post-mortem injuries which could have been caused between half to one hour after the death. Thus, medical evidence clearly establishes that all other injuries other than the gun-shot injuries caused by A-1 were inflicted on a dead body. In view of this medical evidence, it becomes difficult to hold that the accused can be convicted for offence of murder though they inflicted injuries only on a dead person. In view of the matter it cannot be said that the ingredients of Section 300, IPC are attracted. So far as the first part of the occurrence is concerned, even according to the prosecution case, none of these accused did anything by way of word or deed in which case it cannot be said that they were members of the unlawful. "Now the question is whether all the accused would constructively be liable for an offence of murder by virtue of Section 149, IPC. So far as A-1 is concerned, it is the consistent version of all the eye-witnesses that he dealt a fatal below on the head with a sword and the medical evidence shows that there was a fracture of skull and the blow must have been very forceful because even the brain was injured.

Therefore his conviction under section 302, IPC is upheld. Now coming to the rest of the accused all the eye-witnesses have made an omnibus allegation against the accused them. Even A-2, according to the eye-witnesses, gave only one blow and that the remaining accused gave stick blows. All these injuries were not serious and were simple... No doubt Section 149, IPC is wide in its sweep but in fixing the membership of the unlawful assembly and in inferring the common object various circumstances also have to be taken into consideration. Having regard to the omnibus allegation, we think it is not safe to convict every one of them for the offence of murder by applying Section 149, IPC. On a careful examination of the entire prosecution case and the surrounding circumstances, the common object of the unlawful assembly was only to cause grievous hurt.

In differentiating the case of A-2 to A-5 to that of A-1, we do not mean to say that for the purpose of Section 149, IPC every one of them should participate and inflict serious injuries but having regard to the special circumstances of this case particularly in sudden manner in which the occurrence took place in the village itself, we think it would be unsafe to make every one of the accused liable for offence of murder by application of Section 149, IPC. Thakore Dolji Vanvirji v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1993 SC 209 (211, 212) : 1993 Supp (2) SCC 534 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 704 : 1992 CrLJ 3953 : JT 1992 (6) SC 66.

[7683] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of committing murder.—So far as the first part of occurrence is concerned even according to the prosecution case, none of the accused did anything by way of words or deed in which case it cannot be said that they were members of the unlawful assembly with the common object of committing the murder and shared the same alongwith A-1. Now coming to the second part of the occurrence the evidence is clear and convincing that these accused were present and stopped the cart and some of them inflicted injuries on PW-10 and A-1 again fired and PW-3 received some pellets injuries. No doubt PW-3 did not say that he received injuries because of the firing of the gun by A-1 but there is evidence to show that he did fire even during the second part of the occurrence. That apart there was a serious injury on PW-10, the mother of the deceased. The Doctor, who examined her, no doubt, described it as simple but the fact remains that it was caused by the sharp-edged weapon. This only shows that common object of the unlawful assembly was to cause at least hurt or grievous hurt because of the incised injuries caused to PW-10 and also that A-1 who was also a member of the unlawful assembly, fired his gun, about which the other members must be attributed the knowledge. In the result, A-1 is convicted under section 302, IPC and sentenced to imprisonment for life. The conviction of the other accused under section 302/149, IPC and sentence of imprisonment for life there under are set aside. Instead they are convicted under section 326/149, I.P.C. and sentenced to 7 years rigorous imprisonment. Jairam v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 92 (94, 95) : 1993 Supp (2) SCC 578 : 1992 CrLJ 3994 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 644 : JT 1992 (5) SC 376 : (1992) 3 Crimes 274.

[7684] ● Murder charge—Common object.—The appellants in the instant case requested Bindeshwari Singh and others not to get field ploughed saying that the land belonged to Raja and if he had any doubt be may get the field demarcated. A-1 went back to the village and came again along with some of the accused all armed with lathis. They again requested Bindeshwari Singh and others not to get the field plough. In the meantime A-13 dealt a lathi blow on the head of Bindeshwari Singh and the gun in his hand fell down. Just then 20 or 25 persons armed with lathis, ballams and farsas emerged from the neighbouring field. Seeing them Bindeshwari Singh and others started running. They were chased and surrounded by the accused who started beating Bindeshwari Singh with lathis, ballams and farsas and he received serious multiple injuries and fell down on the ground and succumbed to the injuries on the spot. Dr. R.L. Nagar PW-16, who conducted the post-mortem found as many as 28 injuries all over the body. Only the first three lacerated injuries were on the head and punctured wounds Nos. 5,6,7, 11 and 12 were on the face but the Doctor did not find any internal damage. The Doctor noted that the teeth were artificial and the denture was complete. Only three teeth of the denture were broken. The Doctor even did not say that the injuries cumulatively were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. There is no injury on any of the vital organs. This only shows that the common object of the unlawful assembly was only to be labour the deceased, the Manager of Raja who was getting the land ploughed. Under these circumstances it is not safe to convict the appellants under section 302/149, IPC. Instead we convict them under section 304, Part II, IPC. Sita Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 350 (351, 352) : 1993 Supp (2) SCC 42 : (1993) SCC (Cri) 384 : (1992) 3 Crimes 620.

[7685] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Inference of.—The next question is whether the common object of the unlawful assembly was to commit murder and whether by applying

Section 149 all of them can be convicted under Sections 302/149, IPC. The prosecution case is that one year old child accidentally received the injury on the head caused by A-11. From the said attack on this child, it cannot be inferred that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to commit murder. Then we are left with the death of Yallappa. Though some of the accused were armed with axes and other cutting weapons, but they did not inflict even a single injury on the deceased. Yallappa was admitted into the Hospital and PW-10, opined that these injuries could have been caused only by a blunt weapon. As already noted, Yallappa died two days later and PW-13, who conducted the post-mortem, also found that the two injuries were on the head resulting in fissured fracture of the skull. He, however, noticed on internal examination fracture of some ribs for which there were no corresponding external injuries. He opined that it could be due to a fall or some pressure being applied. Haramant Laxmappa Kukkadi v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1994 SC 1546 : (1994) 1 SCC 736 : (1994) SCC (Cri) 326 : 1994 CrLJ 1422.

[7686] ● Common object of unlawful assembly to commit murder.—The evidence of the direct witnesses is to the effect that A-1, A-3 and A-10 beat the deceased with sticks. But the Doctor found only two injures in the head and Yallappa died two days later. If really the common object of the unlawful assembly was to commit murder, one would naturally expect such of those accused who were armed with deadly weapons to use them. The nature of the two lacerated injuries found also would show that the assailants did not use much force or cause much violence. As a matter of fact, a number of injuries were found on the eye-witnesses but on deceased Yallappa on whom there were only two lacerated wound. The conviction of the appellants under section 302/149, IPC is set aside and instead they are convicted under section 326/149, IPC. Haramant Laxmappa Kukkadi v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1994 SC 1546 (1548, 1549) : (1994) 1 SCC 736 : (1994) SCC (Cri) 326 : 1994 CrLJ 1422.

[7687] ● Common object of unlawful assembly sharing of.—The common object of the unlawful assembly has to be inferred from the membership, the weapons used and the nature of injuries as well as surrounding circumstances. Going in a body cannot be a decisive factor in inferring the common object. Many other factors as mentioned above have to be taken into consideration. In a given case, the prosecution has to prove that the person concerned was not only a member of the unlawful assembly at some stage but also shared the common object of the unlawful assembly at all the crucial stages. It is highly unsafe to convict all the appellants under Sections 302/149, IPC. Taking the medical evidence into consideration and the nature of the weapons used on the deceased Yallappa, the common object of the unlawful assembly was to cause grievous hurt and therefore the appellants are convicted under section 326 (1)/148, IPC. Haramant Laxmappa Kukkadi v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1994 SC 1546 (1548, 1549) : (1994) 1 SCC 736 : (1994) SCC (Cri) 326 : 1994 CrLJ 1422.

[7688] ● Free-fight—Common object.—As a sequel to an alleged misbehaviour to a lady of one family by a male member of another family, there was a free fight between both the families. The members of the family of accused all were armed by lathis except the appellant accused who was armed with Kalhari (axe) and the appellant accused hit a member of the other family by the blunt side of his axe resulting in fracture of skull resulting in his death. In the free fight the accused appellant and some other members of his party too received injuries. In the circumstances, it is difficult to hold that either clause I or III of Section 300, IPC is attracted. But the appellant accused must be attributed knowledge that by inflicting such a blow he was likely to cause the death of the victim. Instead of convicting him under section 302, IPC. Supreme Court convicted the accused under section 304 Part III IPC. Hanuman v. State of Haryana, AIR 1994 SC 1302 : 1994 CrLJ 2090 (SC).

[7689] ● Free fight—Section 149, IPC not applicable.—In the narration of the facts, it was accused party which pitched upon to kill the deceased and they were armed with deadly weapons. If that be so, one would expect that all of them would have attacked the deceased in the first incident and if any other prosecution party attempted to intervene, they would have been beaten up but that is not the evidence at the trial. It is seen from the evidence that A-1 and A-2 attacked the deceased only in midway while the attack on other parties was going on. Under these circumstances, if we disbelieve the version of the prosecution as spoken in respect of A-3 to A-13, it would be equally difficult and unsafe to accept that part of the evidence that A-1 and A-2 alone attacked the deceased and convict them for the individual offences. State of Haryana v. Chandvir, AIR 1996 SC 3344 : (1996) 8 SCC 678 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 728 : 1996 CrLJ 3197 : JT 1996 (5) SC 205.

[7690] ● Common object of unlawful assembly to commit murder.—Chhatrasal had gone to the shop of Chander (PW-5) for shaving. At that time all the seven accused who were armed with deadly weapons like spear and bamboo sticks formed an unlawful assembly and assaulted Chhatrasal and dragged him on the road. They continued assaulting Chhatrasal even on the road. Chhatrasal sustained bleeding injures and collapsed on the ground and ultimately succumbed to the injuries. The evidence on record clearly establishes the common object of the unlawful assembly to commit murder. The preparation with which they came together and thereafter assaulted Chhatrasal leaves no manner of doubt about their common object. Prem Raj v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1996 SC 3294 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 669 (671) : 1996 CrLJ 2876 : JT 1996 (6) SC 117.

[7691] ● Common intention—Conviction.—In Wathe (William Shaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116) the charge was under section 302/34, IPC, but the only co-accused having been acquitted, the conviction of the left out accused, who was the appellant, was challenged on the ground that the element of common intention having got dropped out, the conviction of the appellant was not sustainable. In the two concurring judgments it was pointed out that the omission to frame a charge or the departure from the charge cannot invalidate conviction unless prejudice has been caused. The same is true about alternative charge, in the present case. Jai Singh alias Bandu v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) SCC (Cri) 672 (673) : JT 1996 (4) SC 728 : (1996) 2 Crimes 127.

[7692] ● Common object of unlawful assembly to attack passengers.—In the instant case, the prosecution case was that sensing some trouble and seeing a mob of armed Muslim boys standing at the entrance of Rajpura Pole, appellant No. 1 stopped the bus just opposite Rajpura Pole with a view to facilitate an attack on the passengers by the said mob. Inspite of the request of the passengers he did not start the bus before the mob could approach it but instead he got down from it went up to the mob and had some discussion with the persons of that mob. Thereafter the mob came near the bus and assaulted the passengers. That was the conspiracy alleged by the prosecution. If really the bus had stopped because of the mob coming in front of it then it was not necessary for him to get down from the bus. He could have disclosed his identity even by remaining in the bus. In view of the evidence of the eye witnesses, the explanation given by him has to be regarded as false. His conduct is also inconsistent with his innocence. The stopping of bus at a place where there was no necessity to stop it, his getting down from the bus and going across the road right up to the entrance of the Rajpura Pole and talking to the persons in the said mob leads to an irresistible inference that he not only facilitated the attack on passengers by stopping the bus just opposite the entrance of Rajpura Pole but also induced the members of the said unlawful assembly to attack the passengers. Thus, an agreement between him and the said unlawful assembly is satisfactorily established by the prosecution and therefore his conviction under section 120-B, IPC also deserves to be upheld. Mehboob Shamsuddin Malik v. State of Gujarat, (1996) 10 SCC 480 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 1353 : 1996 CrLJ 4129 : 1996 (3) Crimes 161 (SC).

[7693] ● Common intention.—It is open to the Court to take recourse to Section 34 of the IPC even if the said section was not specifically mentioned in the charge and instead Section 149, IPC has been included. Of course a finding that the assailant concerned had a common intention with the other accused is necessary for resorting to such a course. Dhanna v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 2478 : (1996) 10 SCC 79 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1192 (1196) : 1996 CrLJ 3516.

[7694] ● Unlawful assembly to assault victim.—No specific role was attributed to those two accused. This finding is contrary to the evidence on record inasmuch as both these accused were the members of the unlawful assembly and did not have the common object as it was implicit in their action i.e. they were armed with deadly weapons; came alongwith other accused and participated in the murderous assault on both the victims. The trial Court and the High Court had erred in law in not holding both these accused guilty with the aid of Section 149, IPC for the substantive offences punishable under section 302, IPC. Hardev Singh v. Harbhej Singh, AIR 1997 SC 1487 (1492) : (1997) 1 SCC 80 : (1997) SCC (Cri) 5 : 1997 CrLJ 727 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 111 : JT 1997 (1) SC 29.

[7695] ● Riot—Testimony of eye-witnesses not to be rejected.—When people are killed during a riot, there may be a possibility of the incident being exaggerated in the testimony of the eye witnesses that should not be a ground to reject their evidence in its entirety. In the cases of rioting, where there are a large number of assailants and a number of witnesses, it is but natural that the testimony of the witnesses may not be identical. What has to be seen is whether the basic features of the occurrence have been similarly viewed and or described by the witnesses in a manner which tallies with the outcome of the riot viz the injuries sustained by the victims and the number of people who are attacked and killed. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Dan Singh, AIR 1997

SC 1654 : (1997) 3 SCC 747 : 1997 CrLJ 1150 : 1997 (1) Scale 626 : 1997 (1) Crimes 121 (SC) : 1997 (1) CCR (SC) 234 : 1997 (2) Supreme 67 : JT 1997 (2) SC 149.

[7696] ● Unlawful assembly—Conviction of accused identified.—Even though a very large number of members of the unlawful assembly had taken part in the attack on the Doms, it would be safe if only those of the respondents should be held to be the members of the unlawful assembly who have been specifically identified by at least four of the eye-witnesses. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Dan Singh, AIR 1997 SC 1654 (1655) : (1997) 3 SCC 747 : (1997) SCC (Cri) 469 : 1997 CrLJ 1150 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 467 : JT 1997 (2) SC 149.

[7697] ● Communal riot—Multiple murder—Spectators not members of unlawful assembly.—It is no doubt true that some of the villagers may have been present at the time of the occurrence who were mere spectators and they could not be regarded as being members of the unlawful assembly. It also happens, when people are killed during a riot, that there may be a possibility of the incident being exaggerated or some innocent persons being named as being part of the assailants party. This may happen wittingly or unwittingly. But just because there may be some inconsequential contradictions or exaggeration in the testimony of the eye-witnesses that should not be a ground to reject their evidence in its entirety. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Dan Singh, AIR 1997 SC 1654 (1661) : (1997) 3 SCC 747 : (1997) SCC (Cri) 469 : 1997 CrLJ 1150 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 467 : JT 1997 (2) SC 149.

[7698] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of causing grievous hurt.—In the instant case the High Court observed that taking a comprehensive view of all the relevant materials the conclusion was irresistible that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to remove babul wood from the scene of offence at any cost even by committing murders, if necessary. Judged in the context of the admitted fact that on the previous evening, A-6 had openly given out that on the next morning they would remove the babul trees, it is obvious that when on the following morning the accused party came to the spot armed with axes, spears, lathis, etc. their purpose was to remove the babul trees at any cost and cause such injury as may be necessary for achieving that object. Alongwith the above facts and circumstances when the injuries sustained by PW-15 are taken notice of, it appears to us that all the accused shared the common object of causing grievous hurt to the members of the complainant party. From the manner in which A suddenly started the assault on Ganapati immediately after all the accused persons reached the spot followed by the assault on Rethoba by A-2 and subsequent assaults on the former by A-3, A-5 and A-6 and the latter by A-4, it cannot be conclusively said that the other accused persons knew that the murders were likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object. The above six accused persons acted beyond the common object of the unlawful assembly. It is true that the mere fact that no overt act has been attributed to the accused persons except A-1 to A-6 in the two murders is not sufficient to exonerate them from the charge under section 302/149, IPC. But applicability of Section 149, IPC would depend on the facts of each case. Tanaji Govind Misal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 174 (177, 178) : (1997) 8 SCC 341 : 1998 CrLJ 340.

[7699] ● Unlawful assembly—Appellant not member of at time of murder.—Where one of eye witnesses stated that appellants were not the members of unlawful assembly at the time of incident of murder of deceased then they cannot be convicted under section 302/149 but liable to be convicted under section 307/149 for attempting to commit murder of deceased. Kotta Prakashan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1998 SC 1521 : (1998) 1 SCC 609 : 1998 CrLJ 1239 (SC) : JT 1997 (10) SC 18 : 1997 (7) Scale 577 : 1997 (10) Supreme 408 : 1998 (2) SLT 183 : 1998 (1) CCR 53 (SC).

[7700] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Determination of.—If the injuries were to be considered in isolation we might have persuaded ourselves to give a second thought to the above submission of the counsel but when the injuries are considered in the context of the facts that there was bitter enmity between the parties, that at an unearthly hour the miscreants armed with various weapons like crow-bars and sticks trespassed into the house of the deceased after breaking open the door, dragged him out of the bed room to the front yard and beat him to death, and that whoever came to his reuse was beaten up, the only conclusion that can be drawn was that they formed the unlawful assembly with the common object of committing murder of the deceased and as soon as their objective was achieved they left the place. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Thakkidiram Reddy, AIR 1998 SC 2702 : (1998) 6 SCC 554 : 1998 CrLJ 4035 at p. 4042 (SC) : JT 1998 (5) SC 398 : 1998 (4) Scale 416 : 1998 (6) SLT 586 : 1998 (2) JCC (SC) 55 : 1998 (6) Supreme 374 : 1998 (3) Crimes 167 (SC).

[7701] ● Sharing of common object of unlawful assembly.—From the judgments of this Court it is evident that to ascertain whether a particular persons shared the common object of the unlawful assembly it is not essential to prove that he committed some illegal overt act or had been guilty of some illegal omission in pursuance of the common object. Once it is demonstrated from all the facts and circumstances of a given case that he shared the common object of the unlawful assembly in furtherance of which some offence was committed or he knew was likely to be committed by any other person, he would be guilty of that offence. Undoubtedly, commission of an overt act by such a person would be one of the tests to prove that he shared the common object, but it is not the sole test. At the dead of night a mob of persons armed with various weapons forcibly trespassed into the house of the deceased after breaking open, the door clearly indicates that they had formed an unlawful assembly with a common object to commit some offence and each of them would be liable for the offence committed to knew likely to be committed by any of the members of the mob. To ascertain what was the common object of the above unlawful assembly, we will advert later. Suffice it to say at this stage, that in the facts and circumstances of this case the six accused (with whom only we are concerned in these appeals) would be guilty for the offence committed by any other member of the mob, in furtherance of the common object, without proof of any overt act committed by them. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Thakkidiram Reddy, AIR 1998 SC 2702 (2707) : (1998) 6 SCC 554 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1488 : 1998 CrLJ 4035 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 537 : JT 1998 (5) SC 398.

[7702] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Sharing of.—Suffice it to say, at this stage, that in the facts and circumstances of this case the six accused (with whom only we are concerned in these appeals) would be guilty for the offence committed by any other members of the mob in furtherance of the common object, without proof of any overt act committed by them. That apart, the manner in which the incident took place clearly proves that even if we were to assume that A2 to A5 and A9 did not share the common object of committing the murder, they, being members of the unlawful assembly certainly knew that the murder was likely to be committed by A1 in prosecutor of the common object so as to make them liable under section 302 read with second part of Section 149, IPC In either view of the matter therefore, we are of the opinion that the High Court was not at all justified in acquitting A2 to A5 and A9 of the charges under Sections 148 and 302/149, IPC. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Thakkidiram Reddy, AIR 1998 SC 2702 : (1998) 6 SCC 554 : 1998 CrLJ 4035 at. 4042 (SC) : JT 1998 (5) SC 398 : 1998 (3) Crimes : 1998 (6) SLT 586 : 1998 (2) JCC (SC) 55 : 1998 (2) Supreme 374.

[7703] ● Common object—Inference of.—Once we accept the evidence of Kedarnath, it becomes clear that all the five accused were acting in prosecution of their common object. As stated earlier they had gone to the place of incident armed with weapons, stopped the bus, put the gun on the chest of the driver Satpal and threatened him to shoot if he drove the bus ahead. They had caught hold of Ram Babu and tried to drag him out. Rammo had fired two shots at him and other accused had assaulted him with other weapons. They had run away together. Therefore, we are of the opinion, the appellants were rightly convicted under section 302 read with Section 149, IPC. Haricharan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1998 SC 244 (246) : (1997) 11 SCC 589 : 1998 CrLJ 398 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 748 : JT 1997 (8) SC 735.

[7704] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object to assault and trespass.—While it true that before a person could be held to be a member of an unlawful assembly, it is not necessary that he should have done some overt act or guilty of some omission in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly; it is well settled that first it must be established that he was a member of the unlawful assembly. When, as in this case, a large number of villagers were present at the scene of the offence and common object and specific acts were attributed only to a few among the nine accused and there was nothing so far as A-4, A-9 and A-5 were concerned as regards common object or overt acts or motive were concerned, question arises whether they were only members of the general crowd or whether there was proof that A-4, A-9 and A-5 went there with the same common object as those accused to whom overt acts were attributed. It has been held that in such a context, and with a view to guard against convicting persons who were not part of the unlawful assembly, it is permissible to consider the nature of the gathering how they assembled and what weapons they were armed with, how they proceeded and further the part played by them. There is nothing in the evidence either expressly or otherwise to say that A-4, A-5 and A-9 came there on 28-11-79 with common object of trespass and assault on PW-1 and Chitra on the fateful day. Sudhir Samanta v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1998 SC 289 : (1998) 1 SCC 581 : 1998 CrLJ 495.

[7705] ● Common intention or object— Necessary ingredient to attract Section 149, IPC absent.—So far as the two other accused A-2 and A-3 are concerned, on going through the evidence of PWs 1 and 8, the prosecution case as against A-2 and A-3 cannot be said to have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. Excepting a bald, vague and general statement that all the accused surrounded and assaulted while ascribing a positive role to different accused persons as to how and with what weapon they had assaulted the deceased and how many blows had been given, but so far as A-2 and A-3 are concerned, there has been no whisper by either PW-1 or PW-8 and even PW-8 in her earlier statement to the police had not stated that A-2 and A-3 were having a stick and a motor-cycle chain in their hands. In this state of affairs it would be unsafe to convict A-2 and A-3 by taking recourse to Section 149, IPC as necessary ingredients to attract the said section as against A-2 and A-3 are totally absent. Manoj alias Bhanu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1999 SC 1620 : (1999) 4 SCC 268 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 533 (538) : 1999 CrLJ 2284 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 301 : JT 1999 (2) SC 580.

[7706] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object to cause murder.—The question whether the group of persons can be made liable for having caused murder of one or two persons by virtue of Section 149, IPC depends upon the facts and circumstances under which the murder took place. Whether the members of an unlawful assembly really had the common object to cause the murder of the deceased has to be decided on the basis of the nature of weapons used by such members, the manner and sequence of attack made by those members on the deceased and the settings and surroundings under which the occurrence took place. The evidence of PW-1 relating to the death of the first deceased indicates that all the accused persons were armed with sickles, battle axes, daggers and sticks and emerged from the western side and after A-1 hacked deceased 1 on the head the other 8 accused cut him and stabbed him. The number of injuries on the deceased as per the post-mortem report corroborates the oral testimony. The manner in which the accused persons appeared at the scene of occurrence with lethal weapons in their hands and mercilessly assaulted the deceased after surrounding him clearly exhibits that their common object was nothing but to kill the deceased. Rachamreddi Chenna Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 994 : (1999) 3 SCC 97 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 384 (387, 388) : 1999 CrLJ 1445.

[7707] ● Omission to frame charge.—Non-framing of a charge would not vitiate conviction if no prejudice is caused thereby to the accused. The trial should be fair to the accused, fair to the State and fair to the vast mass of the people for whose protection penal laws are made and administered. The Code of Criminal Procedure is a procedural law and is designed to further the ends of justice and not to frustrate them by the introduction of endless technicalities. In the present case the accused were tried on the prosecution version that all of them went at 3.30 p.m. to the field of the deceased; they picked up quarrel with him, inflicted injuries on the deceased as narrated by the prosecution witnesses. Accused 3 to 6 participated; the statements were recorded under section 313, CrPC, and the questions were asked to the effect that they jointly came at 3.30 p.m. and caused injuries to the deceased as stated by the prosecution witnesses and the role assigned to accused Nos. 3 to 6 was also specifically mentioned. Hence it is apparent that no prejudice is caused to the accused who were charged for the offence under section 302 by not framing the charge for the offence punishable under section 302 read with Section 149, IPC. In this view of the matter, the conviction of the accused nos. 3 to 6 for the offence under section 325 read with Section 149 cannot be said to be in any way illegal which requires to be set aside. Kummari Brahmaiah v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 775 : (1999) 2 SCC 522 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 281 (288) : 1999 CrLJ 1134 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 227.

[7708] ● Unlawful assembly with common object to commit murder.—From the evidence it transpires that the accused persons had gone to the field and were ploughing. Obviously at that point of time it cannot be said that they constituted an unlawful assembly within the meaning of Section 141, IPC inasmuch as it has not been established by the prosecution that they had one of the five specified objects enumerated in Section 141, IPC as their common objects. From the evidence of PWs-1, 3 and 4, it is difficult so as to conceive that at any later point of time the accused persons can be said to have nurtured one of the five specified objects as their common objects. This being the position and in the absence of establishing the fact that the accused persons constituted an unlawful assembly, their conviction by taking recourse to Section 149, IPC is unsustainable. Section 149 postulates an assembly of five or more persons having a common object, namely, one of those named in Section 141 and then the doing of acts by members of the assembly in prosecution of that object. In view of our conclusion that there was no unlawful assembly, conviction of the appellants under section 149, IPC cannot be sustained. Ramashish Yadav v.

State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 3830 : (1999) 8 SCC 555 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 9 : 2000 CrLJ 12 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 665 : JT 1999 (6) SC 560.

[7709] ● Common object of liquidating deceased.—Starting with convergence of appellants at the bus stop; presumably waiting for the return of the deceased after his day's work, the fact that all were variously armed, the fact that they all joined together in inflicting blows on the fallen victim and also on his wife and son who rushed to the rescue of their bread-winner, and the fact that they all jointly dragged the deceased up to the pyre and set him ablaze, are very material in deciding whether they all had the common object of liquidating the deceased on that very evening. There is no reason to dissent from the finding of the High Court that all the appellants are liable to be convicted of the offences found against them. Hukam Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 7 SCC 490 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1416 (1422) : 2001 CrLJ 511 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 759.

[7710] ● Unlawful assembly—Prosecution of common object.—An accused whose case falls within the terms of Section 149, IPC cannot put forward the defence that he did not with his own hand commit the offence committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Everyone must be taken to have intended the probable and natural results of the combination of the acts in which he had joined. It is not necessary in all cases that all the persons forming an unlawful assembly must do some overt act. Umesh Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 2111 : (2000) 6 SCC 89 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1026 (1029) : 2000 CrLJ 3167.

[7711] ● Common object of committing murder—Forming of unlawful assembly.—Both sections namely, Section 34 and Section 149, IPC deal with the vicarious liability of an accused for an offence committed by another. Section 149, IPC provides for the guilt of every member of an unlawful assembly, if in prosecution of a common object an offence is committed, or which the members know would be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object.

The similarity of the sections lies in the requirement of a common object or intention or a pre-arranged plan in furtherance of which the act is done. The difference lies in the degree of actual participation required in the criminal enterprise. The emphasis is on physical presence, and promotion or facilitation of the crime. As far as Section 149, IPC is concerned, in addition to the common object, merely being a member of an unlawful assembly within the meaning of Section 141, IPC may be sufficient. In the instant case, the accepted evidence was that there was an unlawful assembly of all the accused, which, with the common object or pre-meditated plan of murdering Kulwant Singh and Bidhi Shankar, waylaid, chased and attacked them resulting in their death. All the elements of both Ss. 149 and 34, IPC were there. The High Court found the ingredients of both Sections 34 and 149, IPC proved as far as all the accused were concerned, when it said. "It can well be inferred that the accused on coming to know that Jagjit Singh and Bidhi Shankar had started on their motorcycles towards Ismailabad, pre-meditated and collected near the house of Darshan Singh and in order to take revenge of the murder of Darshan Singh brother in prosecution of the common object which was to kill Kulwant Singh and Bidhi Shankar did commit the murder of both of them." This should have been sufficient to hold all the accused guilty under Ss. 34 and 149, IPC. The conclusion is not only contradicting to its own findings but is based on an erroneous interpretation of both Section 34 and 149, IPC as authoritatively laid down. The order of the High Court acquitting Gurnam Singh and Iqbal Singh therefore, cannot stand. Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 1833 : (2000) 4 SCC 484 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 991 (1003, 1004) : 2000 CrLJ 2212 : JT 2000 (4) SC 114.

[7712] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object.—Where the accused had assembled together, armed with guns and lathis and were parties to the assault on the deceased and others, the prosecution is not obliged to prove which specific overt act was done by which of the accused. Indeed the provisions of Section 149, IPC will make it clear that it takes an accused out of the region of abetment and makes him responsible as a principal for each and all merely because he is a member of unlawful assembly. Umesh Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 2111 : (2000) 6 SCC 89 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1026 (1030) : 2000 CrLJ 3167.

[7713] ● Offence—Committal of in prosecution of common object.—The liability of other members for the offence committed during the continuance of the occurrence rests upon the fact whether the other members knew before hand that the offence actually committed was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Such knowledge can reasonably be intended from the nature of the assembly, arms or behaviour, or before the scene of action. If such knowledge may not reasonably be attributed to the other members of the assembly then their liability for the offence committed during the occurrence does not arise. Umesh Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 2111 : (2000) 6 SCC 89 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 1026 (1030) : 2000 CrLJ 3167.

[7714] ● Common object—Sharing of.—It is within the radius of permissibility that the Court can rely on a factual presumption for the purpose of reaching one conclusion. Thus, the confessional statement, if admissible and reliable, can be used by the Court for drawing inferences as to whether the confessor shared the common object with the rest of the members of the unlawful assembly. For that purpose the Court will take into account other materials available in evidence. There is no warrant for the proposition that the Court cannot proceed from the confession even a wee bit for the purpose of knowing whether the confessor had entertained any particular intention while perpetrating the acts admitted by him in his confession. Whether such intention could have focused on the common object of the unlawful assembly which he joined depends upon other facts. Lokeman Shah v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2001 SC 1706 : (2001) 5 SCC 235 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 829 (838) : 2001 CrLJ 2196 : JT 2001 (4) SC 520.

[7715] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Sharing of.—It is an overstatement of law that when a morcha moved on to a stage when it became unlawful any person who was a member of that morcha must be presumed to share the common object of the unlawful assembly. The Court must enter satisfaction that a particular accused was a member of the unlawful assembly either through his active participation or otherwise. It must further be shown that he shared the common object of the assembly. Of course the Court can draw necessary inference from the conduct, but mere presence in the assembly is hardly sufficient to draw any adverse inference against him. The question whether or not the offence having been committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly is one of fact, depending upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Lokeman Shah v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2001 SC 1706 : (2001) 5 SCC 235 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 829 (839) : 2001 CrLJ 2196 : JT 2001 (4) SC 520.

[7716] ● Accused joining unlawful assembly midway.—Section 142, IPC pertains to a person who intentionally joins an unlawful assembly and continues to involve himself in it. The only condition which the section envisages is that the person who joins the unlawful assembly should have been aware of the facts which rendered such assembly unlawful. If he knew that an unlawful assembly had been formed with a common object and if he has chosen to join it en route to its destination the person joining midway can also be fastened with the vicarious liability envisaged in Section 149, IPC, unless he drops himself out before reaching such destination.

There is no doubt that appellant Lokeman Shah joined the unlawful assembly knowing fully well that it had already become unlawful as its common object was to chase the persons whom the rioters believed to be responsible for defilement of the mosque. It is immaterial that the deceased V.K. Mehta had no part in the destruction or defilement of any mosque, but the rioters believed him to be the one. We must bear in mind that the chasers carried with them explosive and lethal weapons. In all such broad circumstances it would be inane to presume that the common object of those chasers was something less than finishing the prey whom they were chasing after. Lokeman Shah v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2001 SC 1706 : (2001) 5 SCC 235 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 829 (839, 840) : 2001 CrLJ 2196 : JT 2001 (4) SC 520.

[7717] ● Common object sharing of with accused.—None of them had inflicted any injury to the deceased. The question, therefore, is whether they shared a common object with A10-Munshi Ram. The broad features of the occurrence would indicate that question of attacking the deceased emanated only after A10-Munshi Ram hurled the first question to him as he has no right on the land whereupon the wall was constructed. It was thereafter only that A10-Munshi Ram exhorted the order present to attack the deceased saying that he was the root-cause of all troubles. But the fact that none of the appellants attacked the deceased is an indicator that none of them shared the common object along with A10. It is pertinent to point out that all of them did not come together, instead they came from different directions. The mere fact that they attacked the kith and kin of the deceased, who came forward and assaulted some of the appellants, is not sufficient enough to reach a definite conclusion that the appellants shared common object with A10-Munshi Ram. Rajinder Meena v. State of Rajasthan, 2001 (2) SLT 598 : (2001) 1 CCR 341.

[7718] ● Common object—Sharing of.—Even if some other persons also ran behind those three assailants, it is a very difficult exercise for the Court to conclude that those other persons who ran behind the three assailants shared the common object of murdering the deceased. It would have been easier for the prosecution to succeed if PW-3 had also said that alongwith the three assailants the other persons also ran. The difficult situation for the prosecution now is that if we have to place reliance on the testimony of PW-3, the conviction has to be confined to three persons mentioned above and the rest of the persons cannot be convicted. When the perused the medical evidence in this case, we found that all the injuries sustained by the deceased could be attributed to the actions alleged against the aforesaid three persons. This is yet another reason creating difficulty for the prosecution so far as the present appellants are concerned. On a conspectus of the whole evidence, we entertain a reasonable doubt as to the degree of involvement of the present appellants. We are unable to hold, with reasonably certainty, that these five persons also shared the common object alongwith the three principal assailants for murdering Begru Manjhi. In view of the said area of reasonable doubt, we are disposed to give the benefit of it to the appellants. Fagu Manjhi v. State of Bihar, (2001) 10 SCC 692 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1045.

[7719] ● Murder—Common object.—We entertain doubt as to whether the accused Khargi and Shobhi would have shared the common object to murder Tota Ram. Evidence of the eyewitnesses has shown only that those two persons ran and remained behind the deceased. In spite of the fact that they were armed with sticks none of them used those weapons to inflict at least one beating on the deceased. None of them said anything at the spot. None of them prevented the deceased from running away nor did they step forward to stand in front of the deceased. In the aforesaid broad situation it is difficult to conclude that the accused Khargi and Shobhi ran only because they also shared the common object with the other assailants. Perhaps they would have run to rescue the deceased, but if that is too much to imagine at least they would have run to see what was going to happen. To say that their running was only with the common object along with the other assailants to murder the deceased we require something more to have been done by them. As the prosecution witnesses did not attribute anything more to those two accused, we find it difficult to confirm the conviction of those two persons with the help of Section 149 of the Indian Penal Code.

In the result we confirm the conviction and sentence passed on the accused Pyarey and the accused Gaindan for the offence under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code. But we allow the appeal in respect of the accused Khargi and the accused Shabhi and the conviction and sentence passed on them are set aside. Pyarey v. State of U.P., (2001) 10 SCC 487 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 430 (431-32).

[7720] ● Murder—Unlawful assembly—Common object.—The unlawful assembly was to murder the victims. But at the same time it is not possible for the appellants to persuade us in holding that the members of the unlawful assembly were not aware that consequence of their wanton acts would include death of at least some of the persons. For the aforesaid reasons we bring down the offence to Section 304, Part I read with Section 149 of the IPC. The said alteration would call for alteration in the quantum of sentence also. A plea was made that the sentence may be limited to the period already undergone by the accused. Some of them had undergone only imprisonment for a couple of years whereas some others are still languishing in Jail. For the application of a uniform sentence, each one of them must be sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of seven years. Umrao Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2002) 9 SCC 215 : 2001 CrLJ 4947 (4947, 4948) (SC).

[7721] ● Common object—Existence of.—Section 149 is an exception to the criminal law whereunder a person can be convicted and sentenced for his vicarious liability only on proof of his being a member of the unlawful assembly, sharing the common object, notwithstanding as to whether he had actually participated in the commission of the crime or not. Common object does not require prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack. An unlawful object can develop after the accused assembled., The existence of the common object of the unlawful assembly has to be ascertained in the facts and circumstances of each case. It is true that the mere presence of the accused is not sufficient to hold them guilty for the sharing of common object as the prosecution has to further establish that they were not mere by-standers but in fact were sharing the common object. When a concerted attack is made by a large number of persons, it is often difficult to determine the actual part played by each of the accused but on that account for an offence committed by a member of the unlawful assembly in the prosecution of the common object or for an offence which was known to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object, persons proved to be members cannot escape the consequences arising from the doing of that act which amounts to an offence. There may not be a common object in a sudden fight but in a planned attack on the victim, the presence of the common object amongst the persons forming the unlawful assembly can be inferred. Chandra Bihari Gautam v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 1836 : (2002) 9 SCC 208 : JT 2002 (4) SC 62 : 2002 CrLJ 2541 : 2002 (2) Crimes 222 (SC).

[7722] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object to commit murder.—Section 149 has two parts. First part deals with the commission of an offence by a member of unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly and the second part dales with the liability of the members of the unlawful assembly who knew that an offence was likely to be committed in prosecution of the object for which they had assembled. Even if the common object of the unlawful assembly is stated to be apprehending Nawlesh Singh only, the fact that the accused persons had attacked the house of the complainant at the dead of the night and were armed with deadly weapons including the guns, and used petrol bombs proves beyond doubt that they knew that in prosecution of the alleged initial common object murders were likely to be committed. The knowledge of the consequential action in furtherance of the initial common object is sufficient to attract the applicability of Section 149 for holding the members of the unlawful assembly guilty for the commission of the offence by any member of such assembly. In this case the appellants, along with others, have been proved to have formed unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to commit murder and arson and in prosecution of the said common object they raided the house of the informant armed with guns and committed offence. The Courts below have, therefore, rightly held that the accused persons formed an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to commit murder of the informant and his family members and in prosecution of the said common object six persons were killed. The appellants were also proved to have hired the services of some extremists for the purposes of eliminating the family of the complainant. Chandra Bihari Gautam v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 1836 : (2002) 9 SCC 208 : 2002 CrLJ 2541 : JT 2002 (4) SC 62 : 2002 (2) Crimes 222 (SC).

[7723] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Existence of.—In the instant case the prosecution has established the existence of the common object of the unlawful assembly for attracting the applicability of Section 149 of the Indian Penal Code and the mere fact that no overt act has been attributed to each of the accused persons is not sufficient to hold that charge under section 149 of the Indian Penal Code has not proved against them. Chandra Bihari Gautam v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 1836 : (2002) 9 SCC 208 : 2002 CrLJ 2541 : JT 2002 (4) SC 62 : 2002 (2) Crimes 222 (SC) : 2002 (2) SCR 1164.

[7724] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object to inflict multiple injuries.—The participation of all the accused persons, including the two appellants before us, in the incident is amply proved. All the accused persons had formed an unlawful assembly, the members whereof were armed with deadly weapons. The two accused appellants had aimed at vital organs of the body of the deceased while inflicting injuries and the injuries caused by them have proved to be fatal. The attack by the accused persons was indiscriminate and they were determined to kill the deceased. While inflicting injuries they chased the deceased and did not allow him to escape and they continued to assault him even after he had fallen on the ground. In this background alternative submission of the learned counsel for the appellants that the conviction of the two accused-appellants should have been under section 304 Part II of the IPC as they have been found to have inflicted only one injury each while the deceased has died on account of multiple injuries suffered by him cannot be accepted. However, in our opinion the accused appellants should have convicted more appropriately under Section 302 read with 149, IPC rather than under section 302, IPC alone. Mohd. Yakub v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 2793 : (2002) 9 SCC 25 : 2002 CrLJ 3731 : JT 2002 (5) SC 400 : 2002 (5) Scale 397 : 2002 (5) Supreme 142 : 2002 (3) Crimes 57 (SC).

[7725] ● Common object to cause murder.—A vivisection of the common object as between those accused armed with lethal weapons like axes and iron rods and the three accused who had only wooden sticks is called for on the fact situation in this case because the evidence of the four eyewitnesses mentioned above is not very much helpful in discerning whether A5-Tukaram Sambhaji Jarag, A9-Balu Keraba Jarag and A10-Bhika Sambha Jarag really entertained the common object of murder. We take this view particularly in the light of the finding rendered by the trial Court that the offence has not escalated beyond what the accused had done as against PW13-Laxman Jarag. We are inclined to give the benefit of doubt to A5-Tukaram Sambhaji Jarag, A9-Balu Keraba Jarag and A10-Bhika Sambha Jarag regarding the common object attributed to them for causing the murder of Narayan Jarag. Lalu Shiva Jarag v. State of Maharashtra, JT 2002 (2) SC 127.

[7726] ● Unlawful assembly—Sharing of common object.—Generally no direct evidence is available regarding the existence of common object which, in each case, has to be ascertained from the attending facts and circumstances. When a concerted attack is made on the victim by a large number of persons armed with deadly weapons, it is often difficult to determine the actual part played by each offender and easy to hold that such persons attacked the victim had the common object for an offence which was known to be likely to be committed in prosecution of such an object. It is true that a mere innocent person, in an assembly of persons of being a by-stander does not make such person a member of an unlawful assembly but where the persons forming the assembly are shown to be having identical interest in pursuance of which some of them come armed, others though not armed would, under the normal circumstances, be deemed to be the members of the unlawful assembly. In this case the accused persons have been proved to be on inimical terms with the complainant-party. The enmity between the parties had been aggravated on account of litigation with respect to the dispute over the mango trees. Accused persons who came on the spot are shown to have come armed with deadly weapons. The facts and circumstances of the case unequivocally prove the existence of the common object of such persons forming the unlawful assembly who had come on the spot and attacked the complainant party in consequence of which three precious lives were lost. The High Court was, therefore, justified in holding that the accused persons, involved in the occurrence, had shared the common object. Bhagwan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 1621 : (2002) 4 SCC 85 : 002 CrLJ 2024 : JT 2000 (3) SC 387 : 2002 (3) Scale 169 : 2002 (2) Supreme 567 : 22002 (2) Crimes 42 (SC).

[7727] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object to give hard beating.—When a large number of persons were armed only with sticks of pelted stones which they could find any where either near the fields or on their way and it was not established as to who specifically attacked whom, it is not clear as to whether the intention was to cause death. It is more probable that the intention was to give hard beating only. Even if we accept the case that the deceased-Vithal was pursued right upto 'wada', the object of the mob was to teach him a stern lesson who is said to be a bully in the village. In the circumstances and in the light of evidence, we must hold that the reasonable inference to be drawn is that the common object was to commit offences under section 323 and Section 325 read with Section 147/149, IPC and not under section 302 read with Section 149, IPC. The trial Court as well as High Court appear to have lost sight of crucial aspects. Bhima v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 3086 : (2002) 7 SCC 33 : 2002 CrLJ 4293 : JT 2002 (6) SC 322 : 2002 (6) Scale 140 : 2002 (5) Supreme 555 : 2002 (5) SLT 46 : 2002 (4) Crimes 39 (SC).

[7728] ● Formation of unlawful assembly and existence of common object.—There is overwhelming evidence on the prosecution side to show that the appellants came to the place of incident in a group and caused various injuries to deceased Thota Nagaraju and Thota Abbayi. These witnesses were extensively cross-examined, but nothing could be brought out in their evidence to show that they were either not present or that they had not seen the incident. Their evidence also would show that most of the accused were armed with various deadly weapons and that they had come to the scene of occurrence with purpose to cause the death of the two deceased persons and to cause injuries to others. It is proved beyond doubt that the appellant formed themselves into an unlawful assembly and their common object was clearly discernible from the way in which they caused the death of the two deceased persons. Rachapalli Abbulu v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 1805 : (2002) 4 SCC 208 : JT 2002 (4) SC 39 : 2002 (3) Scale 377 : 2002 (3) Supreme 172 : 2002 (3) SLT 164 : 2002 (5) SRJ 218 : 2002 (2) Crimes 179.

[7729] ● Unlawful assembly—Accused person becoming less than five.—In view of the fact that three accused persons referred to above were acquitted by the trial Court itself of the charge under section 302/149 out of the seven accused persons and no other person is said to have participated in the occurrence as mentioned in the prosecution case and evidence, and as the number of accused persons becomes less than five, there cannot be said to be any unlawful assembly, as such conviction of appellant Nos. 2 to 4 under section 392/149 becomes unwarranted. Dhupa Chamer v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 2834 : (2002) 6 SCC 506 : 2002 CrLJ 3764 (SC) : 2002 (4) Crimes 65 (SC).

[7730] ● Word "Object"—Meaning of.—The crucial question to determine is whether the assembly consisted of five or more persons and whether the said persons entertained one or more of the common objects, as specified in Section 141. It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that unless an overt act is proved against a person, who is alleged to be a member of unlawful assembly, it cannot be said that he is a member of an assembly. The only thing required is that he should have understood that the assembly was unlawful and was likely to commit any of the acts which fall within the purview of Section 141. The word 'object' means the purpose or design and, in order to make it 'common', it must be shared by all. In other words, the object should be common to the persons, who compose the assembly, that is to say, they should all be aware of it and concur in it. Gangadhar Behera v. State of Orissa, AIR 2002 SC 3633 : (2002) 8 SCC 381 : 2003 CrLJ 414 : JT 2002 (8) SC 135 : 2002 (7) Supreme 276.

[7731] ● Common object distinguished from common intention.—'Common object' is different from a 'common intention' as it does not require a prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack. It is enough if each has the same object in view and their number is five or more and that they act as an assembly to achieve that object. The 'common object' of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it, and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. It may be gathered from the course of conduct adopted by the members of the assembly. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined, keeping in view the nature of the assembly, the arms carried by the members, and the behaviour of the members at or near the scene of the incident. It is not necessary under law that in all cases of unlawful assembly, with an unlawful common object, the same must be translated into action or be successful. Under the explanation to Section 141, an assembly which was not unlawful when it was assembled, may subsequently become unlawful. It is not necessary that the intention or the purpose, which is necessary to render an assembly an unlawful one comes into existence at the outset. The time of forming an unlawful intent is not material. An assembly which, as its commencement or even for some time thereafter, is lawful, may subsequently become unlawful. In other words it can develop during the course of incident at the spot co-instant. Gangadhar Behera v. State of Orissa, AIR 2002 SC 3633 : (2002) 8 SCC 381 : 2003 CrLJ 41 : JT 2002 (7) SC 135 : 2002 (7) Scale 402 : 2002 (7) Supreme 276.

[7732] ● Common object—How and when formed.—A common object may be formed by express agreement after mutual consultation, but that is by no means necessary. It may be formed at any stage by all or few members of the assembly and the other members may just join and adopt it. Once formed, it need not continue to be the same. It may be modified or altered or abandoned at any stage. Gangadhar Behera v. State of Orissa, AIR 2002 SC 3633 : (2002) 8 SCC 381 : 2003 CrLJ 41 : JT 2002 (8) SC 135 : 2002 (7) Supreme 276 : (2002) 7 Scale 402.

[7733] ● Expression "in prosecution of common object"—How to construe.—The expression 'in prosecution of common object' as appearing in Section 149 have to be strictly construed as equivalent to 'in order to attain the common object'. It must be immediately connected with the common object by virtue of nature of the object. There must be community of object and the object may exist only up to a particular stage, and not thereafter. Members of an unlawful assembly may have community of object up to certain point beyond which they may differ in their objects and the knowledge, possessed by each member of what is likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object may vary not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object, and as a consequence of this the effect of Section 149, IPC may be different on different members of the same assembly: Gangadhar Behera v. State of Orissa, AIR 2002 SC 3633 : (2002) 8 SCC 381 : 2003 CrLJ 41 : JT 2002 (8) SC 135 : 2002 (7) Supreme 276 : (2002) 7 Scale 402.

[7734] ● Common intention distinguished from common object.—Insofar as other appellants are concerned, the finding of the High Court is that there is no specific allegations against them. There is no evidence whatsoever to establish that any criminal act was done by them in furtherance of common intention. There were about 50 persons. Nothing was shown before the Sessions Court or the High Court or even before this Court to establish common intention of the remaining accused. The common intention is different than the common object. The charge against them is not under section 149, IPC. Even otherwise, it is not shown that the ingredients of Section 149, had been established. There is total absence of evidence both in respect of Section 34 as well as Section 149, IPC. Therefore it is not possible to confirm the conviction of the appellants other than two accused. Jhapsa Kabari v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 312 (314) : (2001) 10 SCC 94 : 2002 CrLJ 587 : (2002) 1 Crimes 205.

[7735] ● Common object—Sharing of by accused.—Previous enmity coupled with the joining in a group constituting an unlawful assembly going to the scene of occurrence armed with lethal weapons and participating in the attack by mercilessly beating the deceased after surrounding him, will sufficiently establish that the common object was nothing but to kill the deceased. The facts of the case on hand sufficiently establish not only previous enmity, but also a premeditated and concerted move to wreck vengeance and the deadly nature of weapons carried by the group of accused, who formed by themselves into an unlawful assembly coupled with the evidence on record that on seeing the deceased-Ramprasad, Sitaram (PW-4) and Rajendra Singh (PW-5) the accused-Man Singh exhorted co-accused shouting "maro salo ko" and all the accused thereupon bounced upon and assaulted the complainant party prove the common object, beyond reasonable doubt. When Rajendra Singh (PW-5) came forward to save the victim from the blows inflicted by Man Singh, Om Prakash appears to have assaulted him by farsa on the head and all the accused jointly seem to have assaulted the victim. The medical evidence disclosed altogether eleven wounds on the body of the victim of which injuries 1 to 3 were considered to be dangerous to life. Sitaram (PW-4) and Rajendra Singh (PW-5) examined by the Doctor also were found to have sustained seven and one injuries, respectively on their body. The conduct of the appellants both before and during the course of occurrence in this case sufficiently demonstrated that the accused shared the common object and engaged themselves in furtherance of the same. Consequently, no exception whatsoever could be taken to the findings recorded by the Courts below convicting the appellants under section 302 read with Section 149, IPC. Rameshwar Dayal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 754 : (2002) 3 SCC 45 : 2002 CrLJ 1016 : (2002) 1 Crimes 287.

[7736] ● Common object to Kill deceased.—Under Section 149, IPC, the liability of the other members of the unlawful assembly for the offence committed during the continuance of the occurrence, rests upon the fact whether the other members knew before hand that the offence actually committed was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Common object has to be distinguished from the common intention. There is no question of common intention in Section 149 of the IPC. Where no injury is inflicted pursuant to the common object to kill the deceased, but caused only when provoked by one of the witnesses, the members of the unlawful assembly cannot be held guilty for the commission of the offence of murder. Sukhan Raut v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 319 : (2001) 10 SCC 284 : 2002 CrLJ 560 : (2002) 1 Crimes 186.

[7737] ● Murder—Unlawful assembly— Common object.—The murder has been committed in broad daylight between 12.00 noon and 1 p.m. Witnesses and accused are known persons. The accused persons had formed an unlawful assembly armed with formidable weapons; came to the house of Bhima; broke down the wall and entered into the house. The found Bhima not in the house and butchered his two children by inflicting axe injuries. Deduced from the aforesaid facts and circumstances, it is quite apparent that the accused had formed an unlawful assembly with the object to eliminate Bhima to take avenge of long-standing animosity and the quarrel ensued 7-8 days prior to the incident. It is quite apparent, therefore, that the accused persons had formed an unlawful assembly with the common object to take avenge from Bhima and his family members and committed the murder. The common object to murder Bhima and his family can be gathered from the formidable arms carried by the accused, entering the house by breaking the wall and finding Bhima not there, butchering his children. Gathered from the above facts and circumstances and the evidence on record, it cannot be said that the four accused joined the assembly as a matter of idle curiosity or they were passive onlookers without intending to entertain the common object of that assembly. The Trial Court after careful appreciation of the evidence, gave a clear finding that two accused persons Dhulla and Balji entered into Bhima's house after breaking the rear wall of the house and the remaining three accused persons Nathu, Heera and Dheera entered through the door. This would go to show that all the five accused had entered into the house of Bhima. The question whether two accused came to the house after breaking the rear wall and the remaining accused persons entered through the door is inconsequential for determining their common object. From the fact that all the accused persons formed an unlawful assembly and entered into the house of PW-1 with formidable weapons, it is clearly deducible that they formed the common object to eliminate Bhima and his family. As already noticed, the common object to kill Bhima can be gathered from the formidable weapons which the accused carried and their aggressive behaviour of entering the house by breaking down the wall. No other conclusion is possible. State of Rajasthan v. Nathu, AIR 2002 SC 3159 : (2003) 5 SCC 537 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1156 : JT 2002 (6) SC 570 : (2002) 4 Crimes 209.

[7738] ● Death—Causing of in prosecution of common object of unlawful assembly.—If death had been caused in prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, it is not necessary to record a definite and specific finding as to which particular accused out of the members of the unlawful assembly caused the fatal injury. Once an unlawful assembly has come into existence, each member of the assembly becomes vicariously liable for the criminal act of any other member of the assembly committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. State of Rajasthan v. Nathu, AIR 2002 SC 3159 : (2003) 5 SCC 537 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1156 : JT 2002 (6) SC 570 : (2002) 4 Crimes 209.

[7739] ● Common object—Absence of.—The genesis of the incident commenced with the first accused entering the field of the deceased and uprooting stealthily some of the standing crops and only when he was caught and a tussle ensued and "hullas" were raised, they brought the other accused suddenly into the scene. The accused were initially asking PW-10, the deceased and other members of his family, who were present, to release A-1 and it is only when the deceased refused to release him stating that he will be put before the Panchayati in the village and till then he will not be released, the situation became aggravated and on the alleged exhortation by A-5, the assault on the victim took place, all on the spur of the moment. There is absolutely no evidence whatsoever to attribute any common object or such a thing having activated all of them to join in furtherance of the object either before arrival or during the course of occurrence as such. Hence, the charge under Section 149, IPC has to fail and the conviction thereunder is liable to be and shall stand set aside. Malhu Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 2137 : (2002) 5 SCC 724 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1190 : 2002 CrLJ 2819.

[7740] ● Common intention formation of.—From the evidence on record it appears that when Accused 1 was not released by the complainant party, Accused 2, 3, 4 and 5 formed a common intention to commit an offence, in furtherance of which they used weapons like spears and lathis and inflicted injuries on the vital part of the body of Satilal, deceased.

The prosecution has established that the four accused persons joined in the actual doing of the act which resulted in the death of Sotilal and the common intention though not initially in existence, was formed during the transaction on the spot. The existence of the common intention amongst the aforesaid accused persons has been established from the surrounding circumstances and from their conduct on the spot. The absence of the charge under Section 34 against the aforesaid accused persons would not make any difference because on the proved facts and the evidence available on record, their intention to commit an offence has been established. Failure to charge the accused under Section 34, who stood charged under Section 149, IPC would not result in any prejudice to them. Malhu Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 2137 : (2002) 5 SCC 724 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1190 : 2002 CrLJ 2819.

[7741] ● Common object to Kill deceased.—Having regard to the fact the witnesses are closely related persons and there is a history of bitter enmity between the deceased and the accused partly, as revealed from the FIR coupled with the evidence of PW-10, we feel that the evidence of PWs 10 and 3 should have been scrutinized with greater care and circumspection as there was every possibility of exaggeration and embellishment. Viewed in this background and going by the state of evidence on record, a reasonable doubt arises on the veracity of prosecution version that each of the appellants armed with weapons went to the scene of occurrence with a view to kill or injure the victim already injured in the cause of first incident. On a cumulative consideration of all these factors, a serious doubt arises as to the correctness of the prosecution case that each of the accused (excluding Srinivas Pandey and Ram Parvesh Pandey) accompanied Dinesh Pandey in prosecution of their common object to injure or kill the deceased. The possibility of some being present cannot be ruled out; but, who they are in the question. On this aspect, it is difficult to eliminate chaff from the grain on an analysis of the evidence. The anxiety on the part of the prosecution to implicate as many members of the opposite faction as possible is quite apparent Srinivas Pandey and Ram Pravesh Pandey read are liable to be convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. The absence of a specific charge under Section 34, IPC cannot be said to have caused any prejudice to the two appellants as the facts giving rise to constructive criminal liability were well known to them from the beginning and the case which they have to meet under Section 34 is substantially the same as the prosecution put forward. Shiva Shankar Pandey v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 3151 : (2002) 7 SCC 229 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1676 : 2002 CrLJ 4658 : JT 2002 (6) SC 570 : (2002) 4 Crimes 209 (SC).

[7742] ● No material to show appellant shared any common object.—There is no material whatsoever to hold any one of these appellants shared any common object of either Govind Rai, the deceased accused, or Sahai Lohar who is convicted under Section 302 for committing the murder of the deceased. Though in the complaint, there is an omnibus statement that these appellants also attacked with lathis. The medical evidence does not support this case nor in their evidence before the Court the prosecution witnesses have attributed any overt act to these appellants. Learned counsel appearing for the State very fairly conceded that there is no material whatsoever to hold these appellants guilty of sharing the common object of either Govind Rai, the deceased accused, or Sahai Lohar. Therefore, we are of the opinion that the conviction recorded against these appellants is totally uncalled for and without any material hence, this appeal has to succeed and the conviction and sentence imposed on these appellants by the Courts below are set aside, and the appellants redirected to be released forthwith, if not wanted in any other case. Accordingly, the appeal of the appellants stands allowed. Basisth Roy v. State of Bihar, AIR 2003 SC 1439 : (2003) 9 SCC 52 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1754 : 2003 CrLJ 1301 : (2003) 2 Crimes 153 (SC).

[7743] ● Common object different from common intention.—It is incorrect to claim that prior formation of an unlawful assembly with a common object is a must and should have been found as a condition precedent before roping the accused within the fold of Section 149, IPC. No doubt the offence committed must be shown to be immediately connected with the common object, but whether they had the common object to cause the murder in a given case would depend and can rightly be decided on the basis of any proved rivalry between two factions, the nature of weapons used, the manner of attack as well as all surrounding circumstances. Common object has been always considered to be different from common intention and that it does not require prior concert and common meeting of minds before the attack. Common object could develop coincidental and being a question of fact it can always be inferred and deduced from the facts and circumstances of a case projected and proved in a given case. Amzad Ali v. State of Assam, AIR 2003 SC 3587 : (2003) 6 SCC 270 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1338 : 2003 CrLJ 3545 : JT 2003 (6) SC 160 : (2003) 3 Crimes 133 (SC).

[7744] ● Change in common object of unlawful assembly—Effect.—In the absence of any material to the contrary, it should be presumed that those members of the original unlawful assembly who only shared the common object of assaulting deceased-Prabhakar cannot be attributed with the subsequent change in the common object of some of the members of the assembly who entered the house of Prabhakar and caused grievous injuries to him. So far as the present appellants are concerned, who stood outside the house of the deceased and who could not have known what actually transpired inside the house, the act of those members of the original unlawful assembly who entered the house, cannot be attributed, hence, as contended by the learned counsel for the appellants at the most these appellants will be liable to be punished for sharing the original common object which is only to assault the deceased, therefore, they can be held guilty of an offence punishable under Section 352 read with Section 149 only. Bhimrao v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2003 SC 1493 : (2003) 3 SCC 37 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 727 : 2003 CrLJ 1204.

[7745] ● Offence when committed by any member of unlawful assembly in prosecution of common object.—Section 149 of the Indian Penal Code provides that if an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, every person who at the time of the committing of that offence, is a member of the same assembly is guilty of that offence. The two clauses of Section 149 vary in degree of certainty. The first clause contemplates the commission of an offence by any member of an unlawful assembly which can be held to have been committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. The second clause embraces within its fold the commission of an act which may not necessarily be the common object of the assembly nevertheless the members of the assembly had knowledge of likelihood of the commission of that offence in prosecution of the common object. The common object may be commission of one offence while there may be likelihood of the commission of yet another offence the knowledge whereof is capable of being safely attributable to the members of the unlawful assembly. In either case very member of the assembly would be vicariously liable for the offence actually committed by any other member of the assembly. A mere possibility of the commission of the offence would not necessarily enable the Court to draw an inference that the likelihood of commission of such offence was within the knowledge of every member of the unlawful assembly. It is difficult indeed, though not impossible, to collect direct evidence of such knowledge. An inference may be drawn from circumstances such as the background of the incident, the motive, the nature of the assembly, the nature of the arms carried by the members of the assembly, their common object and the behaviour of the members soon before, at or after the actual commission of the crime. Unless the applicability of Section 149—Either clause—Is attracted and the Court is convinced, on facts and in law both, of liability capable of being fastened vicariously by reference to either clause of Section 149 of IPC merely because a criminal act was committed by a member of the assembly every other member thereof would not necessarily become liable for such criminal act. The inference as to likelihood of the commission of the given criminal act must be capable of being held to be within the knowledge of another member of the assembly who is sought to be held vicariously liable for the said criminal act. These principles are settled. Rajendra Shantaram Todankar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2003 SC

[7746] ● Unlawful assembly—Common object of.—Mere presence in an unlawful assembly cannot render a person liable unless there was a common object and he was actuated by that common object and that object is one of those set out in Section 141. Where common object of an unlawful assembly is not proved, the accused persons cannot be convicted with the help of Section 149. The crucial question to determine is whether the assembly consisted of five or more persons and whether the said persons entertained one or more of the common objects, as specified in Section 141. It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that unless an overt act is proved against a person, who is alleged to be a member of an unlawful assembly, it cannot be said that he is a member of an assembly. The only thing required is that he should have understood that the assembly was unlawful and was likely to commit any of the acts which fall within the purview of Section 141. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (807) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7747] ● Word "object"—Meaning of.—The word "object" means the purpose or design and, in order to make it "common", it must be shared by all. In other words, the object should be common to the persons who compose the assembly, that is to say, they should all be aware of it and concur in it. A common object may be formed by express agreement after mutual consultation, but that is by no means necessary. It may formed at any stage by all or a few members of the assembly and the other members may just join and adopt it. Once formed, it need not continue to be the same. It may be modified or altered or abandoned at any stage. The expression "in prosecution of common object", as appearing in Section 149 has to be strictly construed as equivalent to "in order to attain the common object". It must be immediately connected with the common object by virtue of the nature of the object. There must be community of object and the object may exist only up to a particular stage, and not thereafter. Members of an unlawful assembly may have community of object up to a certain point beyond which they may differ in their objects and the knowledge, possessed by each member of what is likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object may vary not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object, and as a consequence of this the effect of Section 149, IPC may be different on different members of the same assembly. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (807-08) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7748] ● Common object distinguished from common intention.—"Common object" is different from a "common intention" as it does not require a prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack. It is enough if each has the same object in view and their number is five or more and that they act as an assembly to achieve that object. The "common object" of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and the language of the members composing it, and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. It may be gathered from the course of conduct adopted by the members of the assembly. For determination of the common object of the unlawful assembly, the conduct of each of the members of the unlawful assembly, before and at the time of attack and thereafter, the motive for the crime, are some of the relevant considerations. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined, keeping in view the nature of the assembly, the arms carried by the members, and the behaviour of the members at or near the scene of the incident. It is not necessary under law that in all cases of unlawful assembly, with an unlawful common object, the same must be translated into action or be successful. Under the Explanation to Section 141, an assembly which was not unlawful when it was assembled, may subsequently become unlawful. It is not necessary that the intention or the purpose, which is necessary to render an assembly an unlawful one come into existence at the outset. The time of forming an unlawful intent is not material. An assembly which, at its commencement or even for some time thereafter is lawful may subsequently become unlawful. In other words, it can develop during the course of incident at the spot eo instanti. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (808) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7749] ● Offence committal of to accomplish common object.—Section 149, IPC consists of two parts. The first part of the section means that the offence to be committed in prosecution of the common object must be one which is committed with a view to accomplish the common object. In order that the offence may fall within the first part, the offence must be connected immediately with the common object of the unlawful assembly of which the accused was a member. Even if the offence committed is not in direct prosecution of the common object of the assembly, it may yet fall under Section 141, if it can be held that the offence was such as the members knew was likely to be committed and this is what is required in the second part of the section. State of Maharashtra v. Kashira, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (808) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7750] ● Word "knew"—Meaning of.—The word "knew" used in the second branch of the section implies something more than a possibility and it cannot be made to bear the sense of "might have been known". Positive knowledge is necessary. When an offence is committed in prosecution of the common object, it would generally be an offence which the members of the unlawful assembly knew was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. That, however, does not make the converse proposition true, there may be cases which would come within the second part but not within the first part. The distinction between the two parts of Section 149 cannot be ignored or obliterated. In every case it would be an issue to be determined, whether the offence committed falls within the first part or it was an offence such as the members of he assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object and falls within the second part. However, there may be cases which would be within the first part but offences committed in prosecution of the common object would be generally, if not always, within the second, namely, offences which the parties knew to be likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (809) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7751] ● Transfer of Malice—Common object to kill.—The provision is founded on a doctrine called by Hale and Foster, a transfer of malice. Others describe it as a transmigration of motive. Coke calls it coupling the event with the intention and the end with the cause. If the killing takes place in the course of doing an act which a person intends or knows to be likely to cause death, it ought to be treated as if the real intention of the killer had been actually carried out. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (810) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7752] ● Transfer of malice—Common object to chase and assault deceased.—Though Section 149, IPC may not in a given case apply to a case covered by Section 301, it would depend upon the factual background involved. No hard-and-fast rule of universal application can be invoked. In the facts of the present case, as adumbrated, the essential ingredients of Section 149 have been amply established. Though initially the malice was focused on PW-1, the fact that all the accused chased and assaulted the deceased is a case of transfer of malice. The same was again pursued by coming back and attacking PW-1. State of Maharashtra v. Kashirao, AIR 2003 SC 3901 : (2003) 10 SCC 434 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 801 (810) : 2003 CrLJ 4464.

[7753] ● Word "Knew" in the second part—Meaning.—Section 149, IPC consist of two parts. The first part of the section means that the offence to be committed in prosecution of the common object must be one which is committed with a view to accomplish the common object. In order that the offence may fall within the first part, the offence must be connected immediately with the common object of the unlawful assembly of which the accused was member. Even if the offence committed is not in direct prosecution of the common object of the assembly, it may yet fall under section 141, if it can held that the offence was such as the members knew was likely to be committed and this is what is required in the second part of the section. The purpose for which the members of the assembly set out or desire to achieve is the object. If the object desired by all the members is the same, the knowledge that is the object which is being pursued is shared by all the members and they are in general agreement as to how it is to be achieved and that is now the common object of the assembly. An object is entertained in the human mind, and it being merely a mental attitude, no direct evidence can be available and, like intention, has generally to be gathered from the act which the person commits and the result therefrom. Though no hard and fast rule can be laid down under the circumstances from which the common object can be culled out, it may reasonably be collected from the nature of the assembly, arms it carries and behaviour at or before or after the scene of incident. The word 'knew' used in the second branch of the section implies something more than a possibility and it cannot be made to bear the sense of 'might have been known', Positive knowledge is necessary. That, however, does not make the converse proposition true: there may be cases which would come within the second part but not with the first part. The distinction between the two parts of Section 149 cannot be ignored or obliterated. In every case is would be an issue to be determined, whether the offence committed falls within the first part or it was an offence such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object and falls within the second part. [7757] ● "Common object" of unlawful assembly question of fact.—The "common object" of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it, and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. It may be gathered from the course of conduct adopted by the members of the assembly. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined, keeping in view the nature of the assembly, the arms carried by the members, and the behaviour of the members at or near the scene of the incident. [7758] ● Murder—Unlawful assembly—Common object.—The concurrent finding of fact of the Courts below is that the appellants along-with three others, namely, A-2 (since deceased). A-5 and A-8 formed themselves into an unlawful assembly the common object of which was to commit the murder of Babu, the deceased. Once it is held that they were members of the unlawful assembly and in pursuance of common object of such an assembly, Babu was murdered, the appellants could not escape their liability because every member of the unlawful assembly is guilty of the offence committed by any member of such unlawful assembly, if in prosecution of the common object of that assembly an offence is committed. The appellants cannot argue that they were not members of the unlawful assembly because their participation in the assault has been proved beyond reasonable doubt. Once their participation is established, they cannot escape their liability by pleading that they did not cause any serious injury but merely assaulted the deceased with fists. The mere fact that they were members of the unlawful assembly at the time when the offence was committed, makes them guilty of the offence committed by any member of the unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly. Section 149 of the IPC enunciates a principle of vicarious liability and, therefore, every member of the unlawful assembly is guilty of the offence committed by any member of such assembly. Rajendran v. State of Tamil Nadu, 2004 SCC (Cri) 1879 (1881) : 2004 CrLJ 2544 : (2004) 2 Crimes 252.

[7759] ● Common object of unlawful assembly—Sharing of.—In the case in hand the evidence shows that all the appellants came in a group by using cars and a motorcycle and intercepted the bus. Knowing fully well that the deceased persons were travelling in that bus, appellants entered the bus and killed them on the spot. All the accused persons can be held to have shared the common object of unlawful assembly. Sahdeo v. State of U.P., AIR 2004 SC 3508 : 2004 CrLJ 2876 : (2004) 2 Crimes 482.

[7765] ● Unlawful assembly—Acts committed pursuant to common object.—By virtue of Section 149, IPC every member of an unlawful assembly at the time of the commission of the offence is guilty of an offence committed by any member of the unlawful assembly. The section creates constructive or vicarious liability of the members of the unlawful assembly for unlawful acts committed pursuant to the common object by any other member of that assembly. The basis of constructive guilt under Section 149 is mere membership of an unlawful assembly. In a case under Section 149 the accused if is a member of the unlawful assembly, the common object of which is to commit a certain crime and if that crime is committed by one or more members of that assembly every person who happened to be a member of that assembly would be liable for that criminal act by virtue of his being a member of it, irrespective of the fact whether he actually committed the act or not. To attract Section 149, IPC the prosecution must prove that the commission of the offence was by any member of an unlawful assembly and such offence must have been committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly or must be such that the members of the assembly knew that it was likely to be committed. Unless these three elements are satisfied by the prosecution the accused cannot be convicted with the aid of Section 149, IPC. Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, AIR 2004 SC 5068 : (2004) 13 SCC 189 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 113 (119) : 2004 CrLJ 4978.

[7766] ● Common object to do away with deceased.—The facts which have been proved by the prosecution are that on heated exchange of words in the field of Bharat Pandey, between Bharat Pandey, Birender Pandey, Kanhaiya Pandey with Raghunath Pandey, Raghunath Pandey went home enraged and returned back immediately thereafter (within 3 minutes according to PW-6) with a rifle accompanied by other accused persons who were also carrying guns and spear. Immediately on entering the field, Raghunath Pandey opened fire at Kanhaiya Pandey and as a result thereof he received two gunshot injuries from the weapon used by Raghunath Pandey. Neither Parshuram Pandey nor Bishram Pandey used their guns to fire at Kanhaiya Pandey, Bharat Pandey or Birender Pandey, who were standing nearby. No other overt act or role has been attributed to them which could definitely point out to their common object to kill or injure Kanhaiya Pandey or PWs-5 and 6. The mere fact that they accompanied Raghunath Pandey with weapons in hand does not necessarily lead to the inference that they had shared the common object or intention with Raghunath Pandey to kill Kanhaiya Pandey. Their behaviour at the scene of offence negatives such inference. However, the only fact proved by the prosecution is that they started indiscriminate firing which resulted in some villagers receiving simple injuries, though the reason for such firing is not clear. In view of the short span of time within which the whole incident took place it could not be presumed that the three appellants along with the other accused Raghunath Pandey had formed the common object to do away with Kanhaiya Pandey. Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, AIR 2004 SC 5068 : (2004) 13 SCC 189 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 113 (119-20) : 2004 CrLJ 4978.

[7767] ● Unlawful assembly—Formation of common object.—The principles relating to applicability of Section 149 of the Indian Penal Code are not in dispute. For the purpose of attracting the said provision, it is not necessary that an overt act must be committed by all the accused persons. What is necessary is formation of an unlawful assembly and knowledge of the persons thereof about consequences arising from doing an act which amounts to offence. Shri Gopal v. Subhash, AIR 2004 SC 4900 : (2004) 13 SCC 174 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 98 (101, 102) : 2004 CrLJ 3349.

[7768] ● Common object established.—The definite prosecution case as well as the evidence as that the five accused persons, including the four appellants, came together in a jeep, one of whom was armed with gun and others with lathis, after arriving at the place of occurrence, they abused members of the prosecution party and on protest being made by them, accused Laxman Singh fired at the deceased, who succumbed to the injuries, whereas the appellants pelted stones upon the deceased and PW-2 and threw lathis upon them, as a result of which they received several other injuries apart from the two injuries by firearm inflicted by accused Laxman Singh upon the deceased, and thereupon, they fled away together from the place of occurrence. On these facts, we have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the common object of the unlawful assembly, of which the appellants were members, was to cause death of the deceased and pursuant to that common object, one of the members of the unlawful assembly, namely, accused Laxman Singh inflicted two fatal injuries upon the deceased by firearm whereas the appellants inflicted six other injuries on him.

In view of the foregoing discussion, the prosecution has succeeded in proving its case beyond reasonable doubt and the High Court has not committed any error in upholding convictions of the appellants, as such no interference is called for by this Court. Rajinder v. State of Haryana, AIR 2004 SC 4352 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 155 (159) : 2004 CrLJ 4224 : JT 2004 (7) SC 481 : 2004 (3) Crimes 360.

[7769] ● Common object different from common intention.—"Common object" is different from a "common intention" as it does not require a prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack. It is enough if each has the same object in view and their number is five or more and that they act as an assembly to achieve that object. The "common object" of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it, and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. It may be gathered from the course of conduct adopted by the members of the assembly. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined, keeping in view the nature of the assembly, the arms carried by the members, and the behaviour of the members at or near the scene of the incident. It is not necessary under law that in all cases of unlawful assembly, with an unlawful common object, the same must be translated into action or be successful. Under the Explanation to Section 149, an assembly which was not unlawful when it was assembled, may subsequently become unlawful. It is not necessary that the intention or the purpose, which is necessary to render an assembly an unlawful one, comes into existence at the outset. The time of forming an unlawful intent is not material. An assembly which, at its commencement or even for some time thereafter, is lawful, may subsequently become unlawful. In other words, it can develop during the course of incident at the spot eo instanti. Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 127 (137). TO THE SAME EFFECT : Sunil Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2005 SC 1096 : (2005) 9 SCC 283 : 2005 (Cri) 1230 (1234-35) : 2005 CrLJ 1402.

[7770] ● Sections 149 and 141—Applicability—common object of unlawful assembly—Meaning.—Section 149 has its foundation on constructive liability which is the sine qua non for its operation. The emphasis is on the common object and not on common intention. Mere presence in an unlawful assembly cannot render a person liable unless there was a common object and he was actuated by that common object and that object is one of those set out in Section 141. Where common object of an unlawful assembly is not proved, the accused persons cannot be convicted with the help of Section 149. The crucial question to determine is whether the assembly consisted of five or more persons and whether the said persons entertained one or more of the common objects, as specified in Section 141. It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that unless an overt act is proved against a person, who is alleged to be a member of unlawful assembly, it cannot be said that he is a member of such an assembly. The only thing required is that he should have understood that the assembly was unlawful and was likely to commit any of the acts which fall within the purview of Section 141. The word "object" means the purpose or design and, in order to make it "common", it must be shared by all. In other words, the object should be common to the persons, who compose the assembly, that is to say, they should all be aware of it and concur in it. A common object may be formed by express agreement after mutual consultation, but that is by no means necessary. It may be formed at any stage by all or a few members of the assembly and the other members may just join and adopt it. Once formed, it need not continue to be the same. It may be modified or altered or abandoned at any stage. The expression "in prosecution of common object" as appearing in Section 149 has to be strictly construed as equivalent to "in order to attain the common object". It must be immediately connected with the common object by virtue of the nature of the object. There must be community of object and the object may exist only up to a particular stage, and not thereafter. Members of an unlawful assembly may have community of object up to a certain point beyond which they may differ in their objects and the knowledge, possessed by each member of what is likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object may vary not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object, and as a consequence of this the effect of Section 149, IPC may be different on different members of the same assembly. Sunil Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2005 SC 1096 : (2005) 9 SCC 283 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1230 (1234) : 2005 CrLJ 1402.

[7771] ● Large number of persons present—Safe to convict only those persons against whom overt act alleged.—The evidence on record establishes the fact that a large number of persons were present. In such a case, it may be safe to convict only those persons against whom overt act is alleged with the aid of Section 149, IPC, lest some innocent spectators may get involved. This is only a rule of caution and not a rule of law. In the instant case, we find that even if Nagarjit Ahir was present when the occurrence took place, there is nothing to suggest that he shared the common object of the unlawful assembly. Admittedly, he did not take any part in the assault. We do not, therefore, consider it safe to convict him merely on the ground that he was present, because admittedly a large umber of persons had come to the ghat that day for taking a bath in River Ganges. We, therefore, extend to him the benefit of doubt and acquit him of all the charges levelled against him. Nagarjit Ahir v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 722 : (2005) 10 SCC 369 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1530 (1534) : 2005 CrLJ 904 : 2005 (1) Crimes 191.

[7772] ● Common object—Scope.—The main trust of the argument of counsel for the appellants was that the evidence on record shows that only three appellants assaulted the deceased with sharp edged weapons and in the absence of proof of common object of the assembly to cause death of two deceased persons the other accused persons could not have been convicted by taking aid of Section 149 of the IPC. There is a distinction between the common object and common intention. The common object need not require prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack, and an unlawful object can develop after the assembly gathered before the commission of the crime at the spot itself. There need not be prior meeting of the mind. It would be enough that the members of the assembly which constitutes five or more persons, have common object and that they acted as an assembly to achieve that object. In substance, Section 149 makes every members of the common unlawful assembly responsible as a member for the act of each and all merely because he is a member of the unlawful assembly with common object to be achieved by such an unlawful assembly. One has to keep in mind that mere presence in the unlawful assembly cannot render a person liable unless there was a common object and that is shared by that person. The common object has to be found and can be gathered from the facts and circumstances of each case. Rabindra Mahto v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2006 SC 887 : (2006) 10 SCC 432 : 2006 CrLJ 957 (961, 962) : (2006) 1 Crimes 97.

[7773] ● No common object.—The High Court did not find any common object on the part of all the accused so as to make them themselves liable to be convicted for commission of an offence under Sections 302/149 IPC. In a case of this nature. Where a large member of persons are made accused, the possibility of some accused persons committing murder at the spur of moment cannot also be ruled out. Sabbi Mallesu v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2006 SC 2747 : (2006) 10 SCC 543 : 2006 CrLJ 4038 (4041) : (2006) 3 Crimes 146.

[7774] ● Acquittal of accused upheld.—In the instant case undisputedly, both the parties inflicted injuries to the members of the other party, there was possibility that the deceased sustained a head injury after discharge from the hospital, in face of medical evidence on record the finding of the High Court that the accused had no common object to cause the death of the deceased or to attempt to commit murder and acquittal of the accused was upheld. Umrao v. State of Haryana, AIR 2006 SC 2152 : (2006) 10 SCC 136 : 2006 CrLJ 2798 : (2006) 2 Crimes 225.

[7775] ● Only four persons found guilty—Conviction under Section 149, IPC held proper.—When the evidence clearly shows that more then five persons armed with swords, spears etc had to the house of Sadruddin with the common object of causing injury and injured him. The mere fact that several accused were acquitted and only four are convicted, does not enable the four who are found guilty to contend that Section 149, IPC is inapplicable. Kallu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2006 SC 831 : (2006) 10 SCC 313 : 2006 CrLJ 798 (803) : 2006 (1) Crimes 105.

[7776] ● Accused did not cause injury to deceased—Common object to cause the murder cannot be inferred.—Where the accused A2, A3 and A5 did not cause any injury to the deceased, the common object of the unlawful assembly was not to commit the murder of the deceased, the conviction of the three accused under Section 302 was set aside, and the three accused were convicted under Section 326. Radha Mohan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2006 SC 951 : (2006) 2 SCC 450 : 2006 CrLJ 1121 (1131) : (2006) 1 Crimes 183.

[7777] ● No material showing that accused knew that offence was likely to be committed in prosecution of common object.—As far as the conviction of seven co-accused there is not an iota of evidence led by the prosecution to sustain the charge of Section 302/149 IPC against them and the only evidence, which has come on record, is the testimony of PW 10—Informant who stated that Magister Chaudhary came and surrounded him on the spot. No witness has proved that the accused persons had come on the scene of occurrence with an intention to commit the murder of Shambhu Rai. None of them had given any blow to the deceased with the weapons they allegedly were carrying with them. It is now the settled law that under Section 149 IPC, the liability of other members for the offence committed during the continuance of the occurrence rests upon the fact whether the other persons knew before hand that the offence actually committed was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Such knowledge may reasonably be collected from the nature of the assembly, arms of behaviour on or before the scene of occurrence. If such knowledge may not reasonably be attributed to the other members of the assembly then their liability for the offence committed during occurrence does not arise. On scrutiny of the entire evidence on record, the conviction of the other accused persons not sustainable and their appeal deserved to be allowed. The conviction of the seven accused persons recorded under Section 302/149 was set aside. Bunnilal Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, AIR 2006 SC 2531 : (2006) 10 SCC 639 : 2006 CrLJ 3297 (3301) : (2006) 3 Crimes 46.

[7778] ● Applicability and scope.—Common object has two parts. The first part would be attracted when the offence is committed in furtherance of the common object. The offence even, if is not committed in direct prosecution of the common object of the assembly, Section 149 may still be attracted. Hori Lal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2006) 13 SCC 79 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 581 : 2007 CrLJ 1181 (1185) : 2007 (1) Crimes 215.

[7779] ● For attracting S. 149, IPC pre-concert not required.—When a large number of persons assembled with a gun and other weapons having in mind the dispute over the land in question, they must be held to have found common knowledge that by reason of their act, somebody may at least be grievously injured. For the purpose of attracting Section 149, IPC, it is not necessary that there should be a pre-concert by way of a meeting of the persons of the unlawful assembly as to the common object. If a common object is adopted by all the persons and shared by them, it would serve the purpose. Triloki Nath v. State of U.P., AIR 2006 SC 321 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 178 (198) : 2005 (4) Crimes 304 : 2005 (9) Scale 76.

[7780] ● Unlawful assembly.—It is evident that no evidence has been brought on record to establish that the appellants Munna and Ujjal had committed any offence. As noticed hereinbefore, they were not named in the FIR. They were not identified in the dock. No witness has taken their names as the persons who committed any overt act. No recovery has been made from them. There is also no evidence that they had chased the deceased. As it had not been established that the appellants were members of an unlawful assembly, they could not have been convicted for commission of an offence under Sections 302/149, IPC. Munna Candra v. State of Assam, AIR 2006 SC 3555 : (2006) 3 SCC 752 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 43 (48) : 2006 CrLJ 1632 : 2006 (2) Crimes 13.

[7781] ● Applicability of Section 149, IPC.—Mere presence in an unlawful assembly cannot render a person liable unless there was a common object and he was actuated by that common object and that object is one of those set out in Section 141 IPC. Mummidi Hemadri v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2528 : (2007) 13 SCC 496 : 2007 (2) Crimes 389 (SC) : 2007 (4) SCR 30. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Shivjee Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 417 : (2008) 11 SCC 631 : 2008 SCC (Cri) 987. (2) Maranadu v. State, (2008) 16 SCC 529 : 2008 CrLJ 4562 : 2008 (4) Crimes 16 (SC).

[7782] ● Requirement for applicability of Section 149, IPC.—It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that unless an overt act is proved against a person, who is alleged to be a member of an assembly, it cannot be said that he is a member of unlawful assembly. What is required is that he should have understood that the assembly was unlawful and was likely to commit any of the acts which falls within the purview of Section 141, IPC. Mummidi Hemadri v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2528 : (2007) 13 SCC 496 : 2007 (2) Crimes 389 (SC) : 2007 (4) SCR 30.

[7783] ● Common object proved.—"Each one of the appellants was armed with deadly weapons. They came before us together and death was caused to the deceased. They entered into the house. Two of the appellants had inflicted blows with swords. We are, therefore, of the opinion that common object on the part of each of the appellants stands proved. Once formation of common object amongst the accused is proved, it is not necessary for the Court to consider specific overt act played by each of them." State of Maharashtra v. Tulshiram Bhanudas Kamble, AIR 2007 SC 3042 : (2007) 14 SCC 627 : 2007 CrLJ 4319 (4327) : (2007) 4 Crimes 48.

[7784] ● Common object—Meaning.—The word "object" means the purpose or design and, in order to make it "common" it must be shared by all. In other words, the object should be common to the persons who compose the assembly, that is to say, they should all be aware of it and concur in it. A common object may be formed by express agreement after mutual consultation, but that by no means necessary. It may be formed at any stage by all or a few members of the assembly and the other members may just join and adopt it. Once formed, it need not continue to be the same. It may be modified or altered or abandoned at any stage. The expression "in prosecution of common object" as appearing in the section have to be strictly construed as equivalent to "in order to attain the common object". It must be immediately connected with the common object by virtue of the nature of the object. There must be community of object and the object may exist only upto a particular stage and not thereafter. Mummidi Hemadri v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2528 (2530) : (2007) 13 SCC 496 : 2007 (2) Crimes 389.

[7785] ● Common object—Facts and circumstances to be seen.—The question as to whether in a given case common object has been made out or not, will depend upon the facts and circumstances thereof: conduct of the parties and the manner in which the occurrence has taken place, will have some bearing on the question. Eight persons came together. They assaulted the deceased and PW 6 indiscriminately. Despite having been asked to stop assaulting them, not only by PW 2 but also by the wife of the deceased, they did not pay any heed thereto. They continued to assault them. They dragged them to the west bank of the river and only left them there when a large number of people gathered and asked them not to do so. It cannot be said that the accused appellants did not have common object to cause the death of the deceased. Vikram v. State of Maharashtra, 2007 AIR SC 1893 : 2007 (12) SCC 332 : 2007 CrLJ 3193 (3198) (SC) : 2007 (6) SCR 185 : 2007 (7) JT 215 : 2007 (4) Supreme 698 : 2007 (5) SLT 688 : 2007 (2) JCC 1553 : 2007 (6) Scale 698.

[7786] ● "In prosecution of common object".—The expression 'in prosecution of common object' as appearing in Section 149 has to be strictly construed as equivalent to 'in order to attain the common object'. It must be immediately connected with the common object by virtue of the nature of the object. There must be community of the object and the object may exist only up to a particular stage, and not thereafter. Members of an unlawful assembly may have community of object up to certain point beyond which they may differ in their objects and the knowledge, possessed by each member of what it likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object may vary not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object, and as a consequence of this the effect Section 149, IPC may be different on different members of the same assembly. State of Punjab v. Sanjiv Kumar, AIR 2007 SC 2430 : (2007) 9 SCC 791 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 578 : 2007 CrLJ 3519 (3521) : 2007 (3) Crimes 100 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Shivjee Singh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 1 SCC 631 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 987. (2) State of Karnataka v. Chikkahotappa, AIR 2008 SC 2692 : 2008 CrLJ 3495 : 2008 (8) SCR 1167.

[7787] ● Common object and Common intention.—'Common object', is different from a 'common intention' as it does not require a prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack. It is enough if each has the same object in view and their number is five or more and that they act as an assembly to achieve that object. The 'common object' of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it, and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. 2007 (2) Crimes 389 (SC). (2) Gunnana Pentayya v. State of Andhra Pradesh, 2008 (3) Crimes 325 (SC).

[7788] ● Common object—Proof.—Once formation of common object amongst the accused is proved, the Court is not required to consider specific overt act played by each of them. Where the appellants armed with deadly weapons entered into the house and caused death of deceased and inflicted blows with swords on deceased it was held that common object on the part of each of the appellants stands proved. State of Maharashtra v. Tulshiram Bhanudas Kamble, AIR 2007 SC 3042 : (2007) 14 SCC 627 : 2007 CrLJ 4319 : 2007 (4) Crimes 48.

[7789] ● "Knew"—Meaning.—The word "Knew" used in the second limb of the section implies something more than a possibility and it cannot be made to bear the sense of "might have been known". Positive knowledge is necessary. State of Pubjab v. Sanjiv Kumar, AIR 2007 SC 2430 : (2007) 9 SCC 791 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 578 : 2007 CrLJ 3519 (3522) : 2007 (3) Crimes 100 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : Maranadu v. State, 2008 CrLJ 4562 : 2008 (4) Crimes 16 (SC).

[7790] ● Object of Section 149, IPC.—Section 149 IPC per se constitutes a substantive offence. The object of this section is to make clear that an accused person whose case falls within its terms cannot put forward the defence that he did not, with his own hand, commit the offence committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly or such as the members of the assembly knew likely to the committed in prosecution of that object. Unlawful assembly was formed originally to assault and something might have happened all of a sudden. Sunil Balkrishna Bhoir v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 14 SCC 598 : 2007 CrLJ 3277 : 2007 (6) SCR 669.

[7791] ● Scope of Section 149, IPC.—Section 149 IPC, consists of two parts. The first part of the section means that the offence to be committed in prosecution of the common object must be one which is committed with a view to accomplish the common object in order that the offence may fall within the first part, the offence must be connected immediately with the common object of the unlawful assembly of which the accused was member. Even if the offence committed is not in direct prosecution of the common object of the assembly, it may yet fall under Section 141 IPC, if it can be held that the offence was such as the members knew was likely to be committed and this is what is required in the second part of the section. Mummidi Hemadri v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2528 : 2007 (4) SCR 30 2007 (4) Scale 431 : 2007 (2) Supreme 978 : 2007 (2) Crimes 389 (SC).

[7792] ● Section 149 IPC & Section 304 Part II—Sentence.—We are of the view that the learned counsel for the appellants is right in submitting that neither of the appellants has been convicted for a substantive offence punishable under Section 304, Part II, IPC. Both of them were convicted under the vicarious liability mentioned in Section 149, IPC and they were accordingly convicted for an offence not amounting to murder punishable under Section 304, Part II read with Section 149, IPC along with other offences. In our opinion, therefore, ends of justice would be met if instead of rigorous imprisonment for seven years as imposed by the High Court for the said offence, the appellants are ordered to undergo rigorous imprisonment for five years. Conviction, sentence and fine for other offences, imposed on the appellants by the High Court call for no interference and accordingly that part of the order is confirmed. Suresh Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2007 (SC) 3093 : 2007 CrLJ 4717 (4721) : 2007 (10) SCR 495 : 2007 (11) Scale 589 : 2007 (4) Crimes 125 (SC).

[7793] ● Charge under Section 149—Requirement.—When charge under Section 149, IPC, is there it is not necessary that each one should be assigned independent part played in the beating. If it is found that one of them was a member of the unlawful assembly and that unlawful assaulted the deceased which ultimately caused the death of the deceased, then all who were members of the unlawful assembly can be held liable. Sheo Prasad Bhor v. State of Assam, AIR 2007 SC 120 : (2007) 3 SCC 120 : (2006) 13 SCC 79 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 45 : 2007 CrLJ 1423 (1424) : (2007) 1 Crimes 145.

[7794] ● Common object—How to be ascertained.—Whether in a given case, the accused persons shared common object or not, must be ascertained from the acts and conduct of the accused persons. The surrounding circumstances are also relevant and may be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion in this behalf. Hari Lal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 581 : 2007 CrLJ 1181 (1185) : 2007 (1) Crimes 215 (SC).

[7795] ● Common object—Ascertainment.—Common object of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. It may be gathered from the course of conduct adopted by the members of the assembly. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined keeping in view the nature of the assemble, the arms carried by the members and the behaviour of the members at or near the scene of incident. Mummidi Hemadri v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2528 (2530) : 2007 (2) Crimes 389 (SC) : 2007 (4) SCR 30. TO THE SAME EFFECT : State of Punjab v. Sanjiv Kumar, AIR 2007 SC 2430 : (2007) 9 SCC 791 : 2007 CrLJ 3519.

[7796] ● Common object—How to be determined.—For determination of common object of the lawful assembly, the conduct of each of the members of the unlawful assembly, before and at the time of attack and thereafter, the motive of the crime are some of the relevant considerations. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined keeping in view the nature of the assembly, the arms caused by the members, and the behaviour of the members at a near the scene of the incident. It is not necessary under the law that in all cases of unlawful assembly, with an unlawful common object, the same must be translated into action or be successful. Maranadu v. State, (2008) 16 SCC 529 : 2008 CrLJ 4562 (4566) : 2008 (4) Crimes 16 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Gunnana Pentayya v. State of Andhra Pradesh, 2008 (3) Crimes 325 (SC). (2) Bhanwar Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 768 : (2008) 16 SCC 657 : 2008 (2) Crimes 342.

[7797] ● Common object at a particular stage.—What is the common object of the unlawful assembly at a particular stage is essentially a question of fact to be determined keeping in view the nature of assembly, the arms carried by the members and the behaviour of the members at a near the scene of incident. State of Karnataka v. Chikkahotappa, AIR 2008 SC 2692 : (2008) 15 SCC 299 : 2008 CrLJ 3495 (3498).

[7798] ● Common object—Ascertainment.—Common object of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. It may be gathered from the course of conduct adopted by the members of the assembly. State of Karnataka v. Chikkahotappa, AIR 2008 SC 2692 : 2008 CrLJ 3495.

[7799] ● Overt act—Not necessary.—The crucial question to determine is whether the assembly consisted of five or more persons and whether the said persons entertained one or more of the common objects, as specified in Section 141. It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that unless an overt act is proved against a person, who is alleged to be a member of unlawful assembly, it cannot be said that he is a member of such an assembly. The only thing required is that he should have understood that the assembly was unlawful and was likely to commit any of the acts which fall within the purview of Section 141. State of Karnataka v. Chikkahotappa, AIR 2008 (SC) 2692 : 2008 CrLJ 3495 : 2008 (8) SCR 1167 : 2008 (9) Scale 338 : 2008 (6) SLT 141 : JT 2008 (7) SC 395.

[7800] ● Word "Knew" used in Second limb of Section 149, IPC.—The word "knew" used in the second limb of the section implies something more than a possibility and it cannot be made to bear the sense of 'might have been known'. Positive knowledge is necessary. When an offence is committed in prosecution of the common object, it would generally be an offence which the members of the unlawful assembly knew was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. That, however, does not make the converse proposition true; there may be cases which would come within the second part but not within the first part. The distinction between the two parts of Section 149 cannot be ignored or obliterated. In every case it would be an issue to be determined, whether the offence committed falls within the first part or it was an offence such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed falls within the first part or it was an offence such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object and falls within the second part. However, there may be cases which would be within the first part but offences committed in prosecution of the common object would also be generally, if not always be within the second part, namely, offences which the parties knew to be likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object. State of Karnataka v. Chikkahottappa, AIR 2008 SC 2692 : (2008) 15 SCC 299 : 2008 CrLJ 3495 : 2008 (8) SCR 1167 : 2008 (9) Scale 338.

[7801] ● Word "knew" in second limb of Section 149, IPC.—When an offence is committed in prosecution of the common object, it would generally be an offence which the members of the unlawful assembly knew was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. That, however, does not make the converse proposition true; there may be cases which would come within the second part but not within the first part. [7802] ● Two parts of Section 149—Distinction.—Section 149, IPC consists of two parts. The first part of the section means that the offence to be committed in prosecution of the common object must be one which is committed with a view to accomplish the common object. In order that the offence may fall within the first part, the offence must be connected immediately with the common object of the unlawful assembly of which the accused was member. Even if the offence committed is not in direct prosecution of the common object of the assembly, it may yet fall under Section 141, if it can be held that the offence was such as the members knew was likely to be committed and this is what is required in the second part of the section. The purpose for which the members of the assembly set out or desired to achieve is the object. If the object desired by all the members is the same, the knowledge that is the object which is being pursued is shared by all the members and they are in general agreement as to how it is to be achieved and that is now the common object of the assembly. An object is entertained in the human mind,. and it being merely a mental attitude, no direct evidence can be available and, like intention, has generally to be gathered from the act which the person commits and the result therefrom. Though no hard and fast rule can be laid down under the circumstances from which the common object can be culled out, it may reasonably be collected from the nature of the assembly, arms it carries and behaviour at or before or after the scene of the incident. The word "knew" used in the second part of the section implies something more than a possibility and it cannot be mode to bear the sense of "might have been known". Positive knowledge is necessary. When an offence is committed in prosecution of the common object, it would generally be an offence which the members of the unlawful assembly knew was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. [7803] ● Common object—Scope and proof.—It is equally well-settled that where a crowd of assailants who are members of an unlawful assembly proceeds to commit an offence in pursuance of common object of the unlawful assembly, it is often not possible for witnesses to describe accurately the part played by each one of the assailants. Besides, if a large crowd of persons armed with weapons assaults a victim, it is not necessary that all of them must take part in the actual assault. Even in absence of actual assault, all members of unlawful assembly may be held vicariously liable for the acts of others provided there was common object to commit a crime. Appreciation of evidence in such a complex situation is indeed a difficult task, but courts exercising powers in administering criminal justice have to do their best in dealing with such cases and it is expected of them to discharge their duty to sift the evidence carefully and to decide which part of it is true and which is not. Viji v. State of Karnataka, 2008 (4) Crimes 320.

[7804] ● Requirements for incurring vicarious liability.—For the purpose of incurring the vicarious liability for the offence committed by a member of such an unlawful under the provisions, the liability of other members of the unlawful assembly for the offence committed during the continuance of the occurrence, rests upon the fact whether the other members knew before hand that the offence actually committed was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Sikander Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2010 SC 3580 : (2010) 7 SCC 477 : 2010 CrLJ 3854.

[7805] ● Mere presence of persons at the scene of offence—Not enough.—Mere presence of the persons at the scene of offence itself would not be enough to convict them and punish under Section 149, IPC, unless it is established that each of them was part of the unlawful assembly and committed the offence in prosecution of the common object of that assembly. In all such cases, the question who had committed the overt act is of no consequence. Debashish Daw v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2010 SC 3633 : (2010) 9 SCC 111 (Akbar Sheikh v. State of West Bengal, (2009) 7 SCC 415 rel. on).

[7806] ● No direct evidence available—It has to be ascertained from the facts and attending circumstances.—When a concerted attack is made on the victim by a large number of persons armed with deadly weapons, it is often difficult to determine the actual part played by each offender and easy to hold that such persons who attacked the victim had the common object for an offence which was known to be likely to be committed in prosecution of such an object. It is true that a mere innocent person, in an assembly of persons or being a bystander does not make such person a member of an unlawful assembly but where the persons forming the assembly are shown to be having identical interest in pursuance of which some of them come armed, others though not armed would, under the normal circumstances, be deemed to be the members of the unlawful assembly. Prathap v. State of Kerala, AIR 2010 SC 3526 : JT 2010 (9) 168 : 2010 CrLJ 4442 : 2010 (8) Scale 552.

[7807] ● Common object—Determination.—For determination of the common object of the unlawful assembly, the conduct of each of the members of the unlawful assembly, before and at the time of attack and thereafter, the motive for the crime, are some of the relevant considerations. What the common object of the unlawful assembly is at a particular stage of the incident is essentially a question of fact to be determined, keeping in view the nature of the assembly, the arms carried by the members, and the behaviour of the members at or near the scene of the incident. It is not necessary under law that in all cases of unlawful assembly, with an unlawful common object, the same must be translated into action or be successful. Sikandar Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2010 SC 3580 : (2010) 7 SCC 477 : JT 2010 (7) 637 : 2010 (5) CrLJ 3854 : 2010 (3) Crimes 139 (SC).

[7808] ● Requirements for conviction of person of offence with aid of Section 149, IPC.—Whenever a Court convicts any person of an offence with the aid of Section 149, a clear finding regarding the common object of the assembly must be given and the evidence discussed must show not only the nature of the common object but that in pursuance of such common object of the offence was committed. Thus, before recording the conviction under Section 149 IPC, the essential ingredients of Section 149, IPC must be established. Daya Kishan v. State of Haryana, AIR 2010 SC 2147 : (2010) 5 SCC 81 : 2010 CrLJ 2886 : JT 2010 (4) 325 : 2010 (4) Scale 263.

[7809] ● Requirements.—A common object does not require a prior concert and a common meeting of minds before the attack. It is enough if each member of the unlawful assembly has the same object in view and their number is five or more and they act as a assembly to achieve the object. Sikandar Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2010 SC 3580 : (2010) 7 SCC 477 : 2010 CrLJ 3854.

[7810] ● Essential ingredients.—The provisions of Section 149, IPC has essentially two ingredients : (i) the commission of an offence by any member of an unlawful assembly and (ii) such offence must be committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly or must be such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Once it is established that the unlawful assembly had common object, it is not necessary that all persons forming the unlawful assembly must be shown to have committed some overt act. Sikandar Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2010 SC 3580 : (2010) 7 SCC 477 : 2010 CrLJ 3854. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Daya Kishan v. State of Haryana, AIR 2010 SC 2147 : (2010) 5 SCC 81 : 2010 CrLJ 2886. (2) Dharvidher v. State of U.P., (2010) 7 SCC 759 : 2010 (3) Crimes 170 (SC).

COMMON SENSE

[7811] ● Common sense.—We must bear in mind human psychology and behavioural probability when assessing the testimonial potency of the victim's version. What girl would foist a rape charge on a stranger unless a remarkable set of facts or clearest motives were made out? The inherent bashfulness, the innocent naiveté and the feminine tendency to conceal the outrage of masculine sexual aggression are factors which are relevant to improbabilise the hypothesis of false implication. The injury on the person of the victim, especially her private parts, has corroborative value. Her complaint to her parents and the presence of blood on her clothes are also testimony which warrants credence. More than all, it baffles belief in human nature that a girl sleeping with her mother and other children in the open will come by blood on her garments and injury in her private parts unless she has been subjected to the torture of rape—And if rape has been committed, as counsel more or less conceded why, all persons in the world, should the victim hunt up the petitioner and point at him the accusing finger? To forsake there vital considerations and go by adolescent demands for substantial corroboration is to sacrifice common sense in favour of an artificial concoction called "judicial' probability. Indeed, the Court loses its credibility if it rebels against realism. The law of Court is not an unnatural world. Krishan Lal v. State of Haryana, AIR 1980 SC 1252 : (1980) 3 SCC 159 : (1980) SCC (Cri) 667 (669, 670) : 1980 CrLJ 926 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 728.

[7812] ● Common sense not to be put in cold storage.—There is no rule of law that common sense should be put in cold storage while considering constitutional provisions for safeguards against misuse of powers by authorities though these provisions should be strictly construed. Bearing this salutary principle in mind and having regard to the conduct of the detenue—Venilal Mehta specially in the mercy petition and other communications the version of the detenue Venilal is feigning lack of any knowledge of English must be judged in the proper perspective. The Court is not denuded of its power to examine the truth. The detaining authority came to the conclusion that he knew both Hindi and English. It has [illegible]

Though justice is depicted to be blindfolded, as popularly said, it is only a veil not to see who the party before it is while pronouncing judgment on the cause brought before it by enforcing law and administer justice and not to ignore or turn the mind/attention of the Court away from the truth of the cause or lis before it, in disregard of its duty to prevent miscarriage of justice. When an ordinary citizen makes a grievance against the mighty administration, any indifference, inaction or lethargy shown in protecting his right guaranteed in law will tend to paralyse by such inaction or lethargic action of Courts and erode in stages the faith inbuilt in the judicial system ultimately destroying the very justice-delivery system of the country itself. Doing justice is the paramount consideration and that duty cannot be abdicated or diluted and diverted by manipulative red herrings. Courts have to ensure that accused persons are punished and that the might or authority of the State are not used to shield themselves or their men. It should be ensured that they do not wield such powers which under the Constitution has to be held only in trust for the public and society at large. If deficiency in investigation or prosecution is visible or can be perceived by lifting the veil trying to hide the realities or covering the obvious deficiencies, Courts have to deal with the same with an iron hand appropriately within the framework of law. It is as much the duty of the prosecutor as of the Court to ensure that full and material facts are brought on record so that there might not be miscarriage of justice. If the State's [illegible] without any definite object of finding out the truth and bringing to book those who were responsible [illegible]

leaves much to be desired. One gets a feeling that [illegible] memorandum of appeal filed was an apology for the grounds. A second amendment was done, that too after this Court expressed its unhappiness over the perfunctory manner in which the appeal was presented and the challenge made. That also was not the end of the matter. There was a subsequent petition for amendment. All this sadly reflects on the quality of determination exhibited by the State and the nature of seriousness shown to pursue the appeal. Criminal trials should not be reduced to be mock trials or shadow-boxing or fixed trials. Judicial criminal administration system must be kept clean and beyond the reach of whimsical political wills or agendas and properly insulated from discriminatory standards or yardsticks of the type prohibited by the mandate of the Constitution. Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2004 SC 3114 : (2004) 4 SCC 158 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 999.

COMMUNALISM/ COMMUNAL RIOTS

[7814] ● Communalism/Communal riots.—Article in newspaper alleged that militant minorities thrive on communalism. Author referred the Muslims generally as 'a basically violent race'. Article contained various aspersions on the Muslim community. Another article criticised naming of Delhi roads after the Moghul emperors who according to the author were lustful perverts, rapists and murderers. Both the articles promoted feelings of enmity, hatred and ill-will between the Hindu and Muslim communities on grounds of community and this could not be done in the guise of political thesis or historical truth. Conviction under section 153-A was proper. Babu Rao Patel v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1980 SC 763 : (1980) 2 SCC 402 : (1980) SCC (Cri) 500 : 1980 CrLJ 529 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 197 : 1980 SCCrR 173 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 94 : (1980) 2 SCWR 63 : ILR (1980) HP 169 (SC) : 1980 Raj LR 390.

[7815] ● Breaking out of communal riots—Offences of.—In the instant case, the order of detention repeatedly states that the detenue committing the alleged five offences set out in the detention order was the cause for breaking out of communal riots in Meerut City. But in the counter affidavit filed on behalf of the respondents, it has been stated that "the communal riots broke out in Meerut on April 14, 1987 on the occasion of Shab-e-Barat. That was controlled by the Administration. However, in the night intervening between May 18/19, 1987 again a communal riot broke out". But all the offences said to have been committed by the detenue were after 9 a.m. on May 19, 1987. It was not in the intervening night between May 18/19. It was, therefore, inaccurate to state that the communal riot broke out due to the incidents attributed to the detenue on May 19, 1987. Shashi Aggarwal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 596 : (1988) 1 SCC 436 : (1988 SCC (Cri) 178 (180) : 1988 CrLJ 839 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 184.

[7816] ● Roping in of suspicious persons belonging to other community.—The investigating agency merely on suspicion have roped-in the persons belonging to the other community who were residing in the locality and then somehow trying to get them identified through the witnesses who belong to the community from where the people were burnt alive and the learned Designated Court was swayed away by the so-called evidence of identification and based the conviction. We have already discussed as to how unreliable the evidence of these eye-witnesses is and no Court on the basis of such unreliable evidence can base conviction, howsoever ghastly the crime may be. In the aforesaid premises, we set aside the conviction and sentence passed by the learned Designated Court under the provisions of TADA Act as well as under different sections of the Indian Penal Code and direct that the appellants be set at liberty forthwith unless they are required in any other case. Mohd Iqbal M. Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 2864 : (1998) 4 SCC 494 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1064 (1085) : 1998 CrLJ 2537 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 355 : (1998) 2 Crimes 106.

[7817] ● Terrorist act—Meaning setting afire chaval of Hindus by members of rival community.—As has been held by the Court in Hitendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 4 SCC 602 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1087 it is not possible to give a precise definition of terrorism or to lay down what constitutes terrorism. But the Court has indicated in the aforesaid decision that it may be possible to describe it as use of violence when its most important result is not merely the physical and mental damage of the victim but the prolonged psychological effect it produces or has the potential of producing on the society as a whole. It has also been stated in the decision that if the object of the activity is to disturb harmony of the society or to terrorise people and the society with a view to disturb even the tempo, tranquility of the society, and a sense of fear and insecurity is created in the minds of a section of the society or society at large, then it will, undoubtedly, be held to be a terrorist Act. In the instant case on the facts that shortly after the demolition of Babri Masjid at Ayodhya, a communal riot erupted in Mumbai and during that period in the locality in question which was predominantly occupied by Muslims, a chawl occupied by Hindus who were in minority was set to fire by the people belonging to the rival community and on account of such fire, several people were burnt alive, it is difficult to accept the contention of Mr. Jain that the activities do not fall within the ambit of TADA. In our opinion judging from the atrocity of the activities and judging from the sensitive and tense atmosphere prevailing in the town, under which the acts were perpetrated resulting ultimately in the death of several persons, the conclusion becomes irresistible that such activities had far reaching consequences and it affects the society at large and the even tempo had been greatly disturbed and as such the provisions of the Act get attracted to such activities. Mohd Iqbal M. Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 2864 : (1998) 4 SCC 494 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1064 : 1998 CrLJ 2537 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 355 : JT 1998 (3) SC 135 : 1998 Cr App R (SC) 305 : (1998) 2 Crimes 106.

[7818] ● Appreciation of evidence; people belonging to one community burnt alive on account of communal frenzy.—We are quite aware of the principle that in a country like India where it is difficult to find witness who has not made any embellishment or exaggeration, and, therefore, in such case Court would be justified in separating the chaff from the grain and then act upon the grain. But where the evidence consists of only chaff as in the present case, question of separating chaff from the grain would not arise. Then again when all the eye-witnesses suffer from the same infirmities as has been discussed by us, the question of one corroborating the other would not arise. If a witness is partly reliable and partly unreliable then one may look for corroboration to the reliable part of the ocular version of a witness. But if a witness is wholly unreliable, the question of corroboration does not arise. It is not doubt true that the incident with which we are concerned in the present case was a ghastly one and on account of communal frenzy, several people belonging to one community were burnt alive by some others but unless and until the prosecution evidence conclusively establishes those others, as the perpetrators of the crimes, it is not possible for a Court of law to record conviction on mere conjectures and hypothesis. Mohd Iqbal M. Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 2864 : (1998) 4 SCC 494 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 1064 (1065) : 1998 CrLJ 2537 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 355 : (1998) 2 Crimes 106.

[7819] ● Communal riot—Chasing of persons responsible for defilement of mosque.—A communal riot broke out on the morning of 18-3-1984. The rioters were running on a rampage hither and thither with bombs, brickbats and other weapons, prowling for human prey. Vinod Kumar Mehta, a 35-year-old IPS officer was then the Deputy Commissioner of Police (DCP) at Port Division, Calcutta. Garden Reach Police Station falls within the territorial limits of his domain and hence he set out to quell the riots, escorted by his Security Guard Mukhtar Ali (a police constable) besides some other police personnel. When they felt that the infuriated rioters were thirsting for victims they thought it safe to go into a mosque expecting asylum. But the Imam of the mosque was not disposed to afford shelter to such people. So they went out of the mosque. Security Guard Mukhtar Ali ran into the house of a private individual while the Deputy Commissioner ran into the house of a police constable (PW 21 Abdul Latif Khan). As the rioters were chasing him PW 24 Md. Hadis Khan, son of PW 21 Abdul Latif Khan gave asylum to the Deputy Commissioner in his house.

The rioters spotted the fleeing cops. The Deputy Commissioner in order to save himself from the fury of the chasing mob got into the bathroom of the house of PW 21 but a few of the marauders pursued him up to that place and caught him and killed him. The Security Guard was also intercepted by the bloodthirsty assailants and he too was killed. Not being satisfied with the death of these police personnel the killers mutilated their corpses, stripped them off, tethered them and tried to incinerate the dead bodies which succeeded only partly as the bodies remained charred. Lokeman Shah v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2001 SC 1706 : (2001) 5 SCC 358 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 829 (834) : 2001 CrLJ 2196 : JT 2001 (4) SC 520.

[7820] ● Appellants acted in rage of fury blindfolded by communal frenzy—No previous enmity or acquaintance.—The appellants had neither any previous enmity with the victims nor even any acquaintance with them. It is an admitted fact that they acted in a rage of fury blindfolded by communal frenzy. We are aware that in most of the communal riots the participants are by and large illiterate and indoctrinated people. When the literate leaders try to keep themselves away, without participating in the perpetration of crimes though, perhaps, some such persons would fan up the communal frenzy by their utterances in the minds of the ignorant poor people who in a deranged fury rush into the streets prowling for prey. It was an unfortunate plight of the people who are ignorant about the real sublime thoughts of religions that they threw themselves into the cauldron of communal delirium which was burning up to the boiling point. That was a time when the minds of the rioters turned demented and no sensible thoughts would enter into them. The leaders and the society have not played their part to teach them that religions are not meant for killing fellow human beings. If ignorance had promoted people to take up cudgels in the name of religion for indulging in carnage or murders they are no doubt liable to be convicted and sentenced for the offence committed by them. But we have great difficulty to treat such a case as rarest of the rare cases in which the alternative sentence of life imprisonment can unquestionably be foreclosed. Thus, we alter the sentence passed on Nasim @ Naso for the offence under section 302 read with Section 149, IPC and impose the next alternative (imprisonment for life) for the said offence. Subject to this modification of the sentence we dismiss both these appeals. Lokeman Shah v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2001 SC 1706 : (2001) 5 SCC 358 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 829 (840) : 2001 CrLJ 2196 : JT 2001 (4) SC 520.

[7821] ● Preservation of communal harmony and public order.—Courts should not normally interfere with matters relating to law and order which is primarily the domain of the concerned administrative authorities. They are by and large the best to assess and to handle the situation depending upon the peculiar needs and necessities, within their special knowledge. Their decision may involve to some extent an element of subjectivity on the basis of materials before them. Past conduct and antecedents of a person or group or an organisation may certainly provide sufficient material or basis for the action contemplated on a reasonable expectation of possible turn of events, which may need to be avoided in public interest and maintenance of law and order. No person, however, big he may assume or claim to be, should be allowed irrespective of the position he may assume or claim to hold in public life to either act in a manner or make speeches which would destroy secularism recognised by the Constitution of India, Secularism is not to be confused with communal or religious concepts of an individual or a group of persons. It means that State should have no religion of its own and no one could proclaim to make the State have one such or endeavour to create a theocratic State. Persons belonging to different religions live throughout the length and breadth of the country. Each person whatever be his religion must get an assurance from the State that he has the protection of law freely to profess, practice and propagate his religion and freedom of conscience. Otherwise, the rule of law will become replaced by individual perceptions of ones own presumptuous good social order. Therefore, whenever the concerned authorities in charge of law and order find that a person's speeches or actions are likely to trigger communal antagonism and hatred resulting in fissiparous tendencies gaining foothold undermining and affecting communal harmony, prohibitory orders need necessarily to be passed, to effectively avert such untoward happenings. State of Karnataka v. Praveen Bhai Thogadia, AIR 2004 SC 2081 : (2004) 4 SCC 684 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1387 (1394) : 2004 CrLJ 1825 : JT 2004 (4) SC 245 : (2004) 2 Crimes 107.

[7822] ● Communal harmony not to suffer and be made dependent upon will of individual.—Communal harmony should not be made to suffer and be made dependent upon the will of an individual or a group of individuals, whatever be their religion, be it of a minority or that of the majority. Persons belonging to different religions must feel assured that they can live in peace with persons belonging to other religions. While permitting holding of a meeting organised by groups or an individual, which is likely to disturb public peace, tranquillity and orderliness, irrespective of the name, cover and methodology it may assume and adopt, the administration has a duty to find out who the speakers and participants are and also to take into account previous instances and the antecedents involving or concerning those persons. If they feel that the presence or participation of any person in the meeting or congregation would be objectionable, for some patent or latent reasons as well as the past track record of such happenings in other places involving such participants, necessary prohibitory orders can be passed. Quick decisions and swift as well as effective action necessitated in such cases may not justify or permit the authorities to give prior opportunity or consideration at length of the pros and cons. The imminent need to intervene instantly, having regard to the sensitivity and perniciously perilous consequences it may result in if not prevented forthwith, cannot be lost sight of. The valuable and cherished right of freedom of expression and speech may at times have to be subjected to reasonable subordination to social interests, needs and necessities to preserve the very core of democratic life— Preservation of public order and rule of law. At some such grave situation at least the decision as to the need and necessity to take prohibitory actions must be left to the discretion of those entrusted with the duty of maintaining law and order, and interposition of Courts—Unless a concrete case of abuse or exercise of such sweeping powers for extraneous considerations by the authority concerned or that such authority was shown to act at the behest of those in power, and interference as a matter of course and as though adjudicating an appeal, will defeat the very purpose of legislation and legislative intent. State of Karnataka v. Praveen Bhai Thogadia, AIR 2004 SC 2081 : (2004) 4 SCC 684 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1387 (1394-95) : 2004 CrLJ 1825.

COMMUNICATION

[7823] ● Communication.—The argument of the appellant is that the statements to PW-2 that he would give her jewels, and that he had gone to the middle house to get them were inadmissible under section 122 of the Evidence Act being communications made to his wife. This is plainly so, and the Courts below ought not to have taken this evidence into consideration. This is the evidence of PW-2 that the accused was seen in the early hours of the 27th May, 1952 while it was still dark, coming down the roof of his house, that he went to the bhusha kothri and came out again and had a bath and put on the dhoti again. This is not inadmissible under section 122, as it has reference to acts and conduct of the appellant and not to any communication made by him to his wife. Ram Bharosey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 704 : 1954 CrLJ 1755.

[7824] ● Decision of continued detention—Communication of.—Section 14 of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act entitles continued detention and does not provide for any formal order. The decision of Government to continue detention beyond three months need not necessarily be communicated to him. Mohammed Afzal Khan v. State of J&K, AIR 1957 SC 173 : 1957 CrLJ 320 : 1957 (1) Mad LJ (Cr) 62.

[7825] ● Objection against production of document—Communication of—In official confidence.—In dealing with objection against the production of a document raised under section 124, Evidence Act Court would have to determine whether the communication in question has been made in official confidence. If the answer to the said question is in the negative then the document has to be produced; if the said answer is in the affirmative then it is for the officer concerned to decide whether the document should be disclosed or not. State of Punjab v. Sodhi Sukdev Singh, AIR 1961 SC 493 : (1961) 2 SCR 371.

[7826] ● Communication—Meaning of.—In order that the detenue should be in position effectively to make his representation against the order, he should have knowledge of the grounds of detention, which are in the nature of the charge against him setting out the kinds of prejudicial acts which the authorities attribute to him. Communication, in this context, must, therefore, mean imparting to the detenue sufficient knowledge of all the grounds on which the order of detention is based. Thus where the grounds are several and are based on numerous speeches said to have been made by the accused himself on different occasions and different dates. Naturally, therefore, any oral translation or explanation given by the police officer serving those on the detenue would not amount to communicating the grounds. Communication, in this context must mean bringing home to the detenue effective knowledge of the facts and circumstances on which the Order of detention is based. The High Court was wrong in its conclusion that in every case communication of the grounds of detention in English, so long as it continues to be the official language of the State, is enough compliance with the requirements of the Constitution. If the detained person is conversant with the English language, he will naturally be in a portion to understand the gravamen of the charge against him and the fact and circumstances on which the order of detention is based. But to a person who is not so conversant with the English language in order to satisfy the requirements of the Constitution, the detenue must be given the grounds in a language which he can understand and in a script which he can read, if he is a literate person. Harikrishan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 911 (914) : (1962) 1 CrLJ 797 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 918.

[7827] ● Communication in official confidence.—The communication must be in official confidence. Cables sent to or received through telegram-office do not answer a document communicated in official confidence. No privilege can be claimed in respect of those cables. Husain Umar v. Dalip Singhji, AIR 1970 SC 45 (52) : (1969) 3 SCC 429 : (1970) SCC (Cri) 99 : 1970 CrLJ 9 : (1970) 1 SCR 130.

[7828] ● Communication—Meaning of.—The ordinary meaning of the word "Communicate" is to impart, confer or transmit information. (Cf. Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, Vol. 1, at p. 352). Where the order of suspension in question was published in the Gazette though that was after the date when the respondent was to retire. But the point whether it was communicated to him before that date. Held, that, once an order is issued and it is sent out to the concerned Government servant, it must be held to have been communicated to him. State of Punjab v. Khem Raj, AIR 1970 SC 214 (218, 219) : (1969) 3 SCC 28.

[7829] ● Order of suspension—Takes effect from date of communication—Not from date of actual receipt.—Once an order is issued and it is sent out to the concerned Government servant, it must be held to have been communicated to the Government servant. It is difficult to accept the view that it is only from the date of the actual receipt by him that the order becomes effective. If that be the true meaning of communication, it would be possible for a Government servant to effectively thwart an order by avoiding receipt of it by one method or the other till after the date of his retirement, even though such an order is passed and despatched to him before such date. An officer, against whom action is sought to be taken, thus may go away from the address given by him for service of such orders or may deliberately give a wrong address and thus prevent or delay its receipt and be able to defeat its service on him. Such a meaning of the word 'communication' ought not to be given unless the provision in question expressly so provides. State of Punjab v. Khem Raj, AIR 1970 SC 214 at 219 : (1963) 3 SCC 28 : 1970 Lab IC 271.

[7830] ● Communication between spouses during marriage.—In the instant case, the father-in-law brought a criminal action for defamation against his son-in-law for some libellous statements made by the son-in-law in his letter to his wife i.e. daughter of the complainant. The letter was produced by the complainant, the daughter of the complainant was not required to be summoned, the letter being available to the complainant father-in-law, the accused objected to the disclosure of the communication on the ground that the letters between the spouses during the marriage are privileged. The plea is not acceptable except where the spouses to whom the communication is made is a witness and claims privilege from disclosure, evidence as to communication between husband and wife during marriage is admissible. M.C. Verghese v. T.J. Ponnan, AIR 1970 SC 1876 : (1970) 3 SCC 513 : (1970) SCC (Cri) 119 : 1970 CrLJ 1651 : (1969) 2 SCR 692.

[7831] ● Admissibility in evidence of communication made during marriage—Bar as to.—The bar to admissibility in evidence of communications made during marriage attaches at the time when the communication is made, and its admissibility will be judged in the light of the status at that date and not the status at the date when evidence is sought to be given in Court. M.C. Verghese v. T.J. Ponnan, AIR 1970 SC 1876 : (1970) 3 SCC 513 : (1970) SCC (Cri) 119 : 1970 CrLJ 1651 : (1969) 2 SCR 692 : 1968 Ker LT 904 : (1970) 2 SCJ 353 : 1970 Mad LJ (Cr) 636.

[7832] ● Duty to communicate judgment to trial Court.—In the instant case, the leave petition had been dismissed on an earlier occasion on the score that the petitioners had not surrendered to judicial custody which is more or less a condition precedent to seeking the leave of this Court to file an appeal. However, the petitioners point out in the present petition for restoration of SLP that although they had offered their person and surrendered before the Assistant Sessions Judge, requesting that they be remanded to jail custody, the Court declined to take them into custody for want of receipt of judgment from the High Court. It is unfortunate that when High Court deliver judgments confirming the conviction and sentence, there is a long delay in communicating the fact of affirmation of the sentence to the trial Courts. A sentence should not be delayed at least after it is confirmed by the High Court but when this happens on account of the indifference of the administrative side of the High Court in the mechanical process of communication to the trial Court, it speaks sadly of the management side of our Court system. We wish that more business-like procedures in such matters were evolved so that the rule of law need not suffer a new shock on account of messy management of judicial business rectifiable by a little more promptitude and attention. Muktinarain Jha v. State of Bihar, AIR 1978 SC 770 (771) : (1978) 1 SCC 497 : (1978) SCC (Cri) 131 : 1978 CrLJ 763 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 85.

COMMUNITY

[7833] ● Word "community" occurring in Section 133(1)(b), CrPC connotation of.—Section 133(1)(b) relates to trade or occupation which is injurious to health or physical comfort. It itself deals with physical comfort to the community and not with those acts which are not in themselves nuisance but in the course of which public nuisance is committed. In order to bring a trade or occupation within the operation of this section, it must be shown that the interference with public comfort was considerable and a large section of the public was affected injuriously. The word "community" in clause (b) of Section 133(1) cannot be taken to mean residents of a particular house. It means something wider, that is, the public at large or the residents of an entire locality. The very fact that the provision occurs in a chapter with "public nuisance" is indicative of this aspect. It would, however, depend on the facts situation of each case and it would be hazardous to lay down any straitjacket formula.

The conduct of the trade must be injurious in praesenti to the health or physical comfort of the community. There must, at any rate, be an imminent danger to the health or the physical comfort of the community in the locality in which the trade or occupation is conducted. Unless there is such imminent danger to the health or physical comfort of that community or the conduct of the trade and occupation is in fact injurious to the health or the physical comfort of that community, an order under Section 133 cannot be passed. A conjoint reading of Sections 133 and 138 of the Code discloses that it is the function of the Magistrate to conduct an enquiry and to decide as to whether there was reliable evidence or not to come to the conclusion to act under Section 133. Kachrulal Bhagirath Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2004 SC 4818 : (2005) 9 SCC 36 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1191 (1196, 1197) : 2004 CrLJ 4634 : 2004 (4) Crimes 99.

COMMUTATION

[7835] ● Commutation.—The Code of Criminal Procedure and along with it Sections 401 and 402-A thereof, relating to commutation of sentence having been made specifically applicable by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1951 to all Part B States, the prerogative under the old Cochin Law must in any case be deemed to have been repealed or abrogated by competent legislative authority after the coming into force of the Constitution. "The sentences of death in the present appeals are liable to be reduced to life imprisonment. We may add a foot note to the ruling in Rajendra Prasad's case (1979) 3 SCC 646 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 749. Taking the cue from the English legislation an abolition, we may suggest that life imprisonment which strictly means imprisonment for the whole of the man's life, but in practice amounts to incarceration for a period between 10 and 14 years may, at the option of the convicting Court, be subject to the condition that the sentence of imprisonment shall last as long as life lasts where there are exceptional indications of murderous recidivism and the community cannot run the risk of the convict being at large." Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1384 : (1979) 3 SCC 745 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 848 : 1979 CrLJ 1058.

[7836] ● Section 433-A CrPC prospective.—The section declares emphatically an imperative intent to keep imprisoned for at least 14 years those who fall within the sinister categories spelt out in the operative part of the section. The section overrides any special or local law as regards remissions and short sentencing schemes. Section 433-A is prospective. It not only excludes Section 432 but also subjects operation of Section 433(a) to serious restrictions and also excludes all contrary Prison Rules in respect of convicts contemplated by it. Maru Ram v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 2147 : (1981) 1 SCC 107 : 1980 CrLJ 1440.

[7837] ● Laws of remission and short-sentencing.—Let us assume for a moment that the laws of remission and short-sentencing are enacted under Entry 4 of List II. In that event the States' competency to enact cannot be challenged. After all, even in prison-prisoner legislation, there may be beneficent provisions to promote the habilitative potential and reduce warder-prisoner friction by stick-cum-carrot strategies. Offer of remission, paroles, supervised releases, opportunities for self-improvement by family contacts, time in community work centres and even meditational centres, can properly belong to prison legislation. Rewards by remissions, like punishments by privations are permissible under Entry 4 of List II. Indeed, progressive rehabilitatory prison laws which have a dynamic correctional orientation and reformatory destination, including meaningful intermissions and human remissions is on the Indian Agenda of unfulfilled legislations. Maru Ram v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 2147 : (1981) 1 SCC 107 : 1980 CrLJ 1440.

[7838] ● Object of 433A CrPC.—The object of Section 433-A CrPC, 1973 is that those, governed by it, shall not be released unless they have served a sentence of at least, 14 years' imprisonment. State of Andhra Pradesh v. G.M. Morey, AIR 1982 SC 1195 : (1982) 2 SCC 436 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 464 : 1982 CrLJ 1571 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 284 : 1982 UJ (SC) 473 : 1982 All Cr Cas 210 (SC) : 1982 SC Cr R 185.

[7839] ● Section 433-A—Not retrospective.—Section 433-A is not retrospective in operation. State of A.P. v. G.M. Moray, AIR 1982 SC 1195 : (1982) 2 SCC 436 : 1982 CrLJ 1571 : 1982 All Cr R 270 : 1982 BBCJ (SC) 143. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) G.M. Moray v. Govt. of A.P., AIR 1982 SC 1163 : (1982) 2 SCC 433 : 1982 CrLJ 1249.

[7840] ● Section 433-A—Applicability and object.—Section 433A CrPC does not govern all life convicts. It does not apply to those convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment before its commencement. It does not apply to those convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment for offences not punishable with death, such as, Sections 304, 307, 326, IPC etc. Those convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment after the commencement of Section 433A, CrPC for offences, for which the sentence of death could have also been imposed alone, are governed by Section 433A, CrPC. The effect of Section 433A, CrPC on those that are governed by it, is that they must undergo imprisonment for a minimum period of 14 years. Those, that are not governed by Section 433A, CrPC, are not bound to undergo imprisonment for a minimum period of 14 years, being eligible for such remissions as may be granted to them by the Government. State of Andhra Pradesh v. G.M. Morey, AIR 1982 SC (1195) : (1982) 2 SCC 436 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 464 : 1982 CrLJ 1571 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 284.

[7841] ● Premature release of lifers under para 516-B Punjab Jail Manual.—Para 651B of the Manual itself contained executive instructions and had no force of a statutory rule. If that be so it would always be open to the State Government from time to time to alter or amend or even withdraw such executive instructions by issuing fresh instructions. In other words any existing executive instructions could be substituted by issuing fresh executive instructions for processing the cases of lifers for premature release but once issued these must be uniformly and invariably applied to all cases of lifers so as to avoid the charge of discrimination under Article 14.

A sentence of imprisonment for life is a sentence for the remainder of the natural life of the convict and there is no question of releasing such a convict earlier in the absence of a formal order of commutation passed by the State Government either under Section 55, IPC or Section 433(b) of CrPC, 1973 and that even the Remission Rules, though statutory, cannot override the statutory provisions contained in the Penal Code. In other words, unlike the cases of prisoners sentenced to terms of imprisonment, in the case of lifers even the Remission Rules though statutory are of no avail in the absence of a formal order of commutation either under Section 55, IPC, or Section 433(b) of CrPC, 1973. Admittedly, in the case of none of the petitioners before us has any order of commutation been passed by the State Government under either of the said provisions. Sadhu Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1984 SC 739 : (1984) 2 SCC 310 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 241 : 1984 CrLJ 404 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 63.

[7842] ● Male prisoner under 20 years of age at the time of commission of offence—Premature release of—When.—Rule 516-B(b) of Punjab Jail Manual provides that a male prisoner aged below 20 years at the time of commission of offence and serving a single sentence of more than 20 years shall be entitled to be considered for premature release after serving 10 years of detention. Standing Board constituted for the purpose is directed to consider premature release of prisoner. Hiralal v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1984 SC 1239 : 1984 Supp SCC 682 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 140 : 1984 CrLJ 995 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 265.

[7843] ● Adolescent offender convicted of capital offence sentenced to life imprisonment.—The State Government of Tamil Nadu cannot keep any adolescent offender who is convicted of a capital offence but sentenced to imprisonment for life in respect of whom an order is made under Section 10A of the Tamil Nadu Borstal Schools Act in a Borstal School or in any other kind of detention after he has attained 23 years of age. We, therefore, direct the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu to release all such inmates of the Borstal Schools in Tamil Nadu who have attained 23 years of age forthwith. C. Elumalai v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1985 SC 118 : (1984) 4 SCC 539 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1985 CrLJ 510 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 33 : 1985 (1) Crimes 650.

[7844] ● Person sent to Borstal School—Not to be detained beyond age of 23 years.—In this case the respondent was convicted of an offence under Section 302, IPC and sentenced to imprisonment for life but as he was 20 years old, the State Government passed orders under Section 10A of the A.P.Borstal Schools' Act and sent him to the Borstal School. As he completed 23 years of age but was not released from the School, he moved the High Court of A.P. for his release. The High Court ordered his release. Against the said order the Government preferred this appeal by special leave. It was submitted on behalf of the appellant that, while a person detained in a Borstal School under Section 10-A of the Act was entitled to be released on his attaining 23 years of age before the commencement of Section 433A of the CrPC, he could not be now released until he had undergone 14 years of imprisonment as prescribed by Section 433A if he was a person who was sentenced to imprisonment for life for an offence for which death is also one of the punishments prescribed by law. Now the crucial question was whether the respondent herein should actually undergo imprisonment for a minimum period of 14 years as insisted upon by Section 433A of the Code. Section 433A came into force on December 18, 1978. The above contention obviously overlooked the words 'prison' and 'imprisonment' in Section 433A of the Code and effect of an order made by the State Government under Section 10A read with Section 8 of Act. As soon as an order was made under Section 10A of the Act in respect of a person who was sentenced to imprisonment for life and was sent to a Borstal School pursuant thereto, he ceased to be a prisoner undergoing imprisonment. He would be a detenu in a Borstal School and the provisions of Section 8 of the Act would have to be given their full effect in his case also. Under Section 8 of the Act the person detained in a Borstal School could be kept there for a maximum period of 5 years and in no case after he had attained 23 years of age. There was no provision for sending back to prison except under Section 14 of the Act. If that Section was inapplicable there was no legal way in which he could be sent back to prison to satisfy the requirements of Sections 433-A of the Code. Moreover, an anomalous situation which would arise in the case of a person sent to a Borstal School under Section 10-A of the Act was that if the period of detention in a Borstal School was not to be counted as the period of imprisonment because detention was in lieu of imprisonment and because a Borstal School was not a prison then such person could not claim by way of credit the period of detention in a Borstal School while computing the 14 years of imprisonment mentioned in Section 433A of the Code. It was obvious that Parliament which was aware of laws like the Acts which were in force in the States did not choose to interfere with them by enacting Section 433A of the Code. If it intended to nullify or modify such laws the non-obstante clause in Section 433-A would have been more comprehensive including all local statutes enacted for the benefit of children and juvenile or adolescent offenders. In the light of the observations made in Maru Ram's case, AIR 1980 SC 2147 : 1980 CrLJ 1440 : (1981) 1 SCR 1196, Section 10-A of the Act remained unimpaired and it had to be given full effect even after the enactment of Section 433A of the Code. The Parliament never intended while enacting Section 433A to deny the benefit available to adolescent offenders under Section 10A of the Act. So construed, a person detained under Section 10A of the Act would have to be released on his attaining 23 years of age. State of A.P. v. Vallabhapuram Ravi, AIR 1985 SC 870 : (1984) 4 SCC 410 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 635 : 1984 CrLJ 1511 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 397 : (1984) 2 Crimes 552 : 1984 Cur CrJ (SC) 453 : 1985 SCCrR 1 : (1985) 1 SCWR 17 : 1984 CrAppR (SC) 376.

[7845] ● Premature release—Consideration for.—Entitlement of convict for pre-mature release should be considered on the basis of prevailing executive instructions—Consideration for pre-mature release could not be deferred on the ground that convict had not completed 14 years of imprisonment. State of Haryana v. Ram Diya, AIR 1990 SC 1336 : (1990) 2 SCC 701.

[7846] ● Release of prisoner—Case of prisoner completing 14 years of detention in jail inclusive of remission.—Paragraph 516-B provides that the case of every convicted prisoner (except female and males below 20 years at the date of the commission of the crime) sentenced to imprisonment for life or imprisonment aggregating to over 14 years and who has undergone a period of detention in jail amounting, together with remission earned to 14 years, 'shall be' submitted to the State Government, through the Inspector-General of Prisons, for orders. In the case of female prisoners or prisoners who were below 20 years on the date of the commission of the crime, reference is required to be similarly made to the State Government on their completing a detention period of 10 years inclusive of remissions. Clause (v), however, provides that notwithstanding anything contained in the earlier part of the paragraph, a Superintendent of Jail 'may', in his discretion, refer at any time for the orders of the State Government, the case of any prisoner sentenced to imprisonment for life whose sentence might in the Superintendent's opinion be suitably commuted to a term of imprisonment. It would appear from a plain reading of this paragraph that in the case of a prisoner who has completed 14 years of detention in jail, inclusive of remissions earned, it is imperative on the part of the Superintendent of the Jail to submit his case, through the I.G. of Prisons, to the State Government for consideration. The use of the word 'shall be submitted' bring out this intention when we contrast them with the word 'may' and the words 'in his discretion' used in Clause (v) thereto which begins with non obstante clause. Therefore, where the intention was to confer a mere discretion on the Superintendent of Jail it was made manifest by the use of the expression 'may' followed by the words 'in his discretion' and where the intention was to cast a duty to submit the case to the State Government, it was brought out by the word 'shall' preceding the words 'be submitted.... for the orders of the State Government'. We have, therefore, no doubt in our minds that paragraph 516-B, through an executive instruction, has been couched in language which clearly shows that in the former type of cases where the prisoner has completed 14 years of detention in jail, inclusive of remissions, his case must be referred to the State Government for consideration. Notwithstanding this limitation of completion of 14 years, Clause (v) confers a discretion on the Superintendent of the Jail to refer or submit the case of a prisoner to the State Government even before he has completed 14 years if in his opinion the case is fit for commuting the sentence. State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, AIR 1990 SC 1396 : (1990) 3 SCC 318 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 419 : 1990 CrLJ 1464 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 273 : 1990 (2) Crimes 260.

[7847] ● Law governing suspension, remission and commutation of sentence—Statutory and constitutional.—The law governing suspension, remission and commutation of sentence is both statutory and constitutional. The stage for the exercise of this power generally speaking is post-judicial, i.e., after the judicial process has come to an end. The duty to judge and to award the appropriate punishment to the guilty is a judicial function which culminates by a judgment pronounced in accordance with law. After the judicial function thus ends the executive function of giving effect to the judicial verdict commences. Ashok Kumar alias Golu v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1792 : (1991) 3 SCC 498 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 845 (857) : 1991 CrLJ 2483.

[7848] ● Commutation of death sentence to life imprisonment—Release of offender.—Section 433-A, CrPC, 1973 begins with a non-obstante clause—notwithstanding anything contained in Section 432, CrPC—and proceeds to say that where a person is convicted for an offence for which death is one of the punishments and has been visited with the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life or where the punishment of an offender sentenced to death has been commuted under Section 433 into one of imprisonment for life, such offender will not be released unless he has served at least 14 years of imprisonment. Therefore, one who could have been visited with the extreme punishment of death but on account of the sentencing Court's generosity was sentenced to lesser punishment of imprisonment for life and another who actually was sentenced to death but on account of executive generosity his sentence was commuted under Section 433(a) for imprisonment for life have been treated under Section 433A as belonging to that class of prisoners who do not deserve to be released unless they have completed 14 years of actual incarceration. Thus the effect of Section 433A is to restrict the exercise of power under Sections 432 and 433 by the stipulation that the power will not be so exercised as would enable the two categories of convicts referred to in Section 433A to freedom before they have completed 14 years of actual imprisonment. This is the legislative policy which is clearly discernible from the plain language of Section 433-A of the Code. Ashok Kumar alias Golu v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1792 : (1991) 3 SCC 498 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 845 (857) : 1991 CrLJ 2483.

[7849] ● Premature release of convict.—In view of mandate of Section 433, CrPC, the High Court cannot make direction to prematurely release the respondent and set him at liberty forthwith. The High Court can only direct consideration of the case of premature release by the Govt. and cannot order premature release of the respondent itself. State of Punjab v. Kesar Singh, AIR 1996 SC 2512 : (1996) 5 SCC 495 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1034 : 1996 CrLJ 3586. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Union Territory of Chandigarh v. Charanjit Kaur, (1996) 7 SCC 492 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 484 : 1996 (1) Crimes 173 (SC).

[7850] ● Life convict—Premature release.—By earning remissions a life convict does not acquire a right to be released prematurely. But if the Government has framed any rule or made a scheme for early release of such convicts then those rules or schemes will have to be treated as guidelines for exercising its power under Article 161 of the Constitution.

If this is the correct legal position then no life convict can validly contend that his case for premature release should be considered according to the Government policy/instructions that were in force on the date on which he came to be convicted as he acquired a right to get remissions as declared and to be released accordingly. If according to the Government policy/instructions in force at the relevant time the life convict has already undergone the sentence for a period mentioned in the policy decision/instructions, then the only right which he can be said to have acquired is the right to have his case put up by the prison authorities in time before the authorities concerned for considering exercise of power under Article 161 of the Constitution. Ordinarily, when an authority is called upon to exercise its powers that will have to be done consistently with the legal position and the Government decision instructions prevalent at that time. However, in order to see that a life convict does not lose any benefit available under the remission scheme which has to be regarded as the guideline, it would be just and proper to direct the State Government to treat the date on which his case is/was required to be put up before the Governor under Article 161 of the Constitution as the relevant date with reference to which their cases are to be considered. State of Haryana v. Balwan, AIR 1999 (SC) 3333 : (1995) 7 SCC 355 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1193 : 1999 CrLJ 4299 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 699 : 1999 (3) Crimes 130.

[7851] ● Sentence commutation of.—The appellant stood convicted under Section 16(1)(a) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act read with Section 7(i) thereof and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 2000. Learned counsel for the appellant made a plea for affording the benefit which has been given to the accused in N. Sukumaran Nair v. Food Inspector, (1997) 9 SCC 101 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 608 : 1995 CrLJ 3651. The said plea is made on the premise that the offence in this case took place in the year 1983 and the food article-groundnut oil on analysis was found not to contain any foreign substance or anything injurious to health and that it was found adulterated solely on the ground that its constituents fell below the standard very marginally.

This case seems to be almost on a parallel with the facts enumerated in the decision cited above. We are also persuaded to extend the same benefit which the appellant in the aforesaid decision was granted by this Court, as this would be an appropriate case for commutation of sentence under clause (d) of Section 433, CrPC, 1973. We, therefore direct the appellant to deposit in the Trial Court a sum of Rs. 10,000 as fine in commutation of the sentence of 6 month imprisonment within a period of 6 weeks from today and intimate to the appropriate Government that such fine has been deposited. On deposit of the fine, the State Government may formalise the matter by passing appropriate order under Cl. (d) of Section 433 of the CrPC. In the meanwhile, the appellant will remain on bail. Santosh Kumar v. Municipal Corporation, (2000) 9 SCC 151 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1184 (1185) : 2000 CrLJ 2777.

[7852] ● Death sentence—Commutation of.—"In the interest of justice, we commute the death sentence imposed upon the appellant and direct that the appellant shall undergo the sentence of imprisonment for life. We further direct that the appellant shall not be released from the prison unless he had served out at least 20 years of the imprisonment including the period already undergone by the appellant". Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2001 SC 2342 : (2001) 6 SCC 296 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095, 1105 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 425.

[7853] ● Sentence of "imprisonment for life" means whole of convicted person's natural life.—Section 433(b) enables the appropriate Government, to commute the sentence of imprisonment for life, for imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years or for five under Section 433A, there is an embargo on that power by providing that where a sentence of imprisonment for life is imposed on the conviction of a person for an offence for which death is one of the punishments provided under the law, such person is not to be released from prison unless he served at least fourteen years of imprisonment. The question is considered by various decisions rendered by this Court and by the Privy Council and it has been reiterated that a sentence of imprisonment for life imposed prima facie be treated as imprisonment for the whole of the remaining period of the convicted person's natural life. It is also established law that rules framed under the Prisons Act do not substitute a lesser sentence of transportation for life. Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2001 SC 2342 : (2001) 6 SCC 296 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095 (1103) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 425.

[7854] ● Death sentence—Commutation of to life imprisonment.—In the instant case, the death sentence imposed on accused shall be commuted to life imprisonment but he shall be incarcerated for the remainder of his life and that he shall not be let loose upon the society as he is a potential danger. Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, AIR 2001 SC 1903 : (2001) 4 SCC 458 : 2001 CrLJ 1825 : (2001) 3 Scale 130.

[7855] ● Life imprisonment imposition of.—In the peculiar circumstances of the case, apprehending imminent danger to the life of Subhash Chander and his family in future, taking on record the statement made on behalf of Krishan Lal (A1) we are inclined to hold that for him the imprisonment for life shall be the imprisonment in prison for the rest of his life. He shall not be entitled to any commutation or premature release under Section 401 of the CrPC, Prisoners Act, Jail Manual or any other statute and the Rules made for the purposes of grant of commutation and remissions. Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, AIR 2001 SC 1903 : (2001) 4 SCC 458 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 735 : 2001 CrLJ 1825 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 454 : JT 2001 (4) SC 444.

[7856] ● Death sentence—Commutation of.—Merely because 8 persons, convicted by the trial Court, were acquitted, by itself cannot be termed to be a justified ground for commuting the death sentence. However, as the High Court, presumably on general conspectus and upon consideration of facts of the case, found that the accused persons should not be awarded death sentence, we feel that for interfering with the discretion of the Court, further exceptional grounds are required to be made out. When two views about the quantum of sentence, a view which favours the grant of life in comparison of death is generally accepted. But for the exercise of the powers by the High Court in commuting the death sentence we had some reservations about the sentence awarded by the impugned judgment but in view of the exercise of discretion in commuting the death sentence we are not inclined to interfere with the sentence awarded to the accused persons specially A6, A7, A8. Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, AIR 2001 SC 1903 : (2001) 4 SCC 458 : 2001 CrLJ 1825.

[7857] ● Conviction and sentence when attaining finality.—The decision in Harbans Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1982 SC 849 : (1982) 2 SCC 101 : 1982 CrLJ 795 does not lay down any rule that an appeal/special leave petition already disposed of by the this Court is to be reheard when an appeal preferred by another set of accused involved in the same incident comes up for consideration at a later stage.

In this present appeals, appellants Gurdev Singh and Satnam Singh were not tried alongwith appellants Piara Singh and Sarabjit Singh. As appellants Gurdev Singh and Satnam Singh were absconding, they could be tried only subsequently in a separate trial. As the special leave petition of Piara Singh and Sarabjit Singh came to be finally disposed of on 28.2.1997 and the conviction and sentence entered against them attained finality, it is not just, proper and legal to hear the appeal and consider the question involved therein on merits again. Gurdev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 4187 : (2003) 7 SCC 258 : 2003 CrLJ 3764.

[7858] ● Commutation/remission of sentence—Relevant factors to be considered.—In the instant case, where the appellant's killed two persons in a marriage ceremony on the course of a frivolous quarrel triggered off by sarcastic remark of one of the deceased, the Supreme Court held as under :

> "We would like to observe that the facts and circumstances of this case prima facie justify remission of the sentence to some extent. But, having found the appellants guilty under Section 302 read with 34, IPC, it is not possible for this Court to reduce the sentence of life imprisonment. It is open to the appellants to approach the State Government/Governor of the State for the commutation or remission of sentence. We may mention that apart from the unexpected turn of events that have taken place, the incident had taken place about three decades back. It is also brought to our notice that the appellant Suresh Chandra is aged about 80 years how and he is ailing. We have no doubt that the applications for commutation/remission of sentence will be duly considered with expedition, taking into account the relevant circumstances." Suresh Chandra v. State of U.P., AIR 2005 SC 3120 : (2005) 6 SCC 130 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1364 (1369) : 2005 CrLJ 3449.

[7859] ● Premature release of life convicts—Policy decision.—The Supreme Court issued a limited notice as to why the State shall not be directed to consider the case of respondent in terms of Mohender Singh, 2007 AIR SCW 6988. In view of the limited notice issued by the Court the counsel for appellants although was not permitted to raise the contention that the date specified by the Court in Balwan Singh, 1999 AIR SCW 3327 should be considered to be cut off date, the Supreme court observed that "the directions contained therein" cannot be held to be declaration of law within the meaning Article 141 of the Constitution of India.

"This Court therein did not have any occasion to consider the legality and/or validity of the policy decision of the State vis-à-vis the Prison Rules".

"The right to ask for remission of sentence by a life convict would be under the law as was prevailing on the date on which the judgment of conviction and sentence was passed. If the executive instructions cannot be given a retrospective effect being not in consonance with the Prisoner's Rules framed under the Prison Act, we fail to understand as to how the said decision constitutes a binding precedent".

We, therefore, are of the opinion that keeping in view the decision of this Court in Mahender Singh, 2007 (12) Scale 669, the impugned judgment should be modified directing the appellant to consider the cases of the respondents. It is, therefore, directed that if the respondents have not already been released the State shall consider their cases in terms of the judgment of this Court in Mahender Singh's case (supra) having regard to the policy decision as was applicable on the date on which they were convicted and not on the basis of the subsequent policy decision of the year 2002. State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1252 : (2009) (2) SCC 268 : 2009 CrLJ 1134 : 2008 (17) SCR 1306.

[7860] ● Suspension or remission of sentence.—Section 432(1) CrPC empowers the State Government to suspend or remit sentences of any person sentenced to punishment for an offence, at any time, without conditions or upon any conditions that the person sentenced accepts, suspend the execution of his sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced. Section 433-A CrPC imposes restriction on powers of remission or commutation where a sentence of imprisonment for life is imposed on conviction of a person for an offence for which death is one of the punishment provided by law or where a sentence of death imposed on a person has been commuted under Section 433 into one of imprisonment for life, such person shall not be released from prison unless he has served at least fourteen years of imprisonment. State of Haryana v. Jagdish, AIR 2010 SC 1690 : (2010) 4 SCC 216 : 2010 CrLJ 2398 : JT 2010 (3) 341 : 2010 (2) Crimes 73 (SC).

[7861] ● Clemency power of executive under Art. 72 and 161 of Constitution.—"The clemency power of the executive is absolute and remains unfettered for the reason that the provisions contained under Article 72 or 161 of the constitution cannot be restricted by the provisions of Sections 432, 433 and 433-A, CrPC, though the authority has to meet the requirements while exercising the clemency power. . . . To say that clemency power under Art. 72/161 of the constitution cannot be exercised by the President or the Governor, as the case may be, before a convict completes the incarceration period provided in the short sentencing policy, even in an exception case, would be mutually in consistent with the theory that clemency power is unfettered". State of Haryana v. Jagdish, AIR 2010 SC 1690 : (2010) 4 SCC 216 : 2010 CrLJ 2398.

[7862] ● Remission of sentence—Power of sovereign.—The power of the sovereign to grant remission is within its exclusive domain and it is for this reason that our Constitution makers went on to incorporate the provisions of Article 72 and Article 161 of the Constitution of India. This responsibility was cast upon the Executive through a Constitutional mandate to ensure that some public purpose may require fulfillment by grant of remission in appropriate cases. This power was never intended to be used or utilised by the Executive as an unbridled power of reprieve. Power of clemency is to be exercised cautiously and in appropriate cases, which in effect, mitigates the sentence of punishment awarded and which does not, in any way, wipe out the conviction. It is a power which the sovereign exercises against its own judicial mandate. The act of remission of the State does not undo what has been done judicially. The punishment awarded through a judgment is not overruled but the convict gets benefit of a liberalised policy of State pardon. State of Haryana v. Jagdish, AIR 2010 SC 1690 : 2010 CrLJ 2390.

COMPANY

[7863] ● Company.—Companies Act, 1913, S. 179.—Section 179 of the Companies Act provides that an Official Liquidator shall have power to prosecute or to institute criminal proceedings on behalf of the company, with the sanction of the Court".

This section lays down the powers of the liquidator regarding institution of criminal proceedings, and does not impose any limitation on the powers of a criminal Court to take cognizance of a criminal case upon a private complaint. It is only an enabling provision which enables the liquidator to take criminal proceedings with the sanction of the Court. It does not control the general law of the land.

The general power of a criminal Court to take cognizance of offences can be restricted only when such a restriction is placed by the express words of a statute, as in Sections 132, 195, 196 and 197, CrPC or in clause 16 of the Drugs Control Order, 1943, or sanction of the Prevention of Corruption Act, and unless when a prosecution without sanction is in direct contravention of any such statutory provision, it cannot be claimed by any accused against whom a criminal proceeding on a private complaint has been instituted, that the Court which has taken cognizance of that offence is incompetent to do so.

Section 179 of the Companies Act cannot operate as a bar against the prosecution of a Director of a company on a charge-sheet submitted by the Police, even though the first information report of the offence committed was lodged by the Official Liquidator. Jaswantrai Munilal Akhaney v. State of Bombay, AIR 1956 SC 575 : 1956 CrLJ 1116 : 1956 SCR 483.

[7864] ● Complaint by liquidator—Absence of direction by Court or hearing of accused persons.—Companies Act, 1913, Ss. 237 (1) and (6); S. 179.—Section 179 of the Companies Act deals with the powers of a Liquidator to institute or defend proceedings with the sanction of the Court. Section 237(1) deals with the powers of the Court to give directions to a Liquidator for the prosecution of delinquent directors or officials of a company. Section 237(2) requires that when any matter is referred to the Registrar of Companies, the Registrar shall produce the papers before the Advocate-General and shall institute proceedings only if the Advocate-General so advises and only after giving the accused an opportunity of making a statement in writing and of being heard thereon.

Section 237(2) applies only to a Registrar and not to a Court acting under section 237(1) and the obligation to give such an opportunity to the accused before prosecuting him does not attach to a Court acting under section 237(1).

Section 237(1) does not lay down any procedure in the matter of the directions which a Court can give to a Liquidator, and nowhere in the Act has it been laid down that the Court must first give a hearing to the persons proposed to be prosecuted before giving the direction to prosecute to a Liquidator, or that a direction given by a Judge to a Liquidator to prosecute a director or other official is a condition precedent to the lawful institution of criminal proceedings by a Liquidator.

Section 179 does not require any sanction for commencing prosecution. It does not purport to impose any limitations on the powers of criminal Court to entertain a criminal prosecution launched by a Liquidator in the ordinary course under the Code of Criminal Procedure. This section does not contain any prohibitory words corresponding to the words contained in Sections 196 and 197, CrPC.

In the present case a liquidator had instituted proceedings against directors of a company without obtaining any sanction or order from a Court with referring the matters to the Registrar, and without giving the accused any opportunity to make a statement. The complaint made by the Liquidator did not suffer from any infirmity and the proceedings were perfectly in order. Sailendra Nath Sinha (Dr.) v. Jasodha Dulal, AIR 1959 SC 51 : 1959 CrLJ 242 : 1959 SCR 1263.

[7865] ● "In the way of his business as agent"—Meaning of.—Companies Act, 1956, S. 252.—As Chairman and Principal officer of the Bharat Insurance Company, Dalmia had the power on behalf of the company to operate on those accounts. The fact that he did not inform the bank, that he had the powers to operate the account does not mean that the power which the company had entrusted to him is nullified. One may have dominion over property, but may not exercise any power which he could exercise with respect to it. Non-exercise of the power will not make the dominion entrusted to him nugatory. Directors are not only agents, but they are in some sense and to some extent trustees or in the position of the trustees of the company's money and property and agents in the transactions which they enter into on behalf of the company. Dalmia as a Director and Chairman of the company was an agent of the company. Directors are also no doubt trustees of assets which come into their hands, or which are under their control. We are, therefore, of the opinion that Dalmia and Chokhani were entrusted with the dominion over the funds of the Bharat Insurance Company in the Banks.

The effect of Raghunath Rai's delivering the blank cheques signed by him to Chokhani in the ordinary course of business might amount to putting Chokhani in sole control, over the funds of the Insurance company in the Bank. The signing of cheques facilitated Chokhani's committing breach of trust.

It was then contended by Chokhani and Dalmia that the term 'agent' in Section 409, IPC is restricted only to those persons who carry on the profession of agents. What Section 409, IPC requires is that person alleged to have committed criminal breach of trust with respect to any property be entrusted with that property, or with dominion over that property, in the way of his business as an agent. The expression 'in the way of his business' means that the property is entrusted to him 'in the ordinary course of his duty or habitual occupation or profession or trade'. He should get the entrustment or dominion in his capacity as agent. In other words, the requirements of this section would be satisfied, if the person be an agent of another and that other person entrusts him with property or with any dominion over that property in the course of his duties as an agent. Chokhani was appointed agent of the Bharat Insurance Company on January 31, 1951. Dalmia, as a Director and chairman of the company, was an agent of the company. Both Dalmia and Chokhani being agents of the company, the control, if any, they had over the securities and the funds of the company would be in their capacity as agents of the company and would be in the course of Dalmia's duty as the Chairman and Director; or in the course of Chokhani's duty as a duly appointed agent of the company. Hence any criminal breach of trust committed by them with respect to the securities and funds of the company would clearly be an offence under section 409, IPC.

In view of the above, the appellants have been rightly convicted of the offences charged. R.K. Dalmia v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 1821 : (1962) 2 CrLJ 805 : (1963) 1 SCR 253.

[7866] ● Offence of conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust in respect of funds of company and making false returns etc.—In the instant case, the police, after investigation submitted a report under section 173, CrPC for offence of conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust in respect of the funds of the company and making false returns, balance-sheets and accounts in furtherance of the object of conspiracy with committing offences punishable under Sections 409 and 477-A, Penal Code and under section 282 of the Companies Act. The contention of the appellants that the Penal Code will not be applicable to a charge made against the Directors in relation to the officers of the Company and the prosecution, if any, may be instituted under the provisions of the Companies Act cannot be accepted. Alamohan Das v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 863 : 1970 CrLJ 860 : (1969) 3 SCR 520.

[7867] ● Obligation to pay dividend arises at place of company's registered office.—Companies Act, 1956, S. 205.—A dividend once declared is a debt payable by the Company to its registered share-holders. It is clear from Section 205 of the Companies Act, 1956 that although under sub-section (3) no dividend shall be payable except in cash, sub-section (5) authorises a company to pay the dividend by a cheque or a warrant. Therefore, dividend can be said to have been paid either when it is paid in cash or when a cheque or a warrant is sent through the post directed to the registered address of the shareholder entitled to payment thereof.

Once, therefore, a dividend warrant is posted at the registered address of the shareholder, dividend is deemed to have been paid. The offence under section 207 of the Companies Act takes place when there is failure to pay or a cheque or a warrant thereof is not posted to the registered address of the shareholder. It will be noticed that the section makes the failure to post within the prescribed period and not the non-receipt of the warrant by the shareholder an offence. Therefore, the obligation to pay within the prescribed period is satisfied once the dividend is paid or a cheque or a warrant therefor is posted at the registered address of the shareholder. Prima facie, both the obligation to post the dividend warrant and the failure to satisfy that obligation would occur at the place where the obligation is to be performed and that would be the registered office of the company and not the address at which the warrant is to be posted. The offence under section 207 is the failure to pay dividend or to post a cheque or a warrant for the dividend amount. Since the obligation to post the warrant arose at the registered office of the company, failure to discharge that obligation also arose at the registered office of the company. Therefore, the alleged offence must be held to have been taken at the place where the company's registered office is situated and not where the dividend warrant, when posted would be received. Hanuman Prasad Gupta v. Hiralal, AIR 1971 SC 206 : (1970) 1 SCC 437 : (1970) SCC (Cri) 190 (192, 193, 195) : 1971 CrLJ 262 : (1970) 3 SCR 788.

[7868] ● Sale of pig iron in contravention of clause (5) of iron and Steel Control Order.—Essential Commodities Act, 1955, Ss. 120 and 10.—In the present case, there is no finding either by the Magistrate or by the High Court that the sale in contravention of clause (5) of the Iron and Steel control order was made by the Company. In fact the company was not charged with the offence at all. The liability of the persons in charge of the company only arises when the contravention is by the company itself. Since in this case there is no evidence and no finding that the company contravened clause (5) of the Iron and Steel Control Order, the two respondents could not be held responsible. The circumstance that the two respondents were in management of the affairs of the company and the firm and were aware of the arrival of the goods would create suspicion against the respondents; but that suspicion could not take the place of proof. In order to justify conviction of the respondents, evidence was needed to show that they knew of the sale or were parties to it. No such evidence was available. So their conviction was not justified. State of Madras v. Parekh, AIR 1971 SC 447 : (1970) 3 SCC 491 : (1971) SCC (Cri) 97 : 1971 CrLJ 418.

[7869] ● Appeal against order of criminal Court passed in trial of Offences under Companies Act.—Companies Act, 1956, S. 624B.—Section 624-B of the Companies Act does not confer any right of appeal from any order passed by a Criminal Court in respect of any offence under the provisions of the Companies act. The right to appeal to the High Court in the present cases of acquittal is governed by Section 417 of the CrPC a right of appeal. Section 624-B only mentions as to the person through whom appeal is presented. An appeal under section 417(3), CrPC against acquittal is competent only when there is special leave granted by the High Court. Assistant Registrar of Companies, West Bengal v. Standard Paint Works (Pvt.) Ltd., AIR 1971 SC 1115 : (1971) 2 SCC 85 : (1971) SCC (Cri) 388 (390) : 1971 CrLJ 827.

[7870] ● Failure to file copies of balance sheet and profit and loss account with Registrar.—It was urged before us that the principle accepted by this Court in State of Bombay v. Bandhan Ram Bhandani, AIR 1961 SC 186 that a company or its directors in a prosecution under section 32 and Section 133 of the Companies Act, 1913 could not in defence to such prosecution rely upon their own failure to call the general body meeting, applies with equal force to a prosecution under section 134 of the Act. But it appears to us that there is a very clear distinction between Ss. 32 and 133 on the one hand and Section 134 on the other hand. Under Section 133 the failure to comply with Section 131 is made punishable. But Section 134 lays down that after balance-sheet and profit and loss account on the income and expenditure account, as the case may be, have been laid before the company at the general meeting three copies thereof shall be filed with the Registrar and not to do so is made punishable under sub-section (4) and a failure. The responsibility of sending three copies of the balance-sheet and profit and loss account or the income and expenditure account, as the case may be, arises only after they have been laid before the company at the general meeting. Without so laying, copies could not be sent to the Registrar and even if they are sent it would not be a compliance with the provisions of the section. It is possible to conceive of the law providing that the balance-sheet and profit and loss account shall be sent to the Registrar even without the necessity of their being laid before the general body meeting of the Company. In that case, any failure to do so would be punishable and the question whether a general body meeting had been held and the balance-sheet and profit and loss account have been laid before it will not arise. Therefore, the condition precedent or the essential prerequisite of the balance-sheet and the profits and loss account being laid before the general meeting of the company not being fulfilled, the requirement of Section 134 cannot be complied with. Under Section 134 of the 1913 Act the obligation to send a copy of the balance-sheet and profit and loss account is dependent completely on its being laid before a general meeting. It is clear, therefore, that on principle and authority it should be held that no offence was committed by the directors in this case under section 134. They might have been guilty of offences under Ss. 76 and 133 but not under section 134. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Andhra Provincial Potteries Ltd., AIR 1973 SC 2429 : (1973) 2 SCC 786 : (1973) SCC (Cri) 1062 (1066, 1067, 1068) : 1973 CrLJ 1616 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 593 : (1974) 1 SCR 410.

[7871] ● Nomination under Section 17(2) of PFA Act Prosecution of person not nominated.—On the plain meaning of Section 17 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, when an offence has been committed by a company, where there is no nomination under section 17(2) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration act, 1954, every person who at the time the offence was committed was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business, is deemed to be guilty of the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished. Notwithstanding the nomination of a person under Section 17(2), any Director, Manager, Secretary or other officer of the company (not being a person nominated under sub-s. (2) of Section 17 can also be vicariously made liable if it is proved that the offence has been committed with the consent or connivance of or is attributable to any neglect on the part of such person. Delhi Administration v. *I.K. [7872] ● Charge in pro rata offer of new share not violative of basic character of private company.—A change in the pro rata method of offer of new shares is not violative of the basic characteristics of a private company which becomes a public company by virtue of Section 43-A of the Companies act, 1956. To this limited extent only, but not beyond it, the provisions of sub-s. (1-A) of Section 81 can apply to such companies. Needle Industries (India) Ltd. v. Needle Industries Newey (India) Holding Ltd., AIR 1981 SC 1298 : (1981) 3 SCC 333 : (1981) 3 SCR 698.

[7873] ● Conditions subjects to which deposits be invited or accepted.—The power conferred by Section 58-A of the Companies Act, 1956 on the Central Government to prescribe the limits up to which, the manner in which and conditions subject to which deposits may be invited or accepted by non-banking companies had a definite object, namely, to check the abuse by the corporate sector and to protect the depositors/investors. Mischief was known and the regulatory measure was introduced to remedy the mischief. The conditions which can be prescribed to effectuate this purpose must a fortiori, to be valid, fairly and reasonably, relate to checkmate the abuse of juggling with the depositors'/ investors' hard earned money by the corporate sector and to confer upon them a measure of protection, namely, availability of liquid assets to meet the obligation of repayment of deposit which is implicit in acceptance of deposit. can it be said that the condition prescribed by the Companies (Acceptance of Deposits) Rules, 1975 are irrelevant or have no reasonable nexus to the objects sought to be achieved as to be arbitrary? The answer is emphatically in the negative. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd v. Union of India, AIR 1983 SC 937 : (1983) 4 SCC 166 : 1983 UJ (SC) 699 : (1983) 3 SCR 438.

[7874] ● Section 58-A inserted by Companies Amendment Act not violative of permissible limit of delegated legislation.—The Companies Act, 1956 as a whole and Section 58-A in part lay down a legislative policy, namely, gradual ever-widening and effective control of the corporate sector so as to ensure a measure of protection to the persons dealing with it. The policy is definite, guidelines are available from the history of the legislation and Companies Act taken as a whole and one cannot shut one's eye to articulated sickness in private sector undertakings all around so that this feeble measure extending only a semblance of protection can be struck down as arbitrary or as violative of the permissible limits of delegated legislation. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1983 SC 937 : (1983) 4 SCC 166 : 1983 UJ (SC) 699 : (1983) 3 SCR 438.

[7875] ● Placement before each House of Parliament every rule enacted sufficient to check transgression of permissible limits.—Companies Act, 1956, S. 58A (as inserted by Companies (Amendment) Act (41 of 1974).—Moreover Deposit Rules have been framed in exercise of power conferred by Sections 58A and 642 of the Companies Act. Section 642 requires that every rule enacted in exercise of the power conferred by it, must be placed before each House of Parliament for a period of thirty days and both Houses have power to suggest modification in the proposed rules. This Control of Parliament is sufficient to check any transgression of permissible limits of delegated Legislation by the delegate. *Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. [7876] ● Rule 3-A of Companies (Acceptance of Deposits) Rules not ultra vires Section 58A.—Rule 3A does extend some protection to a depositor howsoever minimal it may be. When Rule 3A is viewed in the context of various other provisions denied to extend protection to depositors and investors it does play a small but effective part whereby liquid finance would be available to the company accepting deposits maturing during the year. ... Section 58-A amongst various other things was designed to introduce some measure of control over the non-banking companies inviting and accepting deposits in the ultimate interest of the depositors, and by compelling limited liquidity in resources, the society at large was sought to be protected from the ever haunting spectre of sickness in industry often conveniently resorted to by the private sector companies. Section 58A must receive its legitimate construction in the backdrop of this fact situation. Viewed from this angle, Section 58A will enable the Central Government to prescribe conditions subject to which deposits can be accepted and one such condition would be how to readily make a small position of the deposit available for repayment because while inviting and accepting deposits, it is implicit therein that repayment would be assured on the date of maturity. Hence Rule 3A is not ultra vires of the provisions of Section 58-A. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1983 SC 937 : (1983) 4 SCC 166 : (1983) 3 SCR 438.

[7877] ● Sessions Trial—Must proceed de die in diem until concluded.—It is an entirely wholesome practice for the trial to go on from day-to-day. It is most expedient that the trial before the Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously from its inception to finish. Not only will it result in expedition, it will also result in elimination of maneuver and mischief. It will be in the interest of both the prosecution and the defence that the trial proceeds from day-to-day. It is necessary to realise that Sessions cases must not be tried piece-meal. Before commencing a trial, a Sessions Judge must satisfy himself that all necessary evidence is available. If it is not, he postpone the case but on a strongest possible ground and for the shortest possible period. Once, the trial commences, he should, except for a very pressing reason which makes an adjournment inevitable, proceed de die in diem until the trial is concluded. Lt. Col. S.J. Chaudhary v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1984 SC 618 : (1980) 3 SCC 437 : (1984) SCC (Cri) 163 (163, 164) : 1984 CrLJ 340 (SC).

[7878] ● Contravention by company of order under Section 3 of Essential Commodities Act.—Essential Commodities Act, 1955, S. 10.—Section 10 of the Essential Commodities Act (10 of 1955) does not provide that if it is alleged that the person contravening the order made under the Essential Commodities is a Company, the prosecution of the Directors, the officers, and servants of the company or other persons is precluded unless the company itself is prosecuted. Section 10 of the aforesaid Act indicates the persons who may be prosecuted where the contravention is made by the company. It does not lay down any condition that the person-in-charge or an officer of the company may not be separately prosecuted if the company itself is not prosecuted. Each or any of them may be separately prosecuted or along with the Company. Section 10 of the Act lists the persons who may be held guilty and punished when it is a Company that contravenes an order made under section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act. Naturally, before the person-in-charge or an officer of the company is held guilty in that capacity it must be established that there has been a contravention of the order by the Company. Sheoratan Agarwal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1984 SC 1824 (1825) : (1984) 4 SCC 352 : (1984) SCC (Cri) 620 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 388 : (1984) 2 Crimes 566 : (1985) 1 SCR 719.

[7879] ● Right of share holder to requisition extraordinary meeting of company.—Mere appointment of a Receiver under section 182-A of the U.P. Land Revenue Act, 1901 in respect of certain shares of a company without more cannot deprive the holder of the shares whose name is entered in the register of Members of the company the right to vote at the meetings of the company or to issue a notice under section 169 of the Companies Act, 1956. Balkrishan Gupta v. Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., AIR 1985 SC 520 : (1985) 2 SCC 167.

[7880] ● Shares held by share holder attached under Section 149 of U.P. Land Revenue Act.—An order of attachment of shares of a company held by a shareholder for purpose of sale in a proceeding under section 149 of the U.P. Land Revenue Act 1901 cannot have the effect of depriving the holder of the shares of his title to the shares. The attachment of the shares has not deprived the shareholders of its right to vote at the meeting or to issue the notice under section 169 of the Companies Act, 1956. Bal Krishan Gupta v. Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., AIR 1985 SC 520 (535) : (1985) 2 SCC 167.

[7881] ● Appointment of Receiver under Section 182-A of U.P. Act—Effect.—A perusal of the provisions of Section 182-A of the U.P. Land Revenue Act shows that there is no provision in it which states that on the appointment of a person as a Receiver, the property in respect of which he is so appointed vests in him similar to the provision in Section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909 where on the making of an order of adjudication the property of the insolvent wherever situated would vest in the official assignee, or in Section 28(2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 which states that on the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent would vest in the Court or in the Official Receiver. Sub-s (4) of Section 182-A of the Land Revenue Act provides that Rr. 2 to 4 of O. XL of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 shall apply in relation to a Receiver appointed under that section. A Receiver appointed under O. XL of the Code of Civil Procedure only holds the property committed to his control under the order of the Court but the property does not vest in him. The privileges of a member can be exercised by only that person whose name is entered in the Register of Members. A Receiver whose name is not entered in the Register of Members cannot exercise any of those rights unless in a proceeding to which the company concerned is a party and an order is made therein. Balkrishan Gupta v. Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., AIR 1985 SC 520 : (1985) 2 SCC 167 : (1985) 2 SCR 854.

[7882] ● Seizer of books, documents and papers by Investigating Officer.—In the course of investigation, the Investigating Officer has seized and taken into his possession various books, documents and papers. It appears that the petitioners have obtained directions for convening a meeting of the unsecured creditors of the company. As the meeting is once postponed it is likely that it may be directed to be convened in near future. To facilitate holding of the meeting of the company, any documents seized in the course of the investigation are necessary, an appropriate application shall be made to the learned Company Judge and upon his direction, the Investigating Officer in whose possession or custody the documents are retained shall produce-them before the Chairman, presiding over the meeting who after taking necessary inspection and permitting taking of the photostat copies shall return them to the Investigating Officer and he is entitled to retain the same and shall retain them. Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 are at liberty to approach the Investigating Officer and he will grant necessary facility for taking inspection of the documents seized. Eastern Spinning Mills Shri Virendra Kumar Sharda v. Rajiv Poddar, AIR 1985 SC 1668 (1669) : 1989 Supp (2) SCC 385 : 1985 CrLJ 1858.

[7883] ● Attachment and sale of property—Rights of judgment debtor.—The effect of an order of attachment is what Section 149 of the Land Revenue Act itself says. Such attachment is made according to the law in force for the time being for the attachment and sale of moveable property under the decree of a Civil Court. Section 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 states an attachment under section 149 of the Land Revenue Act is made according to the law in force for the time being for the attachment and sale of moveable property under the decree of a Civil Court. Section 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 says that the properties that are liable to attachment for purposes of sale. Section 64 of the CPC, 1908 states that where an attachment of a property is made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, divided or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. What is forbidden under section 64, CPC is a private transfer by the judgment debtor of the property attached contrary to the attachment. A private transfer under section 64, CPC is not absolutely void that is void as against all the world but void only as against the claims enforceable. Until the property is actually said, the judgment-debtor retains title in the property attached. Under R. 76 of O. 21 of the CPC, 1908 the shares in a Corporation which are attached may be sold through a broker. In the alternative such shares may be sold in public auction under R. 77 thereof. On such sale either under R. 76 or under R. 77, the purchaser acquires title. Until such sale is effected, all other rights of the judgment-debtor remain unaffected even if the shares may have been seized by the officers of the Court under R. 43 of O. 21 of the CPC, 1908 for the purpose of effecting the attachment, or through a Receiver or though an order in terms of R. 46 of O. 21 of the CPC may have been served on the judgment-debtor or on the company concerned. Balkrishan Gupta v. Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., AIR 1985 SC 520 (534) : (1985) 2 SCC 167 : (1985) 2 SCR 854.

[7884] ● Preventive Detention—Discharge of detenu in criminal case.—It is not possible to urge that simply because a man has been discharged in a criminal case, those grounds could not be grounds for preventive detention. But there must be live links between the grounds of criminal activities alleged by the detaining authority and the purpose of detention. This credible chain would be snapped if there was too long and unexplained interval between the offending acts and the order of detention. There must be proximity, but no mechanical test of counting months of interval can be laid down—it depends on the nature of the acts alleged or relied, gravity of the situation and the reason for the delay. It is in that background only that it can be said that casual connection is broken. The power to detain and the right to liberty must be harmoniously balanced in the larger interest of the community. Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1986 SC 2177 : (1986) 4 SCC 378 : (1986) SCC (Cri) 452 (471-472) : 1986 CrLJ 2047 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 21.

[7885] ● Offence under Section 5 of Imports and Exports (Central) Act—Prosecution of company and it Managing Director.—In the instant case, the Dy. Chief Controller of Imports and Exports filed a complaint under the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 against a company and its Managing Director. In the petition of the complainant there was clear allegation that the Managing Director had committed the offence acting on behalf of the licensee. Obviously the company has to act through some one and had acted through the Managing Director. The complaint against the Managing Director cannot be quashed on the ground that offence under section 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 must be principally done by the licensee. If facts alleged in the complaint prima facie show commission of offence, complaint can be quashed in absence of witnesses or copies of documents etc. T.J. Stephen v. Parle Bottling Co. (Pvt.) Ltd., AIR 1988 SC 994 : 1988 Supp SCC 458 : (1988) SCC (Cri) 690 : 1988 CrLJ 1095 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 231 : JT 1988 (1) SC 606.

[7886] ● Expression 'officer or employee' in Section 630(1)(b) of Companies Act also includes those whose employment terminated.—Companies Act, 1956, S. 630.—This Court in Baldev Krishna Shahi v. Shipping Corporation of India Ltd., (1987) SCC (Cri) 750 has placed a beneficent construction on the provisions contained in sub-section (1) of Section 630 of the Companies Act, 1956 and according the term "officer or employee" in sub-s. (1) of Section 630 of the Companies act, 1956 must be interpreted to mean not only the present officers and employees of a company but also to include the past officers and employees of the company. It has also been taken the view that the words "any such property" cl. (b) thereof qualify the words "any, property of a company" appearing in cl. (a). As observed in Baldev Krishna Sahi's case Section 630 plainly makes it an offence if an officer or employee of a company who was permitted to use the property of the company during his employment, wrongfully retains or occupies the same after the termination of his employment. It is the wrongful withholding of such property, meaning the property of the company after termination of the employment which is an offence under section 630(1)(b) of the Act. The construction placed by this Court in Baldev Krishna Sahi's case is the only construction possible. Therefore, that is no warrant to give restrictive meaning to the term "officer or employee" appearing in Section 630 of the Act as meaning only the existing officers and employees and not those whose employment has been terminated. Amrit Lal Chum v. Devoprasad Dutta Roy, AIR 1988 SC 733 : (1988) 2 SCC 269 : (1988) SCC (Cri) 339 (341) : JT 1988 (1) SC 218 : (1988) 2 SCR 783 : (1988) 1 Crimes 596.

[7887] ● "Related person"—Meaning of.— Central Excise and Salt Act, 1944, S. 4(4)(c).—

"The words "related person" have been considered by this Court in Union of India v. Atic Industries Ltd., AIR 1984 SC 1495. It has been held that the first part of the definition of "related person" in clause (c) of sub-section (4) of Section 4. Act 1944 defines "related person" to mean a "person who is so associated with the assessee that they have interest directly or indirectly in the business of each other". It is not enough, the Court observed, that the assessee has an interest, direct or indirect in the business of the person alleged to be a related person nor is it enough that the person alleged to be a related person has an interest direct or indirect in the business assessee. To attract the applicability of the first part of the definition, it was observed, the assessee and the person alleged to be a related person must have interest, direct or indirect in the business of each other. Each of them must have a direct or indirect interest in the business of the other. The quality and degree of interest which each has in the business of the other may be different; the interest of one in the business of the other may be direct while the interest of the latter in the business of the former may be indirect. That would not make any difference so long as each has got some interest, direct or indirect in the business of the other.

After sales service undertaken by the distributors was more in the nature of replacement of defective goods sold, which any manufacturer was bound to do and that is a normal essential service of a distributor

It appears that the link between the respondents T.I. Miller Ltd. Company and T.I. & M. Sales Ltd., is the main distributors of M/s Tube Investments of India Ltd., who are the holding company of the respondents. This relationship does not satisfy the criteria for establishing the related persons concept. These were limited companies at the material time, and it will be difficult to say that a limited company has any interest direct or indirect in the business carried on by one of its shareholders. Collector of Central Excise v. T.I. Millers Ltd., Madras & T.I. Diamond Chain, AIR 1988 SC 1154 (1155, 1158) : 1988 Supp SCC 361 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 300 : (1988) 3 SCR 355.

7888] ● 'Continuing offence'—Meaning and effect of.—Section 630(1)(B), Companies Act, 1956.—The concept of continuing offence does not wipe out the original guilt, but it keeps the contravention alive day by day. It may also be observed that the Courts when confronted with provisions which lay down a rule of limitation governing prosecutions, in cases of this nature, should give due weight and consideration to the provisions of Section 473 of the Code which is in the nature of an overriding provision and according to which, notwithstanding anything contained in the provisions of Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure any Court may take cognizance of an offence after the expiration of a period of limitation if, inter alia, it is satisfied that it is necessary to do so in the interest of justice. The expression 'continuing offence' has not been defined in the Code. The question whether a particular offence is a 'continuing offence' or not must, therefore, necessarily depend upon the language of the statute which creates that offence, the nature of the offence and the purpose intended to be achieved by constituting the particular act as an offence. Applying the law enunciated above to the provisions of Section 630 of the Companies Act, we are of the view that the offence under this section is not such as can be said to have consummated once for all. Wrongful withholding, or wrongfully obtaining possession and wrongful application of the company's property, that is, for purposes other than those expressed or directed in the articles of the company and authorised by the Companies Act, cannot be said to be terminated by a single act or fact but would subsist for the period until the property in the offender's possession is delivered up or refunded. It is an offence committed over a span of time and the last act of the offence will control the commencement of the period of limitation and need be alleged. The offence consists of a course of conduct arising from a singleness of thought, purpose of refusal to deliver up or refund which may be deemed a single impulse. Considered from another angle, it consists of a continuous series of acts which endures after the period of consummation on refusal to deliver up or refund the property. It is not an instantaneous offence and limitation begins with the cessation of the criminal act, i.e. with the delivering up or refund of the propriety. It will be a recurring or continuing offence until the wrongful possession, wrongful withholding or wrongful application is vacated or put an end to. The offence continues until the property wrongful obtained or wrongfully withheld or knowingly misapplied is delivered up or refunded to the company. For failure to do so sub-section (2) prescribes the punishment. This, in our view, is sufficient ground for holding that the offence under Section 630 of the Companies Act is not one time but a continuing offence and the period of limitation must be computed accordingly, and when so done, the instant complaints could not be said to have been barred by limitation. Gokak Patel Valkart Ltd. v. Durdayya G. Hiremath, (1991) 2 SCC 141 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 315 (327-28) : (1991) 1 Crimes 556.

[7889] ● Managing Director verifying returns of company as principal officer.—In view of Section 139 read with Section 140(c) of the Income Tax Act the return has to be signed by the principal officer of the Company. A statutory obligation is cast on the principal officer to sign the tax returns. The substitution of the words made under the new Amendment Act of 1975 will not in any way alter the position with regard to the operation of the provisions of the Income-tax Act as against a Managing Director of a company when he has signed the return of the company in such capacity. The effect of the amended Section 140(C) of the Act is that the company's return of income should be signed only by the managing director or by any director, when there is no managing director, and not by the Secretary or the treasurer who are, however, included within the meaning of "principal officer" under section 2(35) of the Act. By the introduction of Section 278-B by the Taxation Laws (Amendment) Act of 1975, with effect from 1st October, 1975, it is enacted that where an offence, under the Income-tax Act, 1961 has been committed by a company, every person who, at the time the offence was committed, was in charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the company, as well as the company, shall be deemed to be guilty of the offence and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly. The effect of the new section is to make every person connected with the affairs of the company, apart from the Managing Director who has signed the return, liable to be proceeded against and punished. M.R. Pratap v. V.M. Muthukrishnan, AIR 1994 SC 674 (678) : (1992) 3 SCC 384 : 1994 CrLJ 628 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 493 : (1992) 2 Crimes 349.

[7890] ● Cassette not reliable piece of evidence.—Corrupt Practice under Representation of the People Act (43 of 1951).—From the evidence of PW-1 and the election petitioner it is found that the story regarding the recording of the cassette Ex P-7 by Shri Ingini is shrouded in mystery and the cassette, Ex P-7 appears to be a piece of evidence on which reliance cannot be placed since the very basis as to how it came to be recorded and why it was preserved or how the election petitioner came to know about it, has not been explained by the election petitioner and has been further confused by Basavaraj Ingini, appearing as Court Witness. The appellant has denied his voice in the recorded cassette. ... The manner in which cassette Ex. P. 7 came into existence and was produced at the trial and relied upon by the election petitioner has created an impression on our minds that the election petitioner has not come out with the true story. The learned Trial Judge fell in error, even without going into the question of the admissibility of cassette Ex P-7, which, has been seriously disputed by Mr. Subal in view of the denial by the returned candidate that the voice in the cassette was his, to rely upon his piece of evidence and to hold on the basis thereof, that the appellant was guilty of committing the corrupt practices covered by Section 123(2), (3), (3-A) of the Representation of People Act, 1951. We find ourselves unable to rely on cassette Ex P-7 or to hold that it was recorded in the manner and at the time and place as deposed to by the election petitioner and Shri Ingini. The cassette Ex P-7 is not a reliable piece of evidence. Quamarul Islam v. S.K. Kanta, AIR 1994 SC 1733 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 5 : JT 1994 (1) SC 452.

[7891] ● Failure of company to prove premises given to appellant in lieu of his services.—The appellant had joined the services of M/s Rallis India Ltd. He had occupied a residential flat. He resigned. The Rallis India Ltd., the second respondent (the company, hereinafter), initiated proceedings against the appellant under Section 408, IPC and Section 630 of the Companies Act for the continued occupation of the appellant in the said flat. The Magistrate, by his order found the appellant guilty of offence under section 630 of the Companies Act and directed restitution of the flat. The Trial Court after considering the entire evidence recorded the findings holding that the company failed to prove that they are the tenant in respect of the suit premises. They had not given the premises to the appellant under leave and licence agreement, as pleaded by them in the plaint. The company failed to prove that the appellant is a licensee of the suit premises. It also failed to prove that the premises were given to the appellant in lieu of his services. On the other hand, the appellant proved that he is a monthly tenant of the premises with the landlords Badami etc.. The Civil Court after full dressed trial Court recorded the finding that the appellant had not come into possession through the company but had independent tenancy rights from the principal landlord, and, therefore the decree for eviction was negatived. The findings, recorded by the Criminal Court, stand superseded by the findings recorded by the Civil Court. Thereby, the findings of the Civil Court get precedence over the findings recorded by the Trial Court in particular, in summary trial for offences like Section 630, Companies Act. The mere pendency of the appeal does not have the effect of suspending the operation of the decree of the Trial Court and neither the finding of the Civil Court gets nor the decree becomes inoperative. That it cannot be held that the appellant has been in wrongful possession of the property entailing his conviction and punishment under section 630 of the Companies Act and requiring handing over of the possession of the flat. The appeal is accordingly allowed. V.M. Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1996 SC 339 (339, 340, 341) : (1995) 5 SCC 767 : (1995) SCC (Cri) 1077.

[7892] ● Wrongful possession of property.—In Baldev Krishna v. Shipping Corporation of India Ltd., AIR 1987 SC 2245 this Court considered the scope of sub-section (1) of Section 630 of the Companies Act, 1956 and held that an officer or an employee of a company who obtains possession of any property of the company during the course of his employment, to which he is not entitled but for employment, if he does not deliver possession of such property to the company, after termination of his employment to the company, he would be in wrongful possession of such property. Therefore, the existence of the relationship of employer and employee is a condition precedent. If the employee, having any property of the company in his possession wrongfully withholds it or knowingly applies it to purposes other than those expressed or directed in the articles of company and authorised by the Companies Act, he will be liable for the punishment under section 630 of the Companies Act. V.M. Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1996 SC 339 (340) : (1955) 5 SCC 767 : (1995) SCC (Cri) 1077 : JT 1995 (6) SC 433.

[7893] ● Fishing by foreign vessels in depth less than 40 fathoms of water in contravention of terms of permit.—Under Section 5 of the Maritime Zones of India (Regulation of Fishing by Foreign Vessels) Act, 1981 to fish in the Maritime Zones of India, on the allegation that they were fishing in a depth of less than 40 fathoms to water in contravention of the terms and conditions of the permits.

For the alleged contravention the Companies which owned the vessels and their Managing Directors as well the Companies which had chartered them and their Managing Directors were prosecuted.

Section 17(i) of the Maritime Zone of India (Regulation of Fishing by Foreign Vessels) Act, 1981 clearly says that when the offence is committed by a company, persons responsible to the company for the day-to-day business will be also liable alongwith the company for the offence committed unless, of course, they can prove that the offence was committed without their knowledge or they exercised due diligence to prevent its commission. The evidence on record unmistakably proves that the Managing Directors herein were responsible to their respective companies for the conduct of their business and they (the Managing Director) did not bring on record any material to avail of the proviso of the above sub-section and for that matter, to exonerate themselves from the offences committed by their companies. V.B.C. Export Pvt. Ltd. v. Commander S.D. Baijal, AIR 1996 SC 2682 : (1996) 5 SCC 382 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 1031 (1032, 1034) : 1996 CrLR 3981.

[7894] ● Complaint—Meaning of.—The word "complainant" is not defined in the Code of Criminal Procedure, whether old or new. Any person can set the law in motion except in cases where the statute has specifically provided otherwise. The word "person" is defined in the Indian Penal Code (Section 11) as including "any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not". By virtue of Section 2(y) of the new CrPC, words and expressions used in that Code but not defined therein can have the same meaning assigned to them in the Penal Code. Thus, when the word "person" is specifically defined in the Penal Code as including a company, that definition can normally be adopted for understanding the scope of the word "complainant". However, the definition clauses subsumed in Section 2 of the new CrPC contains the opening key words that such definitions are to be adopted "unless the context otherwise requires". Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, AIR 1998 SC 596 : (1998) 1 SCC 687 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 475 (481) : 1998 CrLJ 856 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 176.

[7895] ● Offence under TADA—Prosecution of Company not permissible.—The company is not a natural person. In many recent penal statutes, companies or corporations are deemed to be offenders on the strength of the acts committed by persons responsible for the management or affairs of such Company or Corporations e.g. Essential Commodities Act, Prevention of Food Adulteration Act etc. But there is no such provision in TADA which makes the company liable for the act of its officers. Hence there is no scope whatsoever to prosecute a company for the offence under section 3(4) of TADA. Kalpnath Rai v. State, AIR 1998 SC 201 : (1997) 8 SCC 733 : (1998) SCC (Cri) 134 (152) : 1998 CrLJ 369 : JT 1997 (9) SC 18 : (1997) 4 Crimes 227.

[7896] ● Offence by company of pollution of streams and rivers by trade effluents.—Where an offence under the Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Act, 1974 has been committed by a company, every person who was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business of the company is also made guilty of the offence by the statutory creation. Any director, manager or other officer of the company, who has consented to or connived in the commission of the said offence, is made liable for the punishment of the offence. What is to be looked at during the stage of issuing process is whether there are allegations in the complaint by which the managers or directors of the company can also be proceeded against, when the company is alleged to be guilty of the offence. U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Mohan Meakins Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 1456 (1460) : (2000) 3 SCC 745 : 2000 CrLJ 1799.

[7897] ● Companies Act does not prohibit enforcement of debt due from company.—There is no provision in the Companies Act which prohibits enforcement of the debt due from a company. When a company goes into liquidation, enforcement of debt due from the company is only made subject to the conditions prescribed therein. But that does not mean that the debt has become unenforceable altogether. Perhaps due to want of sufficient assets of the company the realisation of a debt would be different. But that is no premise to hold that the debts is legally unenforceable. Enforceability of a debt is not to be tested on the touchstone of the modality or the procedure provided for its realisation or recovery. Hence, the contention that the special provision incorporated in the Companies Act regarding the debts and liabilities due from the company will render the debt unenforceable, cannot be accepted.

The alternative approach is this : even assuming that any disposition of the property made by a company after commencement of the winding-up proceedings is null and void, how is that an escape ground from the offence under section 138, N.I. Act. That section created a statutory offence which on the confluence of the various factors enumerated therein, commencing with the drawing of the cheque and ending with the failure of the drawer of the cheque to pay the amount covered by it within the time stipulated ripens into a penal liability. Pankaj Mehra v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 1953 : (2000) 2 SCC 756 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 556 (567) : 2000 CrLJ 1781 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 237 : JT 2000 (2) SC 113.

[7898] ● Section 22 of SICA does not bar criminal proceedings against company or its directors.—Section 22 of the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Act, 1985 does not create any legal impediment for institution and proceeding with a criminal case on the allegations of an offence under section 138 of the N.I. Act against a company or its directors. The section only creates an embargo against disposal of assets of the company for recovery of its debts. The purpose of such an embargo is to preserve the assets of the company from being attached or sold for realisation of dues of the creditors. The section does not bar payment or money by the company or its directors to other persons for satisfaction of their legally enforceable dues. Kusum Ingots and Alloys Ltd. v. Pennar Peterson Securities Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 954 : (2000) 2 SCC 745 : (2000) SCC (Cri) 546 (555) : 2000 CrLJ 1464 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 319.

[7899] ● Liability of company—Commission of offence by company attracting mandatory punishment of imprisonment and fine under Section 56(1)(i) Foreign Exchange Regulation Act.—Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1976, Section 56(1)(i).—There is no dispute that a company is liable to be prosecuted and punished for criminal offences. Although there are earlier authorities to the effect that corporations cannot commit a crime, the generally accepted modern rule is that except for such crimes as a corporation is held incapable of committing by reason of the fact that they involve personal malicious intent, a corporation may be subject to indictment or other criminal process, although the criminal act is committed through its agents.

As in the case of torts, the general rule prevails that the corporation may be criminally liable for the acts of an officer or agent, assumed to be done by him when exercising authorised powers, and without proof that his act was expressly authorised or approved by the corporation. In the statutes defining crimes, the prohibition is frequently directed against any "person" who commits the prohibited act, and in many statutes the term "person" is defined. Even if the person is not specifically defined, it necessarily includes a corporation. It is usually construed to include a corporation so as to bring it within the prohibition of the statue and subject it to punishment. In most of the statues, the words "person" is defined to include a corporation. Therefore, as regards corporate criminal liability, there is no doubt that a corporation or company could be prosecuted for any offence punishable under law, whether it is coming under the strict liability or under absolute liability. Inasmuch as all criminal and quasi-criminal offences are creatures of statue, the amenability of the corporation to prosecution necessarily depends upon the terminology employed in the statute. In the case of strict liability, the terminology employed by the legislature is such as to reveal an intent that guilt shall not be predicated upon the automatic breach of the statute but on the establishment of the actus reus, subject to the defence of due diligence. The law is primarily based on the terms of the statutes. In the case of absolute liability where the legislature by the clearest intendment establishes an offence where liability arises instantly upon the breach of the statutory prohibition, no particular state of mind is a prerequisite to guilt. Corporations and individual persons stand on the same footing in the face of such a statutory offence. It is case of automatic primary responsibility. It is only in a case requiring mens rea, a question arises whether a corporation could be attributed with requisite mens rea to prove the guilt. Standard Chartered Bank v. Directorate of Enforcement, AIR 2005 SC 2622 : (2005) 4 SCC 530 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 961 (971, 972) : 2005 (2) Crimes 258.

[7900] ● Prosecution and fixation of criminal liability of corporate bodies and sentencing where statute provide for mandatory sentence of imprisonment and fine.—There are several other offences in the Indian Penal Code which describe offences of serious nature whereunder a corporate body also may be found guilty, and the punishment prescribed is mandatory custodial sentence. There are a series of other offences under various statues where the accused are also liable to be punished with custodial sentence and fine.

If the custodial sentence is the only punishment prescribed for the offence, this plea is acceptable, but when the custodial sentence and fine are the prescribed mode of punishment, the Court can impose the sentence of fine on a company which is found guilty as the sentence of imprisonment is impossible to be carried out. It is an acceptable legal maxim that law does not compel a man to do that which cannot possibly be performed (impotentia excusat legam). This principle can be found in Bennion's Statutory Interpretation, 4th Edn. at p. 969. "All civilized systems of law import the principle that lex non cogit ad impossibilia...." As PATTERSON, J. said "the law compels no impossibility". Bennion discussing about legal impossibility at p. 970 states that : "If an enactment requires what is legally impossible it will be presumed that Parliament intended it to be modified so as to remove the impossibility element." This Court applied the doctrine of impossibility of performance (lex non cogit ad impossibilia) in numerous cases. Standard Chartered Bank v. Directorate of Enforcement, AIR 2005 SC 2622 : (2005) 4 SCC 530 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 961 (978) : 2005 (2) Crimes 258.

[7901] ● Company cannot be sentenced to imprisonment Court to resort to punishment of imposition of fine.—As the company cannot be sentenced to imprisonment, the Court has to resort to punishment of imposition of fine which is also a prescribed punishment. As per the scheme of various enactments and also the Indian Penal Code, mandatory custodial sentence is prescribed for graver offences. If the appellants' plea is accepted, no company or corporate bodies could be prosecuted for the graver.

Even for offences under Section 56(1)(ii), FERA Act, the company could be prosecuted as the amount involved is less than rupees one lakh and there is no mandatory sentence of imprisonment and the prescribed punishment is imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years or with fine or with both. It is also pertinent to note that the object of the amendment was to have more stringent provisions where the amount involved in the offence is more than rupees one lakh. It is not reasonably possible to assume that amendment to the section was carried out to give immunity to corporate bodies from prosecution for serious offences. The scheme of the Indian Penal Code also would show that for serious and graver offences, mandatory sentence of imprisonment is prescribed and for less serious offences the Court is given a discretionary power of imprisonment or fine. There is not a blanket immunity for any company from any prosecution for serious offence offences merely because the prosecution would ultimately entail a sentence of mandatory imprisonment. The corporate bodies, such as a firm or company undertake a series of activities that affect the life, liberty and property of the citizens. Large-scale financial irregularities are done by various corporations. The corporate vehicle now occupies such a large portion of the industrial, commercial and sociological sectors that amenability of the corporation to a criminal law is essential to have a peaceful society with stable economy. Standard Chartered Bank v. Directorate of Enforcement, AIR 2005 SC 2622 : (2005) 4 SCC 530 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 961 (978).

[7902] ● Retrieving company's properly wrongfully withheld by officer/employees.—No difference in movable and immovable property "such an officer or employee—Companies Act, 1956 Section 630.—Section 630 of the Companies Act section does not make any difference between the movable and immovable property. The property in Section 630 includes both movable and immovable property. Sub-section (2) of Section 630 authorises the Court trying the offence, in its discretion to order any such officer or employee of the company which includes past or present, or his or her legal representative, to deliver, within a specified time, possession of such property which has been wrongfully obtained or wrongfully withheld or knowingly misapplied. In default, the Court may impose a punishment of imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years.

Section 630 of the Companies Act, does not only cover cases of the present employee or officer of the company and this provision strictly speaking is not penal in the sense as understood under penal law. The main purpose to make action an offence under Section 630 is to provide a speedy and summary procedure for retrieving the property of the company where it has been wrongly obtained by the employee or officer of the company or where the property has been lawfully obtained but unlawfully retained after termination of the employment of the employee or the officer and to impose a fine on the officer or employee of the company if found in breach of the provision of Section 630 of the Companies Act and further to issue direction if the Court feels it just and appropriate for delivery of the possession of the property of the company and to impose a sentence of imprisonment when there is non-compliance with the order of the Court regarding delivery or refund of the property of the company. Shubh Shanti Services Ltd. v. Manjula S. Agarwalla, AIR 2005 SC 2506 : (2005) 5 SCC 30 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 993 (1001, 1003) : 2005 (3) LLJ 1010 : 2005 (2) Crimes 284.

[7903] ● Due process of Law Procedure established by law.—Companies Act, 1956 Section 630—Due process of law.—Due process of law would in short mean a procedure established by law, which is a procedure fixed or laid down in law. When the High Court has passed an order of injunction, in the aforesaid terms, what is meant by the High Court is, that the Company shall not take forcible possession of Sonmarg flat during the pendency of the suit and the Company was given liberty to take steps for possession as is permissible under law including the provisions of any statute giving right to obtain possession to the company in the facts and circumstances of the case. The company can prove unlawful possession of the property by the employee or his or her legal representative after the demise of the employee or an officer of the company. The company has the remedy to initiate action under Section 630(1) and on conviction by the competent criminal Court it can approach the same Court for directing delivery of possession which sub-section (2) of Section 630 of the Companies Act provides. The remedy is provided in the statute itself and the High Court's order by no stretch of imagination can be read to mean that the company has to necessarily approach the civil Court only for obtaining possession of the Sonmarg flat and that the remedy available under the Companies Act cannot be resorted to. The decision of the High Court that Section 630 of the Companies Act being penal in nature, the proceeding thereunder cannot be construed to be a proceeding taken in due process of law, cannot be sustained. Filing of civil suit for possession by the Company does not deprive the Company of the right to institute prosecution under the Companies Act and incidentally get an order for delivery of possession. Shubhash Shanti Services Ltd. v. Manjula S. Agarwala, AIR 2005 SC 2506 : (2005) 5 SCC 30 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 993 (1003) : 2005 (3) LLJ 1010 : 2005 (2) Crimes 284.

[7904] ● Continued possession of company's flat by legal representatives of deceased employee to whom flat allotted for residential purpose during service period—Legality.— Companies Act, 1956 Sections 630, 291.—In the matter of company affairs, Directors act as a body and collectively as a Board. Any Director acting individually has no power to act on behalf of the company in respect of any matter except to the extent to which any power or powers of the Board have been delegated to him by the Board within the limit permitted by the Companies Act or any other law. The position of the Chairman of the Board of Directors is not substantially different from an individual Director. Under the Companies Act, the Chairman of the company does not have any special or extraordinary rights to be exercised by him without being authorised by the Board of Directors. The Board of Directors of course have an authority to delegate the power or authority to act for and on behalf of the company to the Chairman of the Board of Directors.

Power of Chairman.—Section 291 of the Companies Act authorises the Board of Directors of the company to exercise such powers or of such acts or things as the company is authorised to exercise and do such acts or things, except in the matter where the power is to be exercised by the company in general meeting. The exercise of the powers by the Board shall be subject to the provisions contained in the Companies Act or any other Act or in the memorandum or articles of the company. Therefore, under Section 291 of the Companies Act, the action of the Board of Directors should be in conformity with the provisions of the company law or any other enactment or in conformity with the memorandum or articles of association of the company. It is the specific case of the respondents which has been found correct by the Courts that they are holding possession of the Company's flat at Sonmarg on the oral assurance given by Shri Goenka, Chairman of the Board of Directors that they can continue to reside in the said flat until the possession of the flat at Blue Heaven Cooperative Society is given to them. Admittedly the flat at Sonmarg belongs to the Company. Shri S.C. Agarwalla, husband of Respondent 1 and father of Respondent 2 was the ex-employee of the Company. He expired when he was in the employment of the Company and Respondents 1 and 2 were residing in the flat after the demise of Shri Agarwalla as his heirs. Thus it is for Respondents 1 and 2 to show the authority of Shri Goenka to bind the Company on the basis of the oral assurance given to them by him to retain the possession of the flat. The High Court has not referred to any evidence to that effect led by the respondents, nor is there any finding that the Board of Directors have authorised the Chairman Shri Goenka to give such an assurance for and on behalf of the Company. Subh Shanti Services Ltd. v. Manjula S. Agarwala, AIR 2005 SC 2506 : (2005) 5 SCC 30 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 993 (1004-05) : 2005 (3) LLJ 1010 : 2005 (2) Crimes 284.

[7905] ● Assurance given by Chairman beyond his powers—Not binding on company.— Companies Act, 1956, Section 630—Assurance given by Chairman of Company.—In the absence of any authority to the Chairman by the Board of Directors to act for and on behalf of the Company, the assurance given by him to the respondents would not bind the Company, nor will it create a binding agreement between the parties, namely, Respondents 1 and 2 and the Company to permit the respondents to remain in possession even after the death of Shri Agarwalla, of the flat in Sonmarg. Apart from this, the Board of Directors itself could exercise the powers in accordance with the memorandum of association or the articles of the Company. Any power exercised beyond the memorandum or the articles of the Company would not bind the Company. Any assurance given by the Board of Directors either should be authorised object of the Company by the memorandum of association or the articles of the Company or its purpose should be reasonably ancillary or incidental to carrying on the Company's business. Subh Shanti Services Ltd. v. Manjula S. Agarwala, AIR 2005 SC 2506 : (2005) 5 SCC 30 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 993 (1005) : 2005 (2) Crimes 284 : 2005 (3) LLJ 1010.

[7906] ● Wrongful withholding of company's property—Attracting offence under Section 630(1) of Companies Act, 1956—Respondents to pay fine of Rs. "one thousand each".—Companies Act, 1956, Section 630(1).—The late Agarwalla was an old employee of the Company since 1971. He expired on 2.11.1992 and assurance was given by the Chairman to the widow of the ex-employee with whom he had long-standing relation, when he went to see her to console her on 4.11.1992, barely two days after the death of Shri Agarwalla. Such evidence in our opinion irresistibly points that predominant, if not, the only consideration operating in the mind of the Chairman was to console the widow and to permit here to live in the flat for some time. The assurance given to Respondents 1 and 2 by the Chairman of the Company has more of a gratuitous and compassionate flavour and less to do with the interest of the Company in mind. Moreover, it is difficult to comprehend how the Chairman could promise on behalf of the Company that the respondents will be permitted to remain in the flat till delivery of the flat of Blue Heaven, when he himself was not sure of the time the Company would get the possession of the Blue Heaven flat. That apart, the act of the Chairman cannot be construed to be one done incidental to the business of the Company or as a matter of necessity.

After the death of Shri Agarwalla on 2.11.1992, Respondents 1 and 2 remained in possession of the Company's Sonmarg flat. Admittedly they were not in employment of the Company nor the Company has authorised them to remain in possession of the same particularly after notice dated 9.11.1994 to vacate the premises and hand over the possession to the Company. The possession of the Company's flat by the respondents, after the service of notice to vacate the premises by the Company, is wrongful withholding of the property of the Company. The respondents by having wrongfully withheld the possession of the Company's flat and not delivering the property to the Company, have committed an offence. The interim order of the High Court dated 16.11.1998 in the civil suit filed by the appellant Company does not wipe out the offence committed already for which criminal complaint was filed. Subsequent to that order, the possession may not be wrongful, but on the date of complaint and till the date of that order, the respondents did wrongfully withhold that property, attracting the offence under Section 630(1). Having regard to the factual position of the case, we think that imposition of fine or rupees one thousand each would be a proper punishment for wrongful withholding of the Sonmarg flat. Accordingly, Respondents 1 and 2 are sentenced to pay fine of rupees one thousand each. Subh Shanti Services Ltd. v. Manjula S. Agarwalla, AIR 2005 SC 2506 : (2005) 5 SCC 30 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 993 (1006) : 2005 (3) LLJ 1010 : 2005 (2) Crimes 284.

[7907] ● Dishonour of Cheque by company.— The concept of vicarious liability was introduced in penal statutes like Negotiable Instruments Act to make the directors; partners or other persons, in charge of and control of the business of the company or otherwise responsible for its affairs; the company itself being a juristic person. Raghu Lakshminarayan v. M/s Fine Tubes, AIR 2007 SC 1634 : (2007) 5 SCC 103 : 2007 CrLJ 2436 (2437).

[7908] ● Criminal Proceedings against company.—Criminal Proceedings can be initiated against a company even where imposition of substantive sentence is provided for. Aneeta Hada v. Godfather Travel and Tours Private Ltd., (2008) 13 SCC 703 : 2008 (7) SCR 1054 : 2008 (8) Scale 25.

[7909] ● Dishonour of Cheque issued by sick company.—According to the High Court, admittedly the purchase orders in question were entered into and the purchases were made by the appellants with full knowledge of the proceedings that the company was declared sick under the SICA, the appellants clearly all through gave the impression to the respondent company that the outstanding amount towards the purchase of the goods would be shortly cleared. The fact that the purchases were made with the clear promise to repay could not be disputed by the appellants. The Directors had in fact issued the cheques for discharging their liability with the full knowledge, would not only clearly show that there was an undisputed debt, but would also show that, right from the inception, the appellants in fact had no intention of paying the amount for the purchases made by them. The intention of the appellants can be gathered by their subsequent acts, conduct and behaviour of taking a shelter under the provisions of SICA. Hence, the appellants are not entitled to any indulgence of this court under its extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution. The appellants had lost their total credibility because of their conduct. When the appellant company was declared sick, then without disclosing this fact the appellants ought not to have made huge purchases from the respondent company. Ultimately, the appellant company did not pay for the purchases. This clearly indicates that the appellants had no intention of making payment of the purchases made by it.

The High Court, in the impugned order, has directed the trial Court to dispose of the cases of the appellants as early as possible, but not later than six months from the date of its order. The appellants by approaching this Court have caused avoidable delay in disposal of these cases before the trial Court.

In the facts and circumstances of the case, we deem it appropriate to request the trial Court now to conclude the trial of these cases as expeditiously as possible and, in any event, within six months from the date of this judgment. Southern Steel Ltd. v. Jindal Vijayanagar Steel Ltd., AIR 2008 SC 3143 : 2008 (5) SCC 762 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 75 : 2008 CrLJ 3960 : 2008 (7) Scale 493 : 2008 (4) Supreme 319.

COMPARISON

§ (See also "HANDWRITING")

[7910] ● Comparison of handwriting.—The second paragraph of Section 73 enables the Court to direct any person present in the Court to give specimen writings "for the purpose of enabling the Court to compare" such writings with writings alleged to have been written by such person. The clear implication of the words "for the purpose of enabling the Court to compare" is that there is some proceeding before the Court in which or as a consequence of which it might be necessary for the Court to compare such writings. The direction is to be given for the purpose of enabling the Court to compare and not for the purpose of enabling the investigating or other agency "to compare". If the case is still under investigation there is no present proceeding before the Court in which or as a consequence of which it might be necessary to compare the writings. The language of Section 73 does not permit a Court to give a direction to the accused to give specimen writings for anticipated necessity for comparison in a proceeding which may later be instituted in the Court. State of Haryana v. Jagbir Singh, AIR 2003 SC 4377 : (2003) 11 SCC 261 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 126 (133) : 2003 CrLJ 5054.

[7911] ● Opinion of expert.—When the Court has to form an opinion as to identity of handwriting or finger impression's the opinion, upon that points, of persons specially skilled in question as to identity or handwriting or finger impressions are relevant facts. Thiruvengada Pillai v. Navaneethammal, AIR 2008 SC 1541 (1546) : 2008 AIR SCW 1684 : (2008) 4 SCC 530.

[7912] ● Finger impressions on documents.—When there is a positive denial by the person who is said to have affixed his finger impression and where the finger impression in the disputed document is vague or smudgy or not clear, making it difficult for comparison, the Court should hesitate to venture a decision based on its own comparison of the disputed and admitted finger impressions. Further even in cases where the Court is constrained to take up such comparison, it should make a thorough study, if necessary with the assistance of counsel, to ascertain the characteristics, similarities and dissimilarities. Necessarily, the judgment should contain the reasons for any conclusion based on comparison of the thumb impression, if it chooses to record a finding thereon. The Court should avoid reaching conclusions based on a mere casual or routine glance, or perusal. Thiruvengada Pillai v. Navaneethammal, AIR 2008 SC 1541 (1547) : (2008) 4 SCC 530.

[7913] ● Thumb impressions on documents—Duty of Court.—When it is said that there is no bar to a Court to compare the disputed finger impression with the admitted finger impression, it goes without saying that it can record an opinion or finding on such comparison, only after an analysis of the characteristics of the admitted finger impression and after verifying whether the same characteristics are found in the disputed finger impression. The comparison of the two thumb impressions cannot be casual or by a mere glance. Further, a finding in the judgment that there appeared to be no marked differences between the admitted thumb impression and disputed thumb impression, without anything more, cannot be accepted as a valid finding that the disputed signature is of the person who has put the admitted thumb impression. Where the Court finds that the disputed finger impression and admitted thumb impression are clear where the Court is in a position to identify the characteristics of finger prints, the Court may record a finding on comparison, even in the absence of an expert's opinion. But where the disputed thumb impression is smudgy, vague or very light, the Court should not hazard a guess by a casual perusal. The decision in Murarilal (Supra) and Lalit Popli (Supra) should not be construed as laying a proposition that the court is bound to compare. Thiruvengada Pillai v. Navaneethammal, AIR 2008 SC 1541 (1547) : (2008) 4 SCC 530.

[7914] ● Scope of Section 73 Evidence Act.—Section 23 enables the court to compare the signatures, writing or seal with others admitted or proved. Keshav Dutt v. State of Haryana, (2010) 9 SCC 286.

COMPENSATION

[7915] ● Compensation.—The word 'Compensation' means anything given to make things equivalent, a thing given to or to make amends or loss, recompense, remuneration or pay : it need not, therefore, necessarily be in terms of money, because the law may specify the principles on which, and the manner in which compensation is to be determined and given. If it were to be in terms of money alone, the expression 'paid' would have been more appropriate. State of Gujarat v. Shantibai, AIR 1969 SC 634 (644) : (1969) 1 SCC 509 : (1969) 2 SCJ 322.

[7916] ● Imposition of fine to compensate children of deceased.—The appellant was admittedly a young boy of 15 years of age at the time when he shot Mishri Lal Rai and killed him. He acted in exercise of his right of private defence but exceeded it. In view of these circumstances, it would be fair and just if the sentence of imprisonment imposed on the appellant is reduced to the period already undergone by him, since he has already suffered imprisonment for a period of about two years. The requirement of social justice demands that a heavy fine should be imposed on the appellant in lieu of reduction of sentence so that children of Mishri Lal Rai may be compensated. Prabhu Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1977 SC 704 : (1976) 4 SCC 289 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 597 (598) : 1977 CrLJ 346.

[7917] ● Payment of compensation in lieu of property lost.—Disposal of property : Property in custodia legis when: Payment of compensation in lieu of property lost.

The short point of law that was raised in this appeal was as regards the powers of the Court in indemnifying the owner of the property which is destroyed or lost whilst in the custody of the Court. In this case a large number of ornaments and cash, etc., were stolen from the house of the complainant. The number of stolen articles were recovered from the accused. When they were produced before the Magistrate, he directed the police officer concerned to retain the articles in his custody until the same were verified and their value was determined by a goldsmith. The S.I. kept the articles in the Guard Room of his police station in a trunk with a list of the articles and a corresponding entry in the concerned register as the Court was waiting to obtain sanction of the necessary funds from the higher authorities for payment of the fees of the goldsmith. When the Court subsequently directed the S.I. after his return from leave to produce the articles in the Court, the S.I. opened the trunk and to his utter dismay found that the trunk contained only stones and no articles all of which had disappeared. Before going on leave, the S.I. found the articles in the trunk intact. The S.I. immediately filed a complaint of theft of the ornaments. As the accused were not traced, that case was referred. The original charge-sheet in respect of the theft of the articles in the complainant's house ended in conviction of the accused from whom they were recovered. Their appeal to the Sessions Judge was unsuccessful but the High Court acquitted them on technical grounds. After the conclusion of the trial, the complainant filed an application before the trial Magistrate to return the stolen articles or their value. The Magistrate rejected the application on the ground that as the articles did not reach the Court, the complainant was not entitled to their restoration. The Sessions Court as well as the High Court also dismissed his applications. Hence this appeal. A production before the Court did not mean physical custody or possession by the Court but included even control exercised by the Court by passing an order regarding the custody of the article. In the instant case when once the Magistrate, after having been informed that the articles were produced before the Court, directed the S.I. to keep them with him in safe custody, to get them verified and valued by a goldsmith, the articles were undoubtedly produced before the Court and became custodia legis. The articles were the subject -matter of an offence of theft. That fact was sufficient to clothe the Magistrate with the power to pass an order for return of the property. Where the property was stolen, lost or destroyed and there was no prima facie defence made out that the State or its officers had taken due care and caution to protect the property, the Magistrate might order payment of the value of the property in an appropriate case where the ends of justice so required. The view of the High Court that once the articles were not available with the Court, the Court had no power to do anything in the matter and was utterly helpless was not correct. The Court ordered the State to pay the cash equivalent of the property lost to the complainant. Decision of the High Court reported in 1971 CrLJ 566 (Mys) was reversed. Basava v. State of Mysore, AIR 1977 SC 1749 : (1977) 4 SCC 358 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 598 : 1977 CrLJ 1141 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 257 : 1977 SCCrR 391 : (1977) 1 SCWR 613 : (1977) 2 SCJ 289 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 314 : ILR (1977) 2 Kant 925 : 1977 BBCJ (SC) 168 : 1977 AWC 467 : 1977 ACrR 337 : 1977 ACrC 220 : 1977 CurLJ (Cri) 162 : 1977 MLJ (Cri) 486.

[7918] ● Accident Tribunals—Duty of—Inference to culpability—When to be drawn.—In a case a stage carriage belonging to the petitioner was on a trip when after night fall, the bus hit an over-hanging high tension wire resulting in 26 casualties of which 8 proved instantaneously fatal. A criminal case ensued but the accused driver was acquitted on the score that the tragedy that happened was an act of God. The Accidents Claims Tribunal, which tried the claims for compensation under the Motor Vehicles Act, came to the conclusion, affirmed by the High Court that, despite the screams of the passengers about the dangerous overhanging wire ahead, the rash driver sped towards the lethal spot. Some lost their lives instantly, several lost their limbs. Both the Accidents Claims Tribunal and the High Court concluded that the accident had taken place due to the rashness and negligence of the driver. The Supreme Court held : road accidents are one of the top killers in our country, specially when truck and bus drivers operate nocturnally. This proverbial recklessness often pursuades the Courts, as has been observed by us earlier in other cases, to draw an initial presumption in several cases based on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Accidents Tribunals must take special care to see that innocent victims do not suffer and drivers and owners do not escape liability merely because of some doubt here or some obscurity there save in plain cases, culpability must be inferred from the circumstances where it is fairly reasonable. The Court should not succumb to niceties, technicalities and mystic maybes. No interference by this Court is called for specially where human misery is pitted against operational negligence. N.K.V. Bros. (P) Ltd. v. M. Karumai Ammal, AIR 1980 SC 1354 : (1980) 3 SCC 437 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 774. : 1980 UJ (SC) 414 : 1980 LS (SC)54.

[7919] ● Offence—Compounding of.—We are happy to record that the injured and the appellants have amicably settled their dispute and we have been assured that happy relationship will be established in the student community. For these reasons we grant permission to compound the offence and accept the composition as per the terms set out in the consent precipe filed today. In view of the composition both the appeals are allowed and the conviction and sentence of the appellants are set aside with the direction that out of the fine paid by the appellants after deducting the amount of Rs. 3000/- already paid to the injured, the balance may be paid over to the injured PW 1 and PW 4 to be equally divided between them. Bhupendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 1240 : 1980 Supp SCC 352 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 280 : 1981 CrLJ 751 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 116.

[7920] ● No direction for compensation where no fine imposed.—The High Court ordered payment of Rs. 3,000/- as litigation costs to the State. For sustaining such as an order under Section 357(a), there must be a substantive sentence of fine. High Court, while maintaining conviction, set aside imprisonment imposed by the trial Court and has not imposed any fine on the accused. On the other hand, he has been given benefit of probation. There cannot therefore be a direction for compensation under Section 357 (a). Order was set aside. Girdhari Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1982 SC 1229 (2) : (1982) 1 SCC 608 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 325 : 1982 CrLJ 1742 (1) : 1982 GujLH 345 (1).

[7921] ● Composition amount awarded to widow of deceased—Enhancement.—Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case and particularly in view of the fact that the bread earner of the family is gone and the widow and two minor children are reduced to a condition of helplessness and the widow has to lead the rest of her life alone and at the mercy of her friends and relatives and taking into account the earning capacity of the deceased, the amount of Rs. 40,000 awarded by way of compensation is not adequate and it should be enhanced to Rs. 55,000. Sukhbinder Kaur v. Nirmolak Singh, (1982) 2 SCC 348 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 428 : 1982 Cr App R (SC) 276.

[7922] ● Enhancement of fine to compensate widow and children of deceased.—Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case and in view of the fact that "J" died as a result of accident leaving a family behind him and also taking into account the fact that the appellant has already been in Jail for a period of four and a half months, it would meet the ends of justice if the sentence of imprisonment imposed upon the appellant is reduced to that already undergone by him and instead the fine of Rs. 2,000 which has been imposed upon him is enhanced to Rs. 10,000 in order that the widow and the children of the deceased "J" may be compensated by payment of the amount of the amount of the fine to them. This payment will be without prejudice to the right of the widow and children of the deceased "J" to claim damages for the death of Jagdish Chander, though, it any such damages are awarded this payment may be taken into account in assessing such damages. Sukhdev Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 2 SCC 439 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 467 : 1982 Cr App R (SC) 276.

[7923] ● Compensation—Liability of insurer extended to legal provision as it stood on date of accident.—In a case the appellant's husband who was driving a scooter, when a goods truck knocked him dead. The appellant filed an application before the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal, Bangalore, under Section 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, seeking compensation for her husband's death. The respondent denied its liability on the ground, amongst others, that its record did not disclose that it had issued any insurance policy in respect of the particular truck. On a consideration of the entire evidence, the Tribunal passed an award on November 20th, 1972, holding that the appellant was entitled to recover compensation in the sum of Rs. 60,000/- for herself and her children. The Tribunal limited the liability of the respondent insurer to a sum of Rs. 50,000/-.

The respondent filed an appeal in the High Court contending that on the date on which the insurance policy was alleged to have been issued by it, its statutory liability was limited to a sum of Rs. 20,000/- only and, therefore, the Tribunal was in error in passing an award against it in the sum of Rs. 50,000/-. This contention was accepted by the High Court and hence, this appeal by the claimant. The apex Court held : Chapter VIII of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (The Act), bears the heading "Insurance of motor vehicles against third party risks". By Section 94 (1) of the Act, no person can use a motor vehicle in a public place except as a passenger, unless there is in force in relation to the use of the vehicle a policy of insurance complying with the requirements of the chapter. Section 95 prescribes the requirements of the insurance policy and the limits of liability thereunder. Broadly, by sub-section (1) of Section 95, a policy of insurance must insure the person or classes of persons specified in the Policy to the extent specified in sub-section (2) against any liability which may be incurred by him or them in respect of the death of or bodily injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place. Section 95 (2) (a) of the Act, with which alone we are concerned in this appeal.

Amendment made to clause (a) of Section 95 (2) by The Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act, 56 of 1969, substituted therein the word "fifty" for the word "twenty".

The question which arose for consideration was whether the insurer's liability for third party risks under the statutory policy must be held to be limited to Rs. 20,000/- according to the relevant legal provision as it existed on the date on which the policy came into force or, whether that liability can be extended to Rs. 50,000/- in accordance with the legal provision as it stood on the date of the accident, the accident having occurred during the currency of the policy. The relevant dates which have to be borne in mind in this behalf are these. The insurance policy came into force on June 30th, 1969 and covered the period form June 30th, 1969 to June 29th, 1970; the amendment by which the statutory liability of the insurer was increased from Rs. 20,000/- to Rs. 50,000/- came into force on March 2nd, 1970; and the accident which gave rise to the proceedings occurred on April 5th, 1970. That must mean liability as determinable under Chapter VIII at the relevant time, that is to say, at the time when the liability arises. Since the liability of the insurer to pay a claim under a motor accident policy arises on the occurrence of the accident and not until then, one must necessarily have regard to the state of the law obtaining at the time of the accident for determining the extent of the insurer's liability under a statutory policy. In this behalf the governing factor for determining the application of the appropriate law is not the date on which the policy of insurance came into force but the date on which the cause of action accrued for enforcing liability arising under the terms of the policy. That we consider to be a reasonable manner in which to understand and interpret the contract of insurance entered into by the insured and the insurer in this case. The contracting parties did not incorporate the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Act in their contract. That is to say, they did not identify the liability of the promisor on the basis of the provisions of Chapter VIII as they stood on the date when the contract was made. They merely referred to the provisions of Chapter VIII, which means "the provisions of Chapter VIII in force at any given time", the given time being the date on which the right to sue accrues or, correspondingly, the liability arises. If the parties to a contract agree that one shall pay to the other damages for breach of contract in accordance with the law contained in any particular statute, without identifying the law as the provision which is in force on the date of the contract, the law which will apply for determining the quantum of damages is the one which is in force on the date on which the breach of contract is committed, that being the date on which the cause of action arises, and not the law which was in force on the date on which the contract was made. The application of a law to facts which come into existence after that law has come into force does not involve giving retrospective operation to the law, merely because the facts to which the law is being applied are relatable to a contract or an instrument which had come into operation prior to the date on which the law itself had come into force. Padma Srinivasan v. Premier Insurance Co. Ltd., AIR 1982 SC 836 : (1982) 1 SCC 613 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 330.

[7924] ● Illegal detention after acquittal—Power of Supreme Court to order compensation.—In a petition for Habeas Corpus for illegal detention of the petitioner after acquittal in a trial more than 14 years ago the Supreme Court can pass order for compensation even though he was released soon after filing of the writ. Rudul Sah v. State of Bihar, AIR 1983 SC 1086 : (1983) 4 SCC 141 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 798 : 1983 CrLJ 1644 : 1983 UJ (SC) 759 : 1983 Chand CrC(SC) 131 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 373 : 1983 BLJ 684.

[7925] ● Writ of habeas corpus practice of Supreme Court.—In this petition filed for a writ of habeas corpus, it was established that C. Daniel and C. Paul were taken to Phungrei Camp by officers and jawans of 21st Sikh Regiment on 10-3-1982 and that they never left the army camp as canvassed on behalf of the respondents on 11-3-1982. It was obligatory upon the respondents, therefore, to produce the said persons and to explain their whereabouts, more so because respondents claimed the power to arrest and question anyone under the provisions of the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act, 1958. It was contended for the respondents that once the respondents has adopted a position that the two persons had come to the army camp at the request of the army authority, but left that place on their own in company of their friends, a writ of habeas corpus could not be issued, and the respondents could not be called upon to file a return to the writ. When a petition for a writ of habeas corpus under Article 32 of the Constitution was moved before the Court, ordinarily the Court would not issue ex parte a writ of habeas corpus unless the urgency of he situation so demanded or issuing of a notice of motion was likely to result in defeat of justice. Further, the Court would be reluctant to issue a writ of habeas corpus ex parte where the fact of detention might be controverted and it might become necessary to investigate the facts. The normal practice was that when a petition for a writ of habeas corpus was moved, the Court would direct a notice to be served upon the respondents with a view to affording the respondents to file evidence in reply. If the facts alleged in the petition were controverted by the respondents appearing in response to the notice by filing its evidence, the Court would proceed to investigate the facts to determine whether there was substance in the petition for a writ of habeas corpus. If on investigation of facts, the Court rejected the contention of the respondents and was satisfied that the respondents were responsible for unauthorised and illegal detention of the person or persons in respect of whom the writ was sought, the Court would issue a writ of habeas corpus which would make it obligatory for the respondents to file a return. Accordingly, the petition was allowed directing the issue of a writ of habeas corpus to respondents 1, 2 and 4 commanding them to produce the two persons before the Supreme Court on 12-12-1983 and file the return. Sebastian M. Hongray v. Union of India, AIR 1984 SC 571 : (1984) 1 SCC 339 : 1984 CrLJ 289.

[7926] ● Failure of Govt. to produce certain persons—Payment of Rs. One lakh to wife of each person as exemplary costs.—Now in the facts and circumstances of the case it is not proposed to impose imprisonment nor any amount as and by way of fine but keeping in view the torture, the agony and the mental oppression through which Mrs. C. Thingkhurla, wife of Sri C. Daniel and Mrs. C. Vangamala, wife of Shri C. Paul had to pass and they being the proper applicants, the former application being by Sebastian M. Hongray, it is directed that as a measure of exemplary costs, as is permissible in such cases, respondents 1 and 2 shall pay Rs. 1 lac to each of the aforementioned two women within a period of four weeks from today. Sebastian M. Hungray v. Union of India, AIR 1984 SC 1026 : (1984) 3 SCC 82 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 407 (409-410) : 1984 CrLJ 830 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 237 : (1984) 2 Crimes 22.

[7927] ● Gift of Land by accused to victim's widow—Acquittal by High Court on that ground illegal.—Both the respondents were convicted by the learned Sessions Judge under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the IPC, and each of them was sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life. On appeal, for very strange reasons, the High Court acquitted the first respondent and converted the conviction of the second respondent to one under Section 304-A, IPC, and reduced the sentence to 2 years' RI What the High Court said speaks for itself. It said:

"However, we are told by the learned counsel for the parties that they being closely related some members of the village have intervened and have brought about some sort of arrangement under which Ram Kumar appellant has already made a gift of three acres of land in favour of Smt. Maya Devi, widow of Chander Shekhar, as compensation on account of the loss of life of her husband. Though this is not a matter which can be taken notice of by this Court, yet it has always been our desire to see that enmity between close relations should be encouraged to come to an end. Since the father of Ramesh Kumar (PW-6) had lost his life, he could possibly have indulged in some exaggeration to magnify the nature of the offence. In the circumstances, we give benefit of doubt to Ram Kumar appellant and acquit him. We convert the conviction of Ratna apppellant from one under Section 302 to one under Section 304-A, Indian Penal Code and sentence him to undergo two years' rigorous imprisonment. Ram Kumar appellant is on bail. His bail bond shall stand discharged." It could only be said that the judgment of the High Court had left the Court shocked and perplexed. This Court was at a total loss to understand it. The entire system of administration of criminal justice was reduced to a mockery. If the judgment of the High Court was upheld, it was as if a person who could afford to make gifts of land or money to the heirs of the victim might get away even with a charge of murder. Courts were to dispense justice, not to dispense with justice. And, justice to be dispensed was not palm-tree justice or idiosyncratic justice. The judgment could not stand a second's scrutiny. It was accordingly set aside and the matter was remanded to the High Court so that the criminal appeals and revision might be reheard. Ramesh Kumar v. Ram Kumar, AIR 1984 SC 1029 : (1984) 3 SCC 90 : 1984 CrLJ 832 (SC).

[7928] ● Arrest of member of Legislative Assembly—Resultant deprivation of right to attend impending Assembly Session—Award of compensation of Rs. 50,000/-.—The petitioner was an MLA of Jammu and Kashmir who incurred the wrath of the Government. They were bent upon preventing him from attending the Assembly Session which was to meet on 11-9-1985. On the opening day of the Budget Session which was 17-8-1985, he was suspended from the Assembly. The order of suspension was stayed by the High Court on 9-9-1985. On the intervening night of 9th-10th, September, 1985, he was proceeding from Jammu to Srinagar, en route at 3-00 a.m. on the 10th, he was arrested and taken away be the Police. Efforts to trace him proved futile and hence his wife filed the present writ against the respondents to produce her husband before the Court, to declare his detention illegal and to set him at liberty. On 16-9-1985, the M.L.A. was released on bail by the Additional Sessions Judge. The petitioner then filed a supplementary affidavit that he was kept in Police lock up from 10th to 14th and that he was produced before a Magistrate for the first time only on the 14th. The petitioner was detained from 3-00 a.m. on 10-9-1985 till he was produced before the Sub-Judge on the 14th September 1985. The two remand orders did not contain any statement that the petitioner was produced before either of them. The applications for remand also did not contain any statement that he was being produced before either of them. No affidavits of the Officer-in-charge of the police station or of the officer who arrested him was filed in the Supreme Court. At the hearing it was represented that their affidavits had been got ready but mislaid and the prayer for adjournment for filing them was refused. Non-production of the prisoner before the Magistrate on the 11th or before the Sub-judge on the 13th was certainly a gross violation of the petitioner's constitutional rights under Articles 21 & 22(2). If the personal liberty of an M.L.A. is to be played with in that fashion, one can only wonder what may happen to lesser mortals. Police officers who are the custodians of the law and order should have shown greatest respect for the personal liberty of citizens and should not flout the laws by stooping to such bizarre acts of lawlessness.

Custodians of law and order should not become depredators of civil liberties. Their duty is to protect and not to abduct. The two police officers, the one who arrested him and the one who obtained the orders of remand, are but minions in the lower runs of the ladder. But the responsibility lay elsewhere and with the higher echelons of the Government of J&K. There was no doubt that the Constitutional rights of the petitioner have him violated with impunity since he is not in detention. There is no need to make any order to set him at liberty, but suitably and adequately he should be compensated. The Supreme Court had the right to award monetary compensation by way of exemplary costs or otherwise. When a person came to the Supreme Court with the complaint that he had been arrested and imprisoned with mischievous or malicious intent and that his Constitutional and legal rights were invaded, the mischief or malice and the invasion might not be washed away or wished away by his being set free. In appropriate cases like the present one this Court had jurisdiction to compensate the victim by awarding suitable monetary compensation. The State of J&K was directed to pay a sum of Rs. 50,000/-. Bhim Singh v. State of J.&K., AIR 1986 SC 494 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 47 : 1986 CrLJ 192.

[7929] ● Infringement of fundamental right—Claim for compensation.—Ordinarily, of course, a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution should not be used as a substitute for enforcement of the right to claim compensation of infringement of a fundamental right through the ordinary process of Civil Court. It is only in exceptional cases of the nature indicated above that compensation may be awarded in a petition under Art. 32. This is the principle on which this Court awarded compensation in Rudul Sah v. State of Bihar, AIR 1983 SC 1086. So also this Court awarded compensation to Bhim Singh whose fundamental right personal liberty was grossly violated by the State of J&K. In all cases where compensation has been awarded by this Court, the infringement was patent and incontrovertible, the violation was gross and its magnitude was such as to shock the conscience of the Court and it would have been gravely unjust to the person whose fundamental right was violated, to require him to go to the Civil Court for claiming compensation. M.C. Mehta v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1086 : (1987) 1 SCC 395 : JT 1987 (1) SC 1 : (1987) 1 SCR 819.

[7930] ● Police firing—Compensation—Payment to victims.—There has been no dispute that as a result of the Police firing 21 people died and several others were injured. The heirs and relations of a few of the dead people had been compensated by the State to the tune of Rupees ten thousand as found from the record. No justification has been indicated as to why the said compensation has not been given in every case of death or injury. It is a normal feature of which judicial notice can be taken that when such unfortunate consequence emerge even in Police firing, the Sate comes forward to give compensation. Mrs. Jaya Narayan for the State candidly stated that it is not the intention of the State to deprive the relatives of some of the victims who succumbed to the injuries sustained by police firing from benefit of compensation. Ordinarily in the case of death compensation of Rs. 20,000 is paid and there is no reason as to why the quantum of compensation should be limited to Rs 10,000. We may not be taken to suggest that in case of death the liability of the wrong-doer is absolved when compensation of Rs. 20,000 is paid. It is directed that without prejudice to any just claim for compensation that may be advanced by the relations of the victims who have died or by the injured persons themselves, for every case of death compensation of Rupees twenty thousand and for every injured person compensation of Rupees five thousand shall be paid. Where some compensation has already been paid, the same may be adjusted when the amount now directed is being paid. Peoples' Union of Democratic Rights v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 355 : (1987) 1 SCC 265 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 58 : 1987 CrLJ 528 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 11 : (1987) 1 SCR 631 : JT 1987 (1) SC 18.

[7931] ● Substituting monetary compensation in lieu of substantive sentence.—It is the duty of the Court to impose a proper punishment and to allow the respondent to escape with payment of a fine of Rs. 10,000 will deprive the law of its effectiveness and result in travesty of justice. Such drastic reduction in sentence in murder cases apart from creating law and order problems would be repugnant to the basic concepts of criminal justice. In the present case, the respondent had dealt a solitary blow with a lathi on the head of the deceased in the heat of the moment, without premeditation and after a sudden fight and under those circumstances there was nothing to prove that he had intended to cause the death of the deceased but could only be attributed with knowledge that it was likely to cause an injury which was likely to cause his death and, therefore, he could only be liable under Section 304, Part II, there was no justification for substituting monetary compensation in lieu of substantive sentence. State of Haryana v. Prabhu, 1987 Supp SCC 177 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 51 (52) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 87.

[7932] ● Award of compensation to victim under Section 357(3), CrPC.—Section 357 (3) of the Code is an important provision but Courts have seldom invoked it. Perhaps due to ignorance of the object of it. It empowers the Court to award compensation to victims while passing judgment of conviction. In addition to conviction, the Court may order the accused to pay some amount by way of compensation to the victim who has suffered by the action of the accused. This power of Courts to award compensation is not ancillary to other sentences but it is in addition thereto. This power is intended to do something to reassure the victim that he/she is not forgotten in the criminal justice system. It is a measure of responding appropriately to crime as well of reconciling the victim with the offender. It is to some extent a constructive approach to crimes. It is indeed a step forward in our criminal justice system. The Supreme Court recommended to all Courts to exercise this power liberally so as to meet the ends of justice in a better way.

In the instant case the payment by way of compensation must however be reasonable. The quantum of compensation may be determined by taking into account the nature of the crime, the justness of the claim by the victim and the ability of the accused to pay. If there are more that one accused they may be asked to pay in equal terms unless their capacity to pay varies considerably. The payment may also vary depending upon the acts of each accused. Reasonable period for payment of compensation, if necessary, by instalments, may also be given. The Court may enforce the order by imposing sentence in default.

The victim in this case lost his power of speech permanently. That is why he has not stepped into the witness box for the prosecution. The life long disability of the victim ought not to be by-passed by the Court and he must be made to feel that the Court and the accused had taken care of him. Any such measure which would give him succour is far better than a sentence by deterrence. The counsel stated that his clients were willing to pay any amount determined by this Court. Having due regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, a compensation of Rs. 50, 000/- would meet the ends of justice, to be paid in equal proportions. Hari Kishan and State of Haryana v. Sukhbir Singh, AIR 1988 SC 2127 : (1988) 4 SCC 551 : 1989 CrLJ 116 : 1988 (3) Crimes 541.

[7933] ● Compensation—State liable for tortious act committed by its agency.—An action for damages lies for bodily harm which includes battery, assault, false imprisonment, physical injuries and death. In case of assault, battery and false imprisonment, the damages are at large and represent a solatium for the mental pain, distress, indignity, loss of liberty and death. The son of Kamlesh Kumari aged 9 years died due to beating and assault by the SHO Lal Singh and as such she is entitled to get the damages for the death of her son. It is well settled now that the State is responsible for the tortious acts of its employees. Respondent 2, Delhi Administration, is liable for payment of compensation to Smt. Kamlesh Kumari for the death of her son due to beating by the SHO on a conspectus of decisions of this Court in State of Rajasthan v. Vidhyawati, AIR 1962 SC 933 and Peoples' Union of Democratic Rights v. Police Commissioner, (1989) 4 SCC 730. We deem it just and proper to direct the Delhi Administration, respondent No. 2 to pay compensation to Kamlesh Kumari, mother of the deceased, Naresh a sum of Rs. 75,000 within a period of four weeks from the date of this judgment. Saheli, a Women's Resources Centre, through Ms. Nalini Bhanot v. Commissioner of Police, Delhi Police, AIR 1990 SC 513 : (1990) 1 SCC 422 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 145 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 152 : JT 1989 (4) SC 553.

[7934] ● "Compensation" connotation at.—The word 'compensation' is again of very wide connotation. It has not been defined in the Act. According to dictionary it means, 'compensating or being compensated; thing given as recompense;'. In legal sense it may constitute actual loss or expected loss and may extend to physical, mental or even emotional suffering, insult or injury or loss. Therefore, when the Commission has been vested with the jurisdiction to award value of goods or services and compensation it has to be construed widely enabling the Commission to determine compensation for any loss or damage suffered by a consumer which in law is otherwise included in wide meaning of compensation. The provision in our opinion enables a consumer to claim and empowers the Commission to redress any injustice done to him. Any other construction would defeat the very purpose of the Act. The Commission or the forum in the Act is thus entitled to award not only value of the goods or services but also to compensate a consumer for injustice suffered by him. Lucknow Development Authority v. M.K. Gupla, AIR 1994 SC 787 (796-797) : (1994) 1 SCC 243.

[7935] ● Compensation Award of for mental and physical harassment.—In a modern society no authority can arrogate to itself the power to act in a manner which is arbitrary. It is unfortunate that matters which require immediate attention linger on and the man in the (street is) made to run from one end to other with no result. The culture of window clearance appears to be totally dead. Even in ordinary matters a common man who has neither the political backing nor the financial strength to match the inaction in public oriented departments gets frustrated and it erodes the credibility in the system. Public administration, no doubt involves a vast amount of administrative discretion which shields the action of administrative authority. But where it is found that exercise of discretion was mala fide and the complainant is entitled to compensation for mental and physical harassment then the officer can no more claim to be under protective cover. When a citizen seeks to recover compensation from a public authority in respect of injuries suffered by him for capricious exercise of power and the National Commission finds it duly proved then it has a statutory obligation to award the same.? It was never more necessary than today when even social obligations are regulated by grant of statutory powers. The test of permissive form of grant are over. It is now imperative and implicit in the exercise of power that it should be for the sake of society. When the Court directs payment of damages or compensation against the State the ultimate sufferer is the common man. It is the tax payers' money which is paid for inaction of those who are entrusted under the Act to discharge their duties in accordance with law. It is, therefore, necessary that the Commission when it is satisfied that a complainant is entitled to compensation for harassment or mental agony or oppression, which finding of course should be recorded carefully on material and convincing circumstances and not lightly, then it should further direct the department concerned to pay the amount to the complainant from the public fund immediately but to recover the same from those who are found responsible for such unpardonable behaviour by dividing it proportionately where there are more than one functionaries. Lucknow Development Authority v. M.K. Gupta, AIR 1994 SC 787 (799, 800) : (1994) 1 SCC 243.

[7936] ● Power to award compensation not ancillary to other sentences but in addition.— In the instant case the accused did not commit the murders merely of personal gains but on the other hand committed the same under the influence of extreme mental and emotional disturbance and also having a reasonable apprehension that his life was in danger. The accused seemed to have acted in a frenzied manner in such a disturbed mental condition. The fact that there is no direct evidence connecting the accused with the murders cannot be overlooked. Under these circumstances it may not be safe to award death sentence. Widow of the deceased is left without any support with a family to be maintained. Therefore, it is a fit case where this Court should award compensation to her. Section 357(3), CrPC provides for ordering of payment by way of compensation to the victim by the accused. It is an important provision that it must also be noted that power to award compensation is not ancillary to other sentences but it is in addition thereto. Balraj v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1935 : (1994) 4 SCC 29 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 823 (827) : 1995 CrLJ 3217.

[7937] ● Compensation for causing death of deceased and injuries to other.—A-4 was responsible for causing the death of Harbans Singh, deceased 2 and injuries to Surjit Singh, PW 6 by rash and negligent driving. Accordingly, as provided under Section 357, CrPC A-4 is directed to pay Rs. 30,000 by way of compensation to the legal heirs of Harbans Singh deceased 2 and Rs. 10,000 to Surjit Singh PW-6. Hardev Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 282 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1234 (1239) : (1994) 2 Crimes 307.

[7938] ● Compensation—Death of Army Officer while in service.—The manner in which the authorities have dealt with the episode of the alleged burning is all the more reprehensible. All that is stated in the affidavit-in-reply is that when the officer was sent to the airfield "the officer did not board the plane. He had gone to attend some private business in the cook house and later his charred body was found with 98% in the serious as contended by the plaint (Sic). As such there was no cause of apprehension". We are pained at the utterly irresponsible conduct of the authorities in the present case right from the inception.

It is surprising that when the officer was not in a condition to move on account of his ailment, and when on 16-6-1978 his condition was considered so delicate that even his wife and children were permitted to see him only after a great deal of persuasion, and when he was all the while accompanied by the Specialist Doctor, he was allowed to move on his own and go for his private business to the cook house, if the version of the respondent-authorities is to be believed. It is also difficult to believe that when he was being airlifted at his own request, he had refused to board the plane and instead had left for his said alleged private business. All that thereafter was found was his charred body with 98% burns. No enquiry whatsoever seems to have been made and if made, its results are kept a secret. That such an incident should have occurred in the presence of the responsible Army Officers and should go uninvestigated and in fact completely ignored is all the more baffling. There is a good deal in this case for which the authorities have to answer. In the aforesaid facts the conclusion is that the officer died, while in service in mysterious circumstances and his death is attributable to and aggravated by the military service. The responsibility of his death is prima facie traceable to the act of criminal omissions and commissions on the part of the concerned authorities. The petitioner is, therefore, entitled to suitable compensation as well as to the special family pension and the children allowance according to the relevant Rules w.e.f. 23-6-1978, i.e., the date of death of her husband. Compensation in the amount of Rs. 6 lacs is awarded to her. Charanjit Kaur v. Union of India, AIR 1994 SC 1491(1495) : (1994) 2 SCC 1 : JT 1994 (1) SC 131.

[7939] ● Compensation for foisting false case by Police Officer.—A Police Officer foisted false case, State Govt. directed to pay Rs. 5,000/- as compensation to accused after recovering it from concerned Police Officers. Daulat Ram v. State of Haryana, AIR 1995 SC 1998 : (1996) 11 SCC 711 : 1995 CrLJ 3648 (SC).

[7940] ● Payment of fine by way of compensation to widow of deceased.—The appellant after his conviction for the offence under Section 307, IPC by the High Court has been in custody for over one year. He has also remained in custody for sometime during the investigation of the case and the trial. After hearing learned counsel for the complainant we consider that it would meet the ends of justice if the sentence of the appellant for the offence under S. 304, Part II, IPC is reduced to the period already undergone by him but in addition he is directed to pay a fine of Rs. 20,000 by way of compensation under S. 357, Cr PC to be paid to the widow of the deceased. Giani Ram v. State of Haryana, AIR 1995 SC 2452 : 1995 CrLJ 4168.

[7941] ● Rape—Award of interim compensation during pendency of proceedings.—If the Court trying an offence of rape has jurisdiction to award the compensation at the final stage, there is no reason to deny to the Court the right to award interim compensation which should also be provided in the Scheme on the basis of the principles set out in the decision in Delhi Domestic Women's Forum v. Union of India, (1995) 1 SCC 14, the jurisdiction to pay interim compensation shall be treated to be part of the overall jurisdiction of the Courts trying the offence of rape, which is an offence against basic human rights as also the Fundamental Right of Personal Liberty and Life. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case in which there is a serious allegation that Bodhisattwa Gautam had married Subhra Chakraborty before the God he worshipped by putting vermilion on her forehead and accepting her as his wife and also having impregnated her twice resulting in abortion on both the occasions, we, on being prima facie satisfied, dispose of this matter by providing that Bodhisattwa Gautam shall pay to Subhra Chakraborty a sum of Rs. 1,000 every month as interim compensation during the pendency of Criminal Case No. 1/95 in the Court of Judicial Magistrate, 1st Class, Kohima, Nagaland. He shall also be liable to pay arrears of compensation at the same rate from the date on which the complaint was filed till this date. Bodhisattwa Gautam v. Subhra Chakraborty, AIR 1996 SC 922 : (1996) 1 SCC 490 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 133 : JT 1995 (9) SC 509.

[7942] ● Compensation Family feud resulting in death.—Considering the nature of the crime, the fact that the accused and the victim are near relations, that it is a property issue which ended in the calamity, the fact that the accused are admittedly in a position to pay, we are of the view that this is a fit case in which S. 357(3), CrPC can be invoked and a just and reasonable compensation given to the family of Balbir Singh (PW-5 and children). In the circumstances, while upholding the conviction of the appellants for the offence under S. 299 read with S. 304 Part I., IPC the following directions are being given in the interests of justice:

> "That the appellants are found guilty and sentenced under S.299 read with S. 304, Part I of the IPC to a term of imprisonment, which will be limited to the period they have already undergone for causing the death of Balbir Singh and Amrik Singh.

In addition to the above, we order that the two appellants/accused Nos. 1 and 3 shall pay by way of compensation a sum of Rs. 35,000 each to PW-5 and her children who have suffered the irreparable loss due to the death of Balbir Singh for which the appellants/accused persons have been sentenced to the term of imprisonment already undergone by them." Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 372 (378) : (1995) 6 SCC 593 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1132 : (1995) 4 Crimes 244 : JT 1995 (7) SC 286.

[7943] ● Long detention as order trial—No direction for monetary compensation to be given.—In the facts and circumstances of the case it appears to us that the respondent had made an application for taking note of the mitigating circumstances in the matter of awarding suitable punishment against him by indicating the period of detention as under-trial accused before Court-martial. He was convicted under S. 307 of the IPC and was awarded the sentence of imprisonment for only one year presumably by taking into consideration, the mitigating circumstances. It is indicated here that for an offence under S. 307 of the IPC imprisonment up to a period of ten years can be given. Hence, we are not inclined to give any direction for monetary compensation for long detention as under-trial accused. Union of India v. Anand Singh Bisht, AIR 1997 SC 361 : (1996) 10 SCC 153 : 1996 CrLJ 4435.

[7944] ● Reduction in substantive sentence—Payment of fine as compensation to heirs of deceased.—In the present case coming to the question of sentence, we feel that the appellants should adequately compensate the members of the deceased's family for the atrocities they committed taking advantage of the helplessness of Phoola Devi. We therefore, while reducing their substantive sentence of R.I. for five years to three years direct the appellant to pay a sum of Rs. 20,000 and each of the other four appellants a sum of Rs.10,000 as fine. Sukhpal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1997 SC 468 (470) : AIR 1997 SC 541 : (1997) 9 SCC 773 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 789 : JT 1997 (1) SC 387.

[7945] ● Award of compensation in public Law proceedings—Adjustment of against damages awarded in civil suit.—It is now a well accepted proposition in most of the jurisdiction, that monetary or pecuniary compensation is an appropriate and indeed an effective and sometimes perhaps the only suitable remedy for redressal of the established infringement of the fundamental right to life of a citizen by the public servants and the State is vicariously liable for their acts. The claim of the citizen is based on the principle of strict liability to which the defence of sovereign immunity is not available and the citizen must receive the amount of compensation from the State, which shall have the right to be indemnified by the wrong- doer. In the assessment of compensation the emphasis has to be on the compensatory and not on punitive element. The objective is to apply balm to the wounds and not to punish the transgressor or the offender, as awarding appropriate punishment for the offence (irrespective of compensation) must be left to the criminal Courts in which the offender is prosecuted, which the State in law, is duty bound to do. The award of compensation in the public law jurisdiction is also without prejudice to any other action, like civil suit for damages which is lawfully available to the victim or the heirs of the deceased victim with respect to the same matter for the tortious act committed by the functionaries of the State. The quantum of compensation will, of course, depend upon the peculiar facts of each case and no strait-jacket formula can be evolved in that behalf. The relief to redress wrong for the established invasion of the fundamental rights of the citizen, under the public law jurisdiction is thus, in addition to the traditional remedies and not in derogation of them. The amount of compensation as awarded by the Court and paid by the State to redress the wrong done, may, in a given case, be adjusted against any amount which may be awarded to the claimant by way of damages in a civil suit. D.K. Basu v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1997 SC 610 (628) : (1997) 1 SCC 416 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 92 : 1997 CrLJ 1743 : (1996) 4 crimes 253.

[7946] ● Compensation for established breach of fundamental rights.—S. 330, CrPC. directly makes torture during interrogation and investigation punishable under the Indian Panel Code. These statutory provisions are, however, inadequate to repair the wrong done to the citizen. Prosecution of the offender is an obligation of the State in case of every crime but the victim of crime needs to be compensated monetarily also. The Court, where the infringement of the fundamental right is established, therefore, cannot stop by giving a mere declaration. It must proceed further and give compensatory relief, not by way of damages as in a civil action but by way of compensation under the public law jurisdiction for the wrong done, due to breach of public duty by the Sate of not protecting the fundamental right to life of the citizen. To repair the wrong done and give judicial redress for legal injury is a compulsion of judicial conscience. D.K. Basu v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1997 SC 610 (624) : (1997) 1 SCC 416 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 92 : 1997 CrLJ 1743 : JT 1997 (1) SC 1 : (1997) 4 Crimes 253.

[7947] ● Appellant victim of prolonged illegal incarceration—Compensation—Award of.—According to prosecution case in the after-noon of 8.3.1990, a police party, when they were checking the luggage of the passengers at the inner gate of Inter-State Bus Terminus saw the appellant alighting from a bus with a rexine bag. Seeing them, he tried to move away briskly. PW-6 apprehended him on suspicion and found, on search of his bag, 3 country made pistols and 12 cartridges. The appellant pleaded not guilty to the charges levelled against him; and his specific defence was that in the evening of 6.3.90 when he got down at I.S.B.T. from the bus, he boarded at Meerut, the Police apprehended him, and after detaining him for three days in the Policed Post foisted false case against him. He asserted that no country-made fire arms or cartridges were recovered from him. The appellant, did not examine any witness in his defence but produced before the Court certified copy of a telegram sent by his father to the higher authorities on 8.3.1990, wherein he complained that his son Zahid (the appellant) was arrested by the Police Post, I.S.B.T. on 6.3.1990 and an application that he (the father) moved before a Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi on the same day making identical complaint. Though the appellant did not examine his father or any other witness to prove at which hour of the day the above application was filed and moved, it can be safely presumed that it was filed and order of the Magistrate obtained thereon, during Court hours, which ended at 5.00 p.m. Since, according to the prosecution, the appellant was arrested at 5.30 p.m., the above circumstances undoubtedly makes the defence version probable. To confirm whether we would be justified in basing our conclusion on the above circumstance, we called for the Daily Diary Book of the Police Post containing entry No. 33, dated 8.3.1990, a copy of which (Ex PW 4/A) was exhibited by (PW-4) to prove that the patrolling party left the Police Post at 5.00 p.m. On a careful look of the original entry we, however, find that the time at which the party left, stands interpolated, and even with naked eyes, it can be seen that the time of departure of the party which was earlier shown as 6 p.m., was changed to 5p.m. To keep the sequence of entries order, similar interpolations had been made in the earlier two entries. PW-4, who exhibited a plain copy of D.D. No. 33, testified that he could not produce the original as the same had been destroyed. It is now manifest that the above statement was falsely made by PW-4, lest the production of the original diary entry exposed the concerned Police Officers about the interpolation made. The reasons for the interpolation is not far to seek. If PWs-5 and 6 had left the Police Post at 6.00 p.m. (as originally shown in the Daily Diary Book entry No. 33) they could not have apprehended the appellant at 5.30 p.m. as testified by them nor could they have prepared the seizure list at the same time (as shown). From the materials on record we have, therefore, no hesitation in concluding that it was only on receipt of the order of the Magistrate as communicated through the Station House Officer of Kashmere Gate Police Station that PW-5 and 6 along with other Police personnel felt it absolutely necessary to justify the detention of the appellant and with that ulterior object cooked up the story of his apprehension at 5.30 p.m. on 8.3.1990 with unauthorized firearms and ammunitions. We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the conviction. Since the appellant has been made a victim of prolonged illegal incarceration due to machination of PWs-5 and 6 and other Police personnel of I.S.B.T. Police Post, we direct the Delhi Government to pay him a sum of Rs. 50,000 as compensation. Mohd. Zahid v. Govt. of N.C.T. of Delhi, AIR 1998 SC 2023 : (1998) 5 SCC 419 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1327-1330 : 1998 CrLJ 2908 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 397 : JT 1998 (3) SC 750 : 1998 Cr App R (SC) 383 : (1998) 2 Crimes 325.

[7948] ● Compensation instead of fine.—In this context a reference to S. 29(2) of the CrPC is necessary as it contains a limitation for the Magistrate of first class in the matter of imposing fine as a sentence or as a part of the sentence. S. 29(2) reads thus: "The Court of a Magistrate of the first class may pass a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or of fine not exceeding five thousand rupees, or of both." It is true, if a judicial Magistrate of the first class were to order compensation to be paid to the complainant from out of the fine realised the complainant will be the loser when the cheque amount exceeded the said limit. In such a case a complainant would get only the minimum amount of Rs. 5000. However, the Magistrate in such cases can alleviate the grievance of the complainant by making resort to S. 357(3) of the Code. It is well to remember that the this Court has emphasised the need for making liberal use of that provision (Hari Kishan v. Sukhbir Singh, AIR 1988 SC 2127) No. limit is mentioned in the subsection and, therefore, a Magistrate can award any sum as compensation. Of course while filing the quantum of such compensation, the Magistrate has to consider what would be the reasonable amount of compensation. K. Bhaskaran v. Sankaran Vaidhyan Balan, AIR 1999 SC 3762 : (1999) 7 SCC 510 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1284 (1294) : 1999 CrLJ 4606 : JT 1999 (7) SC 558.

[7949] ● Death in police firing—Compensation payment of.—Without trial, and even without considering the evidence which may be adduced in the cases, learned Judges, ordered the Government to pay Rs. 10 lakhs each to the dependents of all the persons who died in Police firing. Rs. 10 lakhs cash were given to the victims of molestation, Rs. 50,000 each for 398 persons who were detained by the Police. The High Court while imposing such a heavy liability on the State has not made any attempt to discuss the relevant questions which are to be answered for fixing liability of compensation and for quantification of the amount of compensation. On, consideration, the direction for payment of compensation is clearly unsustainable and is liable to be vacated. A.K. Singh v. Uttrakhand Jan Morcha, AIR 1999 SC 2193 : (1999) 4 SCC 476 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 580, 585 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 354.

[7950] ● Death of father of claimant due to bomb blast in Jail—Compensation.—The deceased as also Challa Ramkrishna Reddy who apprehended danger to their lives, complained to the Police and requested for adequate Police guards being deployed at the Jail, but their requests were not heeded to and true to their apprehension, a bomb was thrown at them which caused the death of Challa Chinnappa Reddy and injuries to Challa Ramkrishna Reddy (PW-1). In this process, one of the three persons, who was sleeping near the Jail, was also killed. The Police Sub-Inspector was also in conspiracy and it was for this reason that inspite of their requests, adequate security guards were not provided. Even the normal strength of the guards who should be on duty at night was not provided and only two Constables, instead of nine, were put on duty. Since the Sub-Inspector of Police himself was in conspiracy, the act in not providing adequate security at the Jail cannot be treated to be an act or omission in pursuance of a statutory duty namely R. 48 of the Madras Prison Rules. Moreover the action was wholly mala fide and therefore there was no question of the provisions of Art 72 of the Constitution being invoked to defeat the claim of the respondents as the protection of shorter period of limitation, contemplated by that article, is available only in respect of bona fide acts. The Fundamental Rights which also include basic human rights, continue to be available to a prisoner and those rights cannot be defeated by pleading the old and archaic defence of immunity in respect of sovereign acts which has been rejected several times by this Court. This through a stream of cases has already awarded compensation to the persons who suffered personal injuries at the hands of the Govt. officers. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Challa Ramkrishna Reddy, AIR 2000 SC 2083 : (2000) 5 SCC 712.

[7951] ● Compensation—Death by electrocution while walking on road.—Once it is established that the death occurred on account of electrocution while walking on the road, necessarily, the authorities concerned must be held to be negligent and, therefore, in the case in hand, it would be NDMC who would be responsible for the death in question. It is found that the appellant was serving as a machineman in the Statesman and was aged 54 years on the date of death, and the age of retirement is 60 years. Taking these factors into consideration, NDMC is directed to award to the appellants, who are the legal heirs of the deceased, compensation to the tune of Rs. 1,00,000 and NDMC should pay the same within 3 months from today failing which it will carry interest at the rate of 12%. Parvati Devi v. *Commissioner of Police, Delhi, (*2000) 3 SCC 754 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 771(771).

[7952] ● Compensation Award of—Victim of rape.—Mrs. Chandrima Das, a practicing Advocate of the Calcutta High Court, filed a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution against the Chairman, Railway Board and others claiming compensation for the victim, Smt. Hanuffa Khatoon, a Bangladeshi National who was gang-raped by many, including employees of the Railways in a room at Yatri Niwas at Howrah Station of the Eastern Railway. Having regard to what has been stated above, the contention that Smt. Hanuffa Khatoon should have approached the Civil Court for damages and the matter should not have been considered in a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution, cannot be accepted. Where public functionaries are involved and the matter relates to the violation of fundamental rights or the enforcement of public duties, the remedy would still be available under the Public Law notwithstanding that a suit could be filed for damages undue Private Law. In the instant case it is not a mere matter of violation of an ordinary right of a person but the violation of fundamental rights which is involved. Smt. Hanuffa Khatoon was a victim of rape. This Court in Bodhisattwa v. Subhra Chakaraborty, AIR 1996 SC 922 : (1996) 1 SCC 490 has held "rape" is an offence which is violative of the fundamental right of a person guaranteed under Article 21 of the Constitution. "Rape is a crime not only against the person of a woman, it is a crime against the entire society" Chairman, Railway Board v. Chandrima Das, AIR 2000 SC 988 : (2000) 2 SCC 465 : 2000 CrLJ 1473 : JT 2000 (1) SC 426.

[7953] ● Custodial death—Compensation.—The State of Utter Pradesh is responsible in public law for the death of Rishipal and must pay compensation to the petitioners for the same (see D.K. Basu v. State of W.B., AIR 1997 SC 610 : 1997 CrLJ 743). It is appropriate to order the State of Uttar Pradesh to pay to the petitioners compensation for the death of Rishipal in the sum of Rupees five lakhs within three months. Ajab Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2000 SC 3421 (3423) : (2000) 3 SCC 521 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 718 : 2000 CrLJ 1809 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 340.

[7954] ● Compensation words "as may be prescribed"—Meaning of.—The collocation of the words : "as may be prescribed" in Section 124-A of the Railways Act is to be understood as to mean "as may be prescribed form time to time". The relevance of the date of untoward incident is that the right to claim compensation form the Railway Administration would be acquired by the injured on that date. The statute did not fix the amount of compensation, but left it to be determined by the Central Government from time to time by means of rules. This delegation to the Central Government indicates that it was difficult for Parliament to fix the amount because compensation amount is a varying phenomenon and the Government would be in a far advantageous position to ascertain what would be the just and reasonable compensation in respect of a myriad different kinds of injuries by taking into account very many factors. What the legislature wanted was that the victim of the accident must be paid compensation and the amount must represent a reality which means the amount should be a fair and reasonable compensation. The Government has the better wherewithals to ascertain and fix such amount. It is for the said reason that Parliament left it to the Government to discharge that function. Sections 124 ands 124-A of the Act speak the same language that "the Railway Administration shall be liable to pay compensation". As pointed above, it is the liability of the Railway administration to "pay compensation to such extent as may be prescribed". Hence the time of ordering payment is more important to determine as to what is the extent of the compensation which is prescribed by the rules to be disbursed to the claimant. In this context a reference to Section 129 of the Act appears useful. The Central Government is empowered by the said provision to make rules by notification "to carry out the purposes of this Chapter". It is evident that one of the purposes of this chapter is that the injured victims in railway accidents and untoward incidents must get compensation. Though the word "compensation" is not defined in the Act or in the Rules it is the giving of an equivalent or substitute of equivalent value. In Black's Law Dictionary, "Compensation" is shown as "equivalent in money for a loss sustained; or giving back an equivalent in either money which is but the measure of value, or in actual value otherwise conferred; or recompense in value for some loss, injury or service especially when it is given by statute." It means when you pay the compensation in terms of money it must represent, on the date of ordering such payment, the equivalent value. Rathi Menon v. Union of India, AIR 2001 SC 1333 : (2001) 3 SCC 714 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1311 (1318) : JT 2001 (3) SC 457.

[7955] ● Compensation—Relevant date for determination.—In this context we may look at Section 128 (1) also. It says that the right of any person to claim compensation before the Claims Tribunal as indicated in Section 124 or 124-A shall not affect the right of any such person to recover compensation payable under any other law for the time being in force. But there is an interdict that no person shall be entitled to claim compensation for more than once in respect of the same accident. This means that the party has two alternatives, one is to avail himself of his civil remedy to claim compensation based on common law or any other statutory provision, and the other is to apply before the Claims Tribunal under Section 124 or 124-A of the Act, As he cannot avail himself both the remedies he has to choose one between the two. The provisions in Chapter XIII of the Act are intended to provide a speedier remedy to the victims of accidents and untoward incidents. If he were to choose the latter that does not mean that he should be prepared to get a lesser amount. He is given the assurance by the legislature that the Central Government is saddled with the task of prescribing fair and just compensation in the Rules from time to time. The provisions are not intended to give a gain to the Railway Administration but they are meant to afford just and reasonable compensation to the victims as a speedier measure. If a person files a suit the amount of compensation will depend upon what the Court considers just and reasonable on the date of determination. Hence when he goes before the Claims Tribunal claiming compensation the determination of the amount should be as on the date of such determination. Rathi Menon v. Union of India, AIR 2001 SC 1333 : (2001) 3 SCC 714 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1311 (1318) : JT 2001 (3) SC 457.

[7956] ● Compensation—Material on record when scanty Court to assess on material available.—In the instant case, the High Court did not have sufficient material before it to correctly assess the capacity of the accused to pay the compensation but the keeping then object of the section in mind as seen from the reasoning of the High Court, we think it is a fit case in which the Court was justified in invoking Section 357. Since the material on record is scanty, the Court will have to assess this monetary figure from the material available and also taking into consideration the facts, the judicial notice of which the Court can take note of. Rachapal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 2710 : (2002) 6 SCC 462 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362 : 2002 CrLJ 3540 : (2002) 3 Crimes 36 (SC).

[7957] ● Compensation—Accused when facing serious offence like murder.—The High Court has also awarded Rs. 1 lakh as compensation to the accused on the ground that she was illegally detained in the Police Station and the Police personnel committed acts of molestation, obscene violation, etc. It is noteworthy that after investigation the Police has submitted chargesheet against accused. Her application for bail was rejected by the learned Sessions Judge and thereafter by the High Court prior to the decision of the revision. There is absolutely no justification for awarding compensation to a person who is facing prosecution for a serious offence like murder even before the trial has commenced. This direction, therefore, deserves to be set aside. State Rep. By Inspector of Police v. N.M.T. Joy Immaculate, AIR 2004 SC 2282 : (2004) 5 SCC 729 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1722 (1734) : 2004 CrLJ 2527 : (2004) 2 JCC 731 : (2004) 3 Crimes 136.

[7958] ● Power of Court to award compensation to victim of offence.—Opportunity has to be granted before directing payment of compensation under Section 357(4), CrPC. If the Appellate Court intends to award compensation, an opportunity of hearing has to be granted so that the relevant aspects like the need to award compensation, capacity of the accused to pay and several relevant factors can be taken note of. Mangilal v. State of M.P., AIR 2004 SC 1280 : (2004) 2 SCC 447 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1085 (1092) : 2004 CrLJ 880 : (2004) 1 JCC 138 : JT 2004 (1) SC 81 : (2004) 1 Crimes 177.

[7959] ● Power u/s. 357(3) when to be exercised.—The power under Section 357(3), CrPC can be exercised only when the Court imposes sentence by which fine does not form a part. Where a Court having sentenced to imprisonment, as also fine, the power under sub-section (3) of Section 357, CrPC could not have been exercised. Sivasuryian v. Thangavelu, (2004) 13 SCC 795 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 532.

[7960] ● Compensation—Direction for payment setting aside of.—The trial Court had imposed a sentence of fine of Rs. 2000 as fine and the High Court enhanced the quantum of fine without there being any further discussion on the matter. Therefore, the direction to the appellant to pay a fine of Rs. 2 lakhs could only by treated as enhancement of fine already imposed by the Sessions Judge. Moreover, Section 357(3) contemplates a situation where the complainant has suffered any loss or injury and for which the accused person has been found prima facie responsible. There is no such finding or observation by the High Court. Of course, the daughter of the complainant passed away but the direction of the High Court to pay Rs. 2 lakhs was on the assumption that the complainant had paid Rs. 2 lakhs as part of the dowry to the appellant. There is no evidence to show that such an amount was given to the appellant. On the other hand, the appellant's learned counsel contended that it was a love marriage between the appellant and the deceased and no dowry passed between the parties. It is also pertinent to note that Section 357(5), CrPC says that at the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter, the Court shall take into account any sum paid or recovered as compensation under this section. The direction to pay compensation under Section 357(3) is on the assumption of basic civil liability on the part of the person who committed the offence to redress the victim or his dependents by payment of compensation. The complainant could not have filed a civil suit for recovery of the dowry amount if any, as the payment itself was illegal and prohibited under law. In any view of the matter, the direction of the High Court to pay a sum of Rs. 2 lakhs as fine was not warranted by law and we set aside the same and also further direction that the appellant to undergo default sentence. Arun Garg v. State of Punjab, 2005 SCC (Cri) 338 (347).

[7961] ● Uphaar Cinema Tragedy—Compensation to victims of.—Compensation to Victims of Uphaar Cinema Tragedy.—The Apex Court directed as under :—

(1) That the appellants shall, within a period of one month from today, deposit an amount of Rs. 3,01,40,000 (Rupees three crores one lakh and forty thousand) with the High Court.

(2) That for the purpose of arranging the funds, the appellant shall be at liberty to offer the cinema building as security and raise money from the financial institutions.

(3) That, other than offering the property as security for the purpose of raising the amount as aforesaid, the appellants shall not create any other encumbrance or any other third-party interest in the cinema building.

(4) That, the order of the criminal Court as to sealing of the property and maintaining the same intact till the criminal trial is over, shall be meticulously observed.

(5) That on the amount being deposited, 50 per cent of the amount deposited by the appellants shall be available for distribution to the claimants rateably. The balance amount shall be invested with a nationalised bank so as to be available for distribution consistently with the final decision of this Court. M.C.D. v. Association of Victims of Uphaar Tragedy, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1256 (1258).

[7962] ● Compensation in rape case.—When the State has not challenged the award of compensation, it is not open to it to question the legality of the award in appeal filed by accused in the Supreme Court. Dinesh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2006 SC 1267 : (2006) 3 SCC 771 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 1 : 2006 CrLJ 1679 : 2006 (1) Crimes 247.

[7963] ● Sentence reduced to sentence already undergone—Compensation.—Where accused was held guilty and convicted under Section 325 and 323, IPC, the substantive sentence imposed was reduced to the sentence already undergone and the accused was directed to pay Rs. 10,000/- as compensation to the complainant. Mangappa v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 6 SCC 231 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 76 : 2007 CrLJ 3220 (3223).

[7964] ● Person losing right arm in police firing—Special ex gratia amount paid to claimant.—On 7.7.1991 during the ambush in terrorist chase the respondent was hurt. He was visiting a relative in the night. The police asked him to stop. According to the police forces he did not pay any heed to stop the vehicle. In any event, police started shooting, several bullets hit his right fore-arm which was immediately blown off and severed from upper arm. He was taken to the hospital where the right arm below elbow was amputated. Thereafter also the respondent had to undergo another surgery at PGI, Chandigarh as he had developed abscess. He was paid Rs. 20,000/- in terms of the notification and a sum of Rs. 3,378/- as medical expenses. After about 10 years, the petition under Section 482, CrPC was filed demanding compensation of repress 3 lacs. The claim was resisted on several grounds including delayed approach and the non-applicability of Section 482, CrPC. The Supreme Court observed:

"A bare look at the notification dated 18-1-1991 makes the position clear that it was paid as "special ex gretia grant". The limit was also fixed. Therefore, the question of the respondent making any claim in terms of the notification for a higher amount does not arise additionally the respondent was not claiming compensation in writ petition but under Section 482, CrPC and such a claim is also misconceived. Additionally, the respondent was not claiming was made 10 years after the amount fixed by the government had been paid to him. . . But we find that medical expenses paid are certainly low compared to the normal expenses which appear to have been spent for operations and treatment. We fix the quantum at Rs. 20,000/-. The same is in addition to the fixed sum already paid by way of ex gratia compensation under the notification. Though there was a belated claim, in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case we have not treated the belated approach to be fatal. An additional sum of Rs. 17000/- shall be paid to the respondent within two months." State of Punjab v. Kuldeep Singh, (2007) 6 SCC 218 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cr) 68 : 2007 CrLJ 3751.

[7965] ● Claim for additional compensation after delay of 10 years under Section 482, CrPC.—A bare look at the notification dated 18.1.1991 makes the position clear that it was paid as "special ex-gratia grant". The limit was also fixed. Therefore, the question of the respondent making any claim in terms of the notification for a higher amount does not arise. Additionally, the respondent was not claiming compensation in a writ petition but under Section 482, CrPC, and such a claim is also misconceived. Additionally, the claim was made 10 years after the amount fixed by the Government had been paid to him. It is also not in dispute that the respondent has been appointed as a Chowkidar in a Government school. Therefore, strictly speaking, in terms of the notification nothing further is to be paid to the respondent. But we find that medical expenses paid are certainly low compared to the normal expenses which appear to have been spent for the operations and treatment. We fix the quantum at Rs. 20,000/-. The same is in addition to the fixed sum already paid by way of ex-gratia compensation under the notification. Though there was a belated claim, in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case we have not treated the belated approach to be fatal. An additional sum of Rs. 17,000/- shall be paid to the respondent within two months. The appeal is allowed to the aforesaid extent. State of Punjab v. Kuldeep Singh, (2007) 6 SCC 218 : (2007) 3 Crimes 89 : 2007 CrLJ 3751 (3751, 3752) (SC).

[7966] ● Dishonour of cheque—Compensation awarded.—The respondent convicted under Section 138, Negotiable Instruments Act has not been charged with any fraudulent action. He had a probable defence. The appellant had not preferred any appeal against the judgment of the Trial Judge for enhancement of the sentence. It may be that quantum of compensation had been altered to that of the fine but in effect and substance the same did not matter. Interest of justice would be subserved, if the respondent is directed to pay a compensation of Rs. 7 lacs instead and in place of a fine of Rs. 5000/- as has been directed by the High Court. Thus the appellant would be entitled to get the sum of Rs. 7 lacs by way of compensation. Dilip S. Dhanukar v. Kotak Mohindra, (2007) 6 SCC 528 : 2007 CrLJ 2417 (2431)

[7967] ● Awarding of compensation—Consideration by Court.—In awarding compensation to the victim of offence, the Court shall consider whether it is fit-case in which compensation deserves to be awarded, the nature of the crime, the injury suffered by the victim and the capacity of the convict-to pay compensation etc. Manish Jalan v. State of Karnataka, 2008 AIR SCW 5160 (5164).

[7968] ● Awarding of compensation—Power of Court.—Sometimes compensation is granted by the Court in lieu of sending a person behind the bar or in addition to a very light sentence of imprisonment, Section 357, CrPC empowers the Courts not to just impose a fine alone or fine alongwith the sentence of imprisonment, but also when the situation arises, direct the accused to pay compensation. The power of Court to award compensation is not ancillary to other sentences but in addition thereto. K.A. Abbas H.S.A. v. Sabu Joseph, (2010) 6 SCC 230 : 2010 (3) Crimes 15 (SC).

[7969] ● Compensation—Ability and capacity of accused.—Where passing an order awarding compensation, the Court has a duty to find out whether the accused has the ability or capacity to pay the amount awarded. K.A. Abbas H.S.A. v. Sabu Joseph, (2010) 6 SCC 230 : 2010 (3) Crimes 15 (SC).

COMPENSATION FOR VIOLATION OF ART. 21, CONSTITUTION OF INDIA

[7970] ● Compensation for violation of Art. 21, Constitution of India.—It is thus now well settled that the award of compensation against the State is an appropriate and effective remedy for redress of an established infringement of a fundamental right under Article 21, by a public servant. The quantum of compensation will, however, depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Award of such compensation (by way of public law remedy) will not come in the way of the aggrieved person claiming additional compensation in a Civil Court, in the enforcement of the private law remedy in tort, nor come in the way of the criminal Court ordering compensation under Section 357 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Suba Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2006 SC 1117 : (2006) 3 SCC 178 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 54 (74-75) : 2006 CrLJ 1242 : JT 2006 (2) SC 235.

COMPETENT WITNESS

[7971] ● Wife and husband competent witness.—The Section 120 of Evidence Act declares wife and husband as competent witness for and against the other. Chilukuri v. Venkatanarayana, AIR 1954 SC 176 : 1954 SCR 424.

[7972] ● Accomplice competent witness.—An accomplice is a competent witness and his evidence could be accepted and a conviction based on it if there is nothing significant to reject it as false. But the rule of prudence, ingrained in the consideration of accomplice evidence, requires independent corroborative evidence first of the offence and next connecting the accused against whom the accomplice evidence is used, with the crime. Haroon Haji Abdulla v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 832 : 1968 CrLJ 1017 : (1968) 2 SCR 641.

[7973] ● Accomplice competent witness against accused.—Accomplice evidence denotes evidence of a participant in crime with others. Section 133 makes the accomplice a competent witness against the accused person. It has been subjected to scrutiny and the usual checks for corroboration and was, therefore, received with due caution. L. Choraria v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 938 : (1968) 2 SCR 624 : 1968 CrLJ 1134 : 1968 SCD 743.

[7974] ● Doctor competent witness.—The doctor examining deceased and conducting postmortem is the most competent witnesses. Mafabhai Nagarghai Raval v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1992 SC 2186 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 810 : 1992 CrLJ 3710 (SC) : 1992 CrLR (SC) 599.

COMPLAINANT

[7975] ● Complainant.—The present appeals by special leave were directed against the judgment of the High Court of Madras dismissing their applications for quashing charges under Sections 500 and 501, IPC. The common question raised in all these appeals was whether the respondent (the original complainant) was an aggrieved person competent to file the said complaint within the meaning of Section 198, CrPC, read with Section 499, Explanation 2, IPC.

The appellants were at the material time the Editors and Publishers of three daily newspapers printed and published in Madras. The respondent who was the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the conference organised by the Dravida Kazhagam filed the complaints alleging that the newspapers published a distorted version of the resolution advocating that it should not be an offence for a person's wife to desire another man, that he was one of the members responsible for sponsoring and piloting that resolution. The High Court held that the Dravida Kazhagam was an identifiable group, that the complainant was the member thereof and was the Chairman of the Reception Committee in the conference and that he was an active member of the Kazhagam, that he was one of those piloted and sponsored the resolution and therefore he was certainly a person aggrieved within the meaning of Section 198, Cr PC. Counsel for the appellants contended that the view of the High Court was incorrect. Explanation 2 to Section 499, IPC laid down the rule that a defamatory imputation against a collection of persons fell within the definition of defamation. But such a collection of persons should be an identifiable body so that it was possible to say with definiteness that a group of particular persons, as distinguished from the rest of the community, was defamed. Therefore in a case where Explanation 2 was resorted to, the identity of the company or the association or the collection of persons should be established so as to the relatable to the defamatory words or imputations. The news item complained of clearly stated that the resolution was passed by the conference and not by the Dravida Kazhagam and respondent signed describing himself in his first letter as the Chairman of the Reception Committee and not as an important member of the Dravida Kazhagam. There was no grievance there that the Dravida Kazhagam suffered injury in reputation or otherwise by that alleged distortion. In his advocate's letter to the appellants, the respondent's complaint was that the news item was highly defamatory and had tarnished the image of the conference, of whose Reception Committee he was the Chairman. In his evidence before the Magistrate also, he clearly stated that the resolution was moved by the President of and passed by the conference. Thus, his case throughout was that the publication of the said resolution reported in the said news item in distorted form had tarnished the image not of the Daravida Kazhagam but of the conference. That being so, the High Court completely missed the real issue, viz., whether the conference was a determinate and an identifiable body so that defamatory words used in relation to the resolution passed by it would be defamation of the individuals who composed it, and the respondent, as one such individual and Chairman of its Reception Committee could maintain a complaint under Section 500, IPC. Whether the Dravida Kazhagam was an identifiable group or not was beside the point in the view of the Supreme Court. The conference was not such a determinate class like the Rashtriya Swayam Sevak or the body of public prosecutors in the ruling cited, where complaints by its individual member or members were held maintainable. It was impossible to have any definite idea as to its composition, the number of persons who attended, the ideas and the ideologies to which they subscribed and whether all of them positively agreed to the resolution in question. The evidence simply was that the person presiding it read out the resolution and because no one got up to oppose it, it was taken as approved of by all. The conference clearly was not an identifiable or a definitive body so that all those who attended it could be said to be its constituents who, if the conference was defamed, would, in their turn, be said to be defamed. Section 198, CrPC, is mandatory, so that if a Magistrate were to take cognizance of the offence of defamation on a complaint filed by one who was not an aggrieved person, the trial and conviction of an accused in such a case by the Magistrate would be void and illegal. For the reasons set out, these appeals were allowed, the order of the High Court set aside and the proceedings taken out by the Magistrate were quashed on the ground that the respondent's complaint was not competent. G. Narasimhan v. T.V. Chakkappa, AIR 1972 SC 2609 : (1972) 2 SCC 680 : 1993 CrLJ 52.

[7977] ● Complainant in the nature of accomplice.—Complainant is in the nature of accomplice. His story is prima facie suspect. Corroboration of his testimony in material particulars is necessary for the Court to act upon the same. Gulam Mahmood A. Malik v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1980 SC 1558 : 1980 Supp SCC 684 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 586 : 1980 CrLJ 1096 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 504.

[7978] ● Non-mentioning of name of accused in FIR.—Statement in the FIR is that the Factory Inspector (accused) accompanied by his friends visited the Factory of the complainant and demanded bribe from him. Not the name of the accused but the designation of his office alone was known to the complainant. Absence of the name of the accused is hardly of any significance.

In a bribery case, visit of the accused to the Factory of the complainant and demand of bribe by the accused from the complainant were alleged. The accused admitted that the complainant followed by the raiding party came to his house. Omission to mention about the time and place of further meeting in the FIR loses all significance. Kishan Chand Mangal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1982 SC 1511 : (1982) 3 SCC 466 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 92 : 1983 CrLJ 1 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 477.

[7979] ● Head constable being complainant not proceeded with investigation.—PW-3, Siri Chand, Head Constable arrested the accused and on search being conducted by him a pistol and the cartridges were recovered from the accused. It was on his complaint that a formal first information report was lodged and the case was initiated. He being complainant should not have proceeded with the investigation of the case. But it appears to us that he was not only the complainant in the case but he carried on with the investigation and examined witnesses under Section 161, CrPC. Such practice, to say the least, should not be resorted to so that there may not be any occasion to suspect fair and impartial investigation.

The appeal was allowed. Megha Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1995 SC 2339 (2340) : (1996) 11 SCC 709 : 1995 CrLJ 3988.

[7980] ● Bar on taking cognizance of complaint made without authority of appropriate Govt.—The provisions of Section 34 of the Industrial Disputes Act require that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under the said Act or of the abetment of such offence save on a complaint made by the appropriate Government or under the authority of the appropriate Government. There is no limitation therein in regard to the party to whom the authorisation may be given, it is the workman, the trade union and the employer who are most concerned with offences under the said Act and neither the terms of S. 34 nor public policy require that they should be excluded from making such complaints. At the same time the provisions of S. 34 of the Industrial Disputes Act are in the nature of a limitation on the entitlement of a workman or a trade union or an employer to complain of offences under the said Act. They should not, in the public interest, be permitted to make frivolous, vexatious or otherwise patently untenable complaints, and to this end S. 34 requires that no complaint shall be taken cognizance of unless it is made with the authorisation of the appropriate Government. Section 39 empowers the appropriate Government to delegate the powers exercisable by it under the said Act. This is altogether different from the concept of authorisation to file a complaint under Section 34. If the powers under S. 34 of the Act have been delegated under S. 39, the delegate can file the complaint himself or authorise someone else to file it. Learned Counsel's argument, if accepted, would render the words "or under the authority of" in S. 34 otiose and that is impermissible. These words necessarily must be given due meaning and the meaning is that the appropriate Government may authorise someone other than itself, even a non-Government servant, to file a compliant under S. 34. Raj Kumar Gupta v. Lt. Governor, Delhi, AIR 1997 SC 2680(2683) : (1997) 1 SCC 556 : JT 1996 (10) SC 559.

[7981] ● Complainant—Meaning of.—The word "complainant" is not defined in the Code of Criminal Procedure, whether old or new. Any person can set the law in motion except in cases where the statute has specifically provided otherwise. The word "person" is defined in the IPC (S.11) as including "any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not" By virtue of S. 2 (y) of the new Code of CrPC, words and expressions used in that Code but not defined therein can have the same meaning assigned to them in the Penal Code. Thus, when the word "person" is specifically defined in the Penal Code as including a company, that definition can normally be adopted for understanding the scope of the word "complainant". However, the definition clauses subsumed in S. 2 of the new Code contains the opening key words that such definitions are to be adopted "unless the context otherwise requires". The scheme of the new Code of CrPC makes it clear that complainant must be a corporeal person who is capable of making physical presence in the Court. Its corollary is that even if a compliant is made in the name of an incorporeal person (like a company or corporation), it is necessary that a natural person represents such juristic person in the Court and it is that natural person who is looked upon, for all practical purposes, to be the complainant in the case. In other words, when the complainant is a body corporate, it is the de jure complainant, and it must necessarily associate a human being as de facto complainant to represent the former in Court proceedings. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, AIR 1998 SC 596 (600) : (1998) 1 SCC 687 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 475 : 1998 CrLJ 856 : 1998 CrLR 156.

[7982] ● Complainant be heard before proceedings quashed.—In the instant case the accused approached the High Court for quashing the criminal proceedings initiated by the appellant. It may not be that the complainant should have been made a party by the aforesaid himself in the petition the quashing the criminal proceedings, as the accused has no such obligation when the case was charge-sheeted by the Police. It is predominantly the concern of the State to continue the prosecution. But when the complainant wishes to be heard when the criminal proceedings are Sought to be quashed it would be a negation of justice to him if he is foreclosed from being heard even after he makes a request to the Court in that behalf. What is the advantage of the Court in telling him that he would not be heard at all even at the risk of the criminal proceedings initiated by him being quashed. It is no solace to him to be told that if the criminal proceedings are quashed he may have the right to challenge it before the higher forums. The scheme envisaged in the Code of Criminal Procedure indicates that a person who is aggrieved by the offence committed is altogether wiped out from the scenario of the trial merely because the investigation was taken over by the Police and the charge-sheet was laid by them. Even the fact that the Court had taken cognizance of the offence is not sufficient to debar him from reaching the Court for ventilating his grievance. Even in the Sessions Court, where the Public Prosecutor is the only authority empowered to conduct the prosecution as per Section 225 of the Code, a private person who is aggrieved by the offence involved in the case is not altogether debarred from participating in the trial. This can be discerned from Section 301 (2) of the Code. J.K. International v. State, Govt. of NCT of Delhi, AIR 2001 SC 1142 (1144) : (2001) 3 SCC 462 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 547 : 2001 CrLJ 1264 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 243 : JT 2001 (3) SC 130.

[7983] ● Appellant not accused but complainant.—The appellant filed an appeal in the High Court against the acquittal of the respondents who were acquitted after their trial. As neither the appellant nor her counsel was present, the High Court issued bailable warrant against the appellant. The appellant approached the Supreme Court but in the meantime, once again when the matter was listed in the High Court before another Bench of Single Judge, non-bailable warrant of arrest of appellant was issued.

The order of the High Court issuing non-bailable warrant seems to have been passed unmindful of the fact that the appellant was not an accused but a complainant who had preferred an appeal against acquittal. In case the appellant was not present, there may have been other options but certainly not for arrest of the complainant appellant who was complaining against the acquittal of some accused persons. The unfortunate sequel of such unmindful orders has been that the appellant was taken into custody and had to remain in Jail for some time, may be for a few days, but without any justification whatsoever. She suffered in view of the total non-application of mind at the stage of passing of the two impugned orders. Some degree of care is supposed to be taken before passing an order of issue of warrants, bailable or non-bailable. Such orders cannot stand. The orders passed by the High Court are liable to be quashed. As a token of compensation, a sum of Rs. 10,000 is directed to be paid to the appellant within a period of six weeks. Omwati v. State of U.P., (2004) 4 SCC 425 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1287 (1289).

[7984] ● Death of Complainant—Permission for continuation of proceedings.—To bring in application of Section 302 of the Code, permission to conduct prosecution has to be obtained from the Magistrate inquiring into or trying a case. The Magistrate is empowered to permit prosecution to be conducted by any person other than a police officer below the rank of Inspector; but no person other than the Advocate-General or the Government Advocate or a Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor shall be entitled to do so without such permission.

If any permission is sought for by the legal heirs of the deceased complainant to continue prosecution, the same shall be considered in its perspective by the Court dealing with the matter. It is brought to the notice that by order dated 13.10.2003 further proceedings before the Magistrate are stayed. In that background, Mr. Adsure submitted that the application shall be filed before this Court. If and when any application is filed the same shall be dealt with appropriately. Ordered accordingly. Balasaheb K. Thackeray v. Venkat, 2006 (5) SCC 530 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 630 : 2006 (6) Scale 557 : 2006 (5) Supreme 298 : 2006 (3) Crimes 52 (SC).

[7985] ● Date fixed for examination of defence witnesses—Presence of complainant not necessary.—In the instant case, the date was fixed for examining the defence witnesses. Appellant could have examined witnesses, if he wanted to do so. In that the appearance of complainant was not necessary. It was for her to cross-examine the witnesses examined on behalf of the defence. Presence of the complainant or her lawyer would have been necessary only for the purpose of cross-examination of the witnesses examined on behalf of the defence. If she did not intend to so, she would do so at her peril but it cannot be said that her presence was absolutely necessary. S. Anand v. Vasumathi Chandrasekhar, AIR 2008

SC 1296 : (2008) 4 SCC 67 : 2008 CrLJ 1943 (1945).

[7986] ● Dishonour of cheque—Death of Complainant.—The Complaint petition was filed in the year 2009. The Complainant died in 2003. A large number of dates were fixed for hearing of the case but the heirs of the complainant did not press their application for substitution. The accused had been attending the court for a long-time, except on some dates where when remained absent or was otherwise represented by his advocate. He attended the Court on less than 20 occasions after the death of the original complainant. In view of the above facts and circumstances, the acquittal of accused under Section 256, CrPC for non-appearance of the complainant for held proper. S. Rama v. Rami Reddy, AIR 2008 SC 2066 : (2008) 5 SCC 535 : 2008 CrLJ 2625 (2627) (SC).

COMPLAINT

[7987] ● Complaint.—In the present case, the accused who were all public servants, were prosecuted on a private complaint for offences under the Penal Code. Sanction for prosecution under Section 197 had not been obtained, and the accused objected to the trial on the ground of want of such sanction. The trial Court accepted the objection and discharged the accused. The complainant applied in revision to the High Court against this order of discharge, and the High Court affirmed the order and dismissed the application. The complainant appealed against the order of the High Court to the Supreme Court.

There was no reason to interfere with the order of the High Court. In a case in which, on the facts of the case, it is clear that the offence in question was committed by the accused while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, previous sanction of the Government is essential under Section 197 for the prosecution of the accused, and the trial Court has no competence to take cognizance of the offence without the requisite sanction and has no option except to discharge the accused if the sanction has not been obtained. Matajog Dubey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : 1956 SCJ 110 : 1956 SCA 22.

[7988] ● Complainant by returning officer.—In the present case, a District Magistrate was appointed a Returning Officer for the purposes of an election under the Representation of People Act, 1951. One V who was a candidate at the election filed before him a nomination paper containing a false declaration as to his caste, and a false affidavit supporting that declaration. Thereupon the Returning Officer filed a complaint under Section 200, CrPC against him charging him with an offence under Section 193 of the Penal Code. The accused V however treated the complaint as one under Section 476, CrPC, and filed an appeal against it under Section 476-B which was summarily rejected by the High Court. V appealed against the order of the High Court to this Court under special leave.

The Returning Officer appointed under the Act of 1951 is not a "Court" within the meaning of Section 195, CrPC, though he discharged quasi-judicial functions, and hence the offence under Section 193 of the Penal Code which was committed before him was not an offence "in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court" within the meaning of Section 195 (1) (b), CrPC. That being so, the complaint made by the Returning Officer is only a private complaint under Section 200, CrPC, and not one made under Section 476, CrPC and hence no appeal to the High Court under Section 476-B could lie against such a complaint. Under the circumstances, the order of the High Court rejecting V's appeal under Section 476-B, and treating the complaint made against him as being one under Section 200, and not under Section 476, is perfectly justified and proper. Virendra Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : 1956 SCJ 138 : 1956 SCA 410.

[7989] ● Magistrate's power to accept plea of self defence.—The question of law as to the scope and effect of Sections 202 and 203, CrPC which arose in the present case may be stated as under. When a Magistrate directs an inquiry under Section 202, CrPC for ascertaining the truth or falsehood of a complaint made to him under Section 201, and he receives from the officer to whom the inquiry is directed the statements of witnesses recorded by him and his report on the inquiry, if those statements and report support the plea of self-defense made by the person complained against (a) is it open to the Magistrate to hold on the basis of such statements and report that the plea can be accepted as true and to dismiss the complaint straightway without issuing a process against the person complained against, or (b) is he bound in every such case, as a matter of law, to issue a process against the person complained against and leave to him establish his plea of self-defence at his trial. Section 202 says that on receiving a complaint of an offence, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, postpone the issue of process against the person complained against, and may direct an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. In other words, the inquiry is for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is evidence to show that the complaint is true, that is, to support the complaint and to justify the issue of process and the commencement of proceedings against the person concerned. Section 202 does not say that at that stage the person complained against could be called upon to answer the accusation made against him; that can legally be done only when a process has been issued and he is put on his trial. Section 203 consists of two parts. The first part says that on receiving the record of the statements made by witnesses to the inquiring officer and his report on the result of the inquiry, the Magistrate must consider the material placed before him; and then the second part says that if after considering that material, there is, in his judgment, no sufficient ground for proceeding, he may dismiss the complaint, after briefly recording his reasons for doing so. It is manifestly clear from the provisions of Section 203 that the judgment which the Magistrate has to form must be based on the statements of the complainant and his witnesses and the result of the inquiry as contained in the report he has received. Vadilal Panchal v. Dattatraya, AIR 1960 SC 1113 : 1960 CrLJ 1499.

[7990] ● Scope of inquiry by—Magistrate under Section 202, CrPC.—In arriving at his judgment, the Magistrate is not bound to accept the report of the inquiring officer or the statement of any witness or any plea that is setup on behalf of the person complained against, and he is not fettered in any way except by judicial considerations. All that is required of him is that he must apply his judicial mind to the materials on which he has to form his judgment, and if after doing so the is of the opinion that a plea based on any exception under the Penal Code which is pleaded on behalf of the person complained against must be accepted, there is nothing in Section 203 or anywhere else in the Code which precludes him from accepting that plea, provided always that there are satisfactory and reliable materials on which he can base his judgment. If the Magistrate has not misdirected himself as to the scope of an inquiry under Section 202, and has applied his mind judicially to the materials before him as required by Section 203, it would be erroneous in law to hold that a plea based on an exception can never be accepted by him in arriving at his judgment. No doubt, the questions as to what bearing such a plea has on the case of the complainant and the witnesses who support him, and as to the extent to which they are falsified by the evidence of other witnesses, are questions which must be answered with reference to the facts of each case, and no universal rule can be laid in respect of such questions. Vadilal Panchal v. Dattatraya, AIR 1960 SC 1113 : 1960 CrLJ 1499.

[7991] ● Second complaint when permissible.—There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code or in any other statute which debars a complainant from preferring a second complaint on the same allegations if the first complaint did not result in a conviction or acquittal or even discharge. Section 300 of the CrPC, which debars a second trial, has taken care to explain that "the dismissal of a complaint or the discharge of an accused is not an acquittal for the purpose of this section." However, when a Magistrate conducts an inquiry under Section 202 of the CrPC and dismisses the complaint on merits, a second complaint on the same facts cannot be made unless there are very exceptional circumstances. Even so, a second complaint is permissible depending upon how the complaint happened to be dismissed at the first instance.

If the dismissal of the complaint was not on merit but on default of the complainant to be present, there is no bar in the complainant moving the Magistrate again with a second complaint on the same facts. But if the dismissal of the complaint under Section 203 of the Code was on merits, the position could be different. There appeared a difference of opinion earlier as to whether a second complaint could have been filed when the dismissal was under Section 203. The controversy was settled by this Court in Pramatha Nath Talukar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : (1962) 1 CrLJ 770 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297. Jatinder Singh v. Ranjit Kaur, AIR 2001 SC 784 (786) : (2001) 2 SCC 570 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 354 : 2001 CrLJ 1015 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 198.

[7992] ● Entertainment of second complaint where first complaint dismissed.—An order of dismissal of a complaint under Section 203, CrPC is no bar to the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts, but the second complaint can be entertained only in exceptional circumstances, such a under :

(a) where the previous order of dismissal was passed on an incomplete record, or.

(b) where the previous order was the result of a misunderstanding of the nature of the complaint, or was manifestly absurd or unjust, or

(c) Where new facts are adduced in the second complaint which could not, with reasonable—diligence, have been brought on the record in the previous proceeding.

It cannot be said to be in the interest of justice that after a decision has been given against the complainant upon a full consideration of his case, he or any other person should be given another opportunity to have the same complaint inquired into once again on the same facts.

With respect to the question whether, in a case in which a previous complaint has been dismissed, a fresh complaint containing the same allegations can be entertained on the ground that fresh evidence is forthcoming, the correct view of the law is that the second complaint can be entertained only when the fresh evidence is of such a nature that it could not even with reasonable diligence have been adduced in the previous proceeding. It cannot be the law that the complainant may first place before the Magistrate some of the facts and the evidence in his possession and then, if he fails, he can adduce some more evidence under a fresh complaint in respect of the same matter. That is not a correct view of the law.

Taking into consideration all the facts relating to the inspection of the documents taken by P before he filed his earlier complaint, it must be held that the fact in regard to the City Telephone Exchange was not a new fact which had come out after the previous complaint had been filed. It was a fact which could, with reasonable diligence, have been adduced in the earlier proceeding by P, and as it was not so adduced, it could not be made a ground for entertaining the present compliant by S. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770.

[7993] ● Dismissal of first complaint after considering evidence—Second complaint abuse of process of Court.—When, on a complaint filed before him, the Magistrate takes into consideration the whole evidence offered by the complainant, and then comes to the conclusion that the evidence is not worthy of credit, and that there is no satisfactory ground to proceed with the complaint, he is entitled to refuse the issue of process and dismiss the complaint under Section 203. In such a case, it cannot be said that the order of dismissal made by the Magistrate was manifestly absurd, unjust or foolish, nor it be said that the Magistrate ignored any principles which were necessary to apply under Sections 202 and 203, CrPC. In view of all the circumstances of the case, the bringing of the fresh complaint was a gross abuse of the process of the Court and was not with the object of furthering the interest of justice. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : (1962) 1 CrLJ 770.

[7994] ● Prosecution under Section 182, IPC must be on complaint in writing.—The offence under Section 182, Penal Code is complete when a person has moved a public servant for action. The section does not require that action must always be taken, and it is enough for the completion of the offence that the person who moves the public servant knows or has reason to believe that action would be taken on the false information given by him.

The words of Section 195, CrPC are explicit, and they show that in every instance the Court must be moved by the appropriate public servant before cognizance of an offence under Section 182, Penal Code is taken. There is an absolute bar under Section 195 against the Court taking cognizance of the case under Section 182, Penal Code, except upon a complaint in writing against the person concerned by the appropriate public servant, that is by the public servant to whom the false information was given or by his superior.

Where a person reports to a Tehsildar to take action on averment of certain facts, believing that the Tehsildar would take some action upon it, and the facts alleged in the report are found to be false, it is incumbent, if prosecution is to be launched, that a complaint in writing should be made by the Tehsildar, as being the public servant concerned in the case. In such a case, if no complaint by the Tehsildar is filed, and only a charge-sheet is put in by the police, it is not sufficient compliance with the requirements of Section 195(1)(a), CrPC even though the Tehsildar may have written to the police officer to put in the charge-sheet and this paper may have been filed along with the charge-sheet. Assumption of cognizance by the Magistrate of an offence under Section 182, Penal Code on such a charge-sheet filed by the police, without the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned is wrong and incompetent, and the trial being without jurisdiction ab initio, conviction cannot be maintained. Daulat Ram v. State of Punjab, AIR 1962 SC 1206 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 286 : 1962 ACrR 466 : 1962 AWR (HC) 868.

[7995] ● Complaint by Public Prosecutor in respect of newspaper publication defamatory of Governor.—Section 198-B is enacted for the specific purpose of allowing the State to prosecute a person for defamation of a high dignitary of a State or a public servant if the defamation is directed against the conduct of such person in the discharge of his public functions. The section provides that in such a case, cognizance of the offence may be taken upon a complaint made by the Public Prosecutor. However, sub-section (3) (a) of Section 198-B provides that in the case of the Governor of a State, no complaint shall be made by the Public Prosecutor except with the previous sanction of a Secretary to the Government "authorised by him in this behalf". Thus under Section 198-B (3)(a) two restrictions are placed upon the power of the Public Prosecutor to lodge a complaint with respect to the defamation of the Governor. The first is that the Secretary to the Government must have given the sanction to lodge the complaint, and the second is that the Secretary must have been authorised by the Governor in this behalf. This means that the Governor has first to consider for himself whether the alleged defamatory statement is of a kind of which he should take notice and seek to vindicate himself or whether the defamatory statement should be ignored as being either of a trivial nature or made by an irresponsible person. This decision whether a complaint should be lodged or not has to be taken by the Governor himself and he cannot leave it to some other person or an authority like the Government.

It is true that the sanction has to be given by the Secretary and hence it is the Secretary who is the sanctioning authority who has to apply his mind to the relevant facts of the case and come to a decision whether or not it is in the public interest to lodge a compliant before according sanction, and it is also true that in giving the sanction the Secretary does not merely perform a ministerial act. However, it is clear from the language of the Section that the initiative in the matter has to be taken by the Governor by indicating unequivocally that he deserves action to be taken, and that the authorisation required to be given by him is not an idle formality. Gour Chandra Rout v. Public Prosecutor, AIR 1963 SC 1198 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 194 : 1963 SCD 423.

[7996] ● Preliminary enquiry into complaint—Position of accused.—If on receiving a complaint of an offence the Magistrate decides to hold an inquiry into the case before issuing a process against the person complained against, he is not precluded from remaining present when the inquiry is held by the Magistrate. He may remain present either in person or through a counsel or agent with a view to being informed of what is going on. But since the very question for consideration is whether he should be called upon to face an accusation, he has no right to take part in the proceeding, nor has the Magistrate jurisdiction to permit him to do so. It would follow from this that it would not be open to the Magistrate to put any questions to witnesses at the instance of the person named as accused, but against whom process has not been issued, nor can the Magistrate examine any witnesses at the instance of such a person. Of course, the Magistrate himself is free to put such questions to the witnesses produced before him by the complainant as he may think proper in the interests of justice. Chandra Deo Singh v. Prakash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 397.

[7997] ● Magistrate to scrutinise complaint carefully.—No doubt, one of the objects behind the provisions of Section 202 of the Code is to enable the Magistrate to scrutinise carefully the allegations made in the complaint with a view to prevent the person named in the complaint as accused from being called upon to face a frivolous complaint. But there is also another object behind the provision, and that is to find out what material there is to support the allegations made in the complaint. Therefore, it is bounden duty of the Magistrate while making an enquiry to elicit all facts, not merely with a view to protect the interests of an absent accused person, but also with a view to bring to book a person or persons against whom grave allegations are made. Whether the complaint is frivolous or not, has, at that stage, necessarily to be determined on the basis of the material placed before him by the complaint. Whatever defence the accused may have can only be enquired into at the trial. An enquiry under Section 202 can in no sense be characterised as a trial for the simple reason that in law there can be but one trial for an offence. Permitting the accused to intervene during the enquiry would frustrate its very object, and that is why the legislature has made no specific provision permitting the accused person to take part in the enquiry. Chandra Deo Singh v. Prakash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 397.

[7998] ● Reasons for dismissal of complaint—Necessity.—Section 203 of the Code requires that when a Magistrate dismisses a complaint because in his judgment there is no sufficient ground for proceeding in the matter, he shall record his reasons for doing so. This is a mandatory provision, and if a Magistrate proceeds to dismiss the complaint without recording his reasons for the dismissal, the error is of a kind which goes to the root of the matter. Giving of reasons for making an order of dismissal of a complaint is a prerequisite of the order and absence of the reasons would make the order a nullity. Even assuming that Section 537 (a) of the Code applies to such a case, it cannot be said that the error is curable under that provision, because prejudice is writ large on the face of the order. The complainant is entitled to know why his complaint has been dismissed with a view to consider an approach to a revision Court, and being kept in ignorance of the reasons in the mind of the Magistrate clearly prejudices his right to move the revision Court, and where he takes the matter to the revision Court, renders his task before that Court difficult, particularly in view of the limited scope of the provision of Sections 438 and 439 of the Code (now Sections 400 and 401). In such a case justice demands that an order of dismissal of a complaint made by a Magistrate without recording his reasons must be set aside. Chandra Deo Singh v. Prakash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 397.

[7999] ● Scope and object of enquiry under Section 202(1), CrPC.—For determining the question whether a process against the accused should be issued or not, what the Magistrate has to be satisfied about is whether there is "sufficient ground for proceeding", and not whether there is sufficient ground for conviction. Whether the evidence is adequate for supporting the conviction is a question which can be determined only at the trial, and not at the stage of enquiry. The object of Section 202 is to enable the Magistrate to form an opinion as to whether there is evidence in support of the allegations made in the complaint and not whether the process should be issued or not, and to remove from his mind any hesitation that he may have felt upon the mere perusal of the complaint and the consideration of the complainant's evidence on oath. What the Magistrate has to see is whether there is evidence in support of the allegations made in the complaint, and not whether the evidence is sufficient to warrant a conviction. The enquiry under Section 202 is not to be likened to trial which can take place only after process is issued. No doubt, the object of the enquiry is to ascertain the truth or falsehood of the complaint, but that has to be done only with reference to the intrinsic quality of the statements made at the enquiry which mean, the statements on oath made by the complainant and by the persons examined at the instance of the complainant. Where there is a prima facie case, even though much can be said on both sides, the Magistrate is bound to admit the complaint and issue process and proceed with the case. Once the Magistrate is satisfied that there is a prima facie evidence against the accused even though the accused may have a defence that the offence was committed by some other person or persons the matter has to be left to be decided at the appropriate stage after the trials held by the appropriate Forum, and issue of process cannot be refused. Chandra Deo Singh v. Prakash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 397.

[8000] ● Complaint under Section 195(1)(c)—When necessary.—In the present case, B, who was a displaced person, made an application for compensation under the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954, to the Settlement Officer as required under the Act. It was found that the claim for compensation made by him was based on a fabricated verified claim. He had produced before the Settlement Officer, not the original verified claim but only its attested copy. He was convicted of the offence under Section 471, Penal Code, and the conviction was confirmed by the High Court.

In the appeal, one of the contentions raised was that Section 195(1)(c) applied as the Settlement Officer was a Court and the prosecution was incompetent in the absence of a complaint by the Settlement Officer.

It was not necessary to decide the question whether the Settlement Officer acting under the Act was a "Court" within the meaning of Section 195(1)(c) of the Code, because assuming that he was a Court the question still remained whether a complaint by him was necessary when the document produced before him was not the original forged document but only its copy.

Under Section 195(1)(c) a complaint by the Court is required when the prosecution is for the offence of forgery or using a forged document as genuine, when "such document" is produced or given in evidence in any proceeding in that Court. It is clear that it is only when the forged document itself is produced in Court that a complaint by the Court is required. Where what is produced before the Court is not the forged document itself but only a copy thereof, Section 195(1)(c) does not apply and a complaint by the Court is not necessary. Budh Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) 698 CrLJ 698.

[8001] ● High Court directing Registrar to file complaints against appellant—Duty of Supreme Court.—In an appeal against the order of the High Court directing its Registrar to make a complaint under Section 476, CrPC against a person for his prosecution for offences under Sections 193, 199 and 211 of the Penal Code, the Supreme Court will ordinarily do no more than examine whether the High Court has fairly considered the facts to reach the conclusion —

(a) that prima facie there is a good reason to launch the prosecution,

(b) that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, and

(c) that it is expedient in the interest of justice to order a prosecution.

If the Supreme Court is satisfied that the High Court has fairly and correctly viewed the case from this angle, it would not ordinarily interfere with the order made by the High Court. Hari Das v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1964 SC 1773 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 737.

[8002] ● Cognizance taken on complaint not on—Police Report.—When a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence a case is instituted in the Magistrate's Court and such a case is one instituted on a complaint. Again, when a Magistrate takes cognizance of any offence upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer it is a case instituted in the Magistrate's Court on a police report.

If the learned Magistrate had used the words "for investigation" instead of the words "for instituting a case" the order would clearly be under Section 202 of the Code of the Criminal Procedure. We do not think that the fact that he used the words "for instituting a case" makes any difference. It has to be noticed that the Magistrate not bound to take cognizance of the offences on receipt of the complaint. He could have, without taking cognizance, directed an investigation of the case by the police under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Once however he took cognizance he could order investigation by the police only under Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and not under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Cognizance having already been taken by the Magistrate before he made the order there was no scope of cognizance being taken afresh of the same offence after the police officer's report was received. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the case was instituted on Bhadai Shah's complaint on November 22, 1956 and not on the police report submitted later by the Police Sub-Inspector, Baikunthpur, The contention that the appeal did not lie under Section 417(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure must therefore be rejected. Jamuna Singh v. Bhadai Shah, AIR 1964 SC 1541 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 468 : 1964 (5) SCR 37.

[8003] ● Provision not to be evaded by changing garb or label of offence.—We have expressed the view that Section 195, CrPC does not bar the trial of an accused person for a distinct offence disclosed by the same or slightly different set of facts and which is not included within the ambit of the section, but we must point out that the provisions of Section 195 cannot be evaded by resorting to devices or camouflage. For instance, the provisions of the section cannot be evaded by the device of charging a person with an offence to which that section does not apply, and then convicting him of an offence to which it does, on the ground that the latter offence is a minor one of the same character, or by describing the offence as one punishable under some other section of the IPC, though in truth and substance the offence falls in the category of sections mentioned in Section 195, CrPC. Merely by changing the garb or label of an offence which is essentially an offence covered by the provisions of Section 195 prosecution for such an offence cannot be taken cognizance of by misdescribing it or by putting a wrong label on it. On behalf of the appellants it was suggested that the prosecution of the appellants under Section 353, IPC, was by way of evasion of the requirements of Section 195, CrPC. But we are satisfied that there is no substance in this argument and there is no camouflage or evasion in the instant case. Durgacharan Naik v. State of Orissa, AIR 1966 SC 1775 : 1966 CrLJ 1491 : (1966) 2 SCWR 162 : 1966 SCD 1043 : 32 CutLT 1106.

[8004] ● Complaint in writing when necessary for prosecution.—The gist of the provision is that offences of forgery of a document as described in Section 463, IPC and of using such forged documents if produced or given in evidence by a person other than a party to the proceeding in a Court, do not require a complaint in writing of the Court concerned, but prosecution in respect of offences under Sections 193 to 196, 199 and 200 (among others) committed in a judicial proceeding by a person (whether a party or not) requires a complaint in writing of the Court before which the offence is committed or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. It is this difference which has apparently induced the selection of Sections 465/471 rather that Sections 193/196 of the Indian Penal Code. The former sections do not require complaint by the Court but the latter sections do and this was the main point of controversy before us. S. Dutt v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 523 : 1966 CrLJ 459 : (1966) 1 SCR 493.

[8005] ● Case—Meaning of—Two cases instituted one on police report and other on complaint.—Section 417(3) (Section 378(3) of the new Code) refers to a case in which cognizance is taken upon a complaint of facts constituting an offence. The word "case" is not defined by the Code but its meaning is well understood in legal circles. In criminal jurisdiction it means ordinarily a proceeding for the prosecution of a person alleged to have committed an offence. In other contexts the word may represent other kinds of proceedings but in the context of the sub-section it must mean a proceeding which at the end results either in discharge, conviction or acquittal of an accused person.

In respect of a case of arson a police charge-sheet was filed against two persons. But being dissatisfied, the owner of the house filed a private complaint against those two persons and another for the same offence with the aid of Section 34, IPC, in the same Court. Both were committed, the two cases were separately numbered by the Sessions Court, one against the two accused in the police case and the other against the remaining accused impleaded in the complaint. The two cases ended in acquittal. The owner of the house applied under Section 417(3) for special leave to appeal against all the 3 accused but the High Court held that he had no locus standi to invoke Section 417(3). Hence this appeal. There could be no question of merger of the two cases because the identity of them was maintained till the end of the Sessions trial. Therefore the owner was entitled to move the High Court under Section 417(3) in his own case. The fact that his application for revision was rejected had no bearing on his statutory right to move the High Court. Bhimappa Basappa Bhu Sannavar v. Laxman Shivarayappa Samagouda, AIR 1970 SC 1153 : (1970) 1 SCC 665 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 263 : 1970 CrLJ 1132.

[8006] ● Complaint by Food Inspector.—It is competent for Municipal Board to file complaint by authorizing Food Inspector. Complaint filed by Food Inspector is competent. Dhian Singh v. Municipal Board, Saharanpur, AIR 1970 SC 318 : (1969) 2 SCC 371 : 1970 CrLJ 492 : 1970 (1) SCR 736.

[8007] ● Complaint includes oval allegation.—The word "complaint" has a wide meaning since it includes even an oral allegation. It may, therefore, be assumed that no form is prescribed which the complaint must take. It may only be said that there must be an allegation which prima facie discloses the commission of an offence with the necessary facts for the Magistrate to take action. Bhimappa Bosappa Bhu Sannavar v. Laxman Shivarayappa Samagouda, AIR 1970 SC 1153 : (1970) 1 SCC 665 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 263 : 1970 CrLJ 1132.

[8008] ● Complaint not equated to mere information or accusation.—Expression "complaint" in Section 72 cannot be equated to mere information or accusation. The context in which that expression is used in Section 72 indicates that it is a formal document indicting an officer of the postal departmental for a criminal offence. The purpose behind Section 72 is that officials of the postal department should not be harassed with frivolous prosecutions and that before any of the prosecutions contemplated by Section 72 is launched, the authorities mentioned in that section should have examined the appropriateness o launching a prosecution and either file a complaint themselves or authorise the filing of such a complaint. Such a requirement will not be satisfied if the concerned authorities merely ask the police to investigate into the case and take appropriate action. An information laid before the police or even a sanction granted for a prosecution by the police would not meet the requirements of Section 72.

If the legislature contemplated that a mere information to the police by the appropriate authority is sufficient then there was no need to enact Section 72. Further if all that was required was to obtain the sanction of the concerned authority then the legislature would have enacted a provision similar to Section 197 of the CrPC. The fact that the legislature did not choose to adopt either of the two courses mentioned above is a clear indication of the fact that the mandate of Section 72 is that there should be a formal complaint as contemplated by Section 4(1)(h) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Bholanath Amritlal Purohit v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1971 SC 194 : 1971 CrLJ 258 : 1971 (1) SCR 817 : 1971 All Cri R 462.

[8009] ● Jurisdiction of Magistrate to permit withdrawal of complaint.—When the High Court after giving a clear finding that on the allegations in the complaint the case initiated before the Magistrate as a warrant case was misconceived, directed the Magistrate to investigate whether the accused had not committed a different offence triable as a summons case, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to permit the complainant under Section 248 of the old Code (new Section 257) to withdraw the complaint and should acquit the accused once he permits the complaint to be withdrawn. Even if the order of the discharge is to be treated as passed in a case where summons case procedure is to be followed, it was within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate and hence it cannot be characterised as either illegal or not justified. Cricket Assn. of Bengal v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1971 SC 1925 : 1971 CrLJ 1432 : 1971 SCD 575 : 1971 UJ(SC) 535 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 383.

[8010] ● Purpose and object of creating bar against cognizance of private complaint.—The offences about which the Court alone, to the exclusion of the aggrieved private parties, is clothed with the right to complain, may, be appropriately considered to be only those offences committed by a party to a proceeding in that Court, the commission of which has a reasonably close nexus with the proceedings in that Court so that it can, without embarking upon a completely independent and fresh inquiry, satisfactorily consider by reference principally to its records the expediency of prosecuting the delinquent party. The purpose and object of the Legislature in creating the bar against cognizance of private complaints in regard to the offences mentioned in Section 195(1)(b) and (c) is both to save the accused person from vexatious or baseless prosecution inspired by feelings of vindictiveness on the part of the private complainants to harass their opponents and also to avoid confusion which is likely to arise on account of conflicts between findings of the Courts in which forged documents are produced or false evidence is led and the conclusions of the Criminal Courts dealing with the private complaint. It is for this reason that the Legislature has entrusted the Court whose proceedings had been the target of the offence of perjury to consider the expediency in the larger public interest, of a criminal trial of the guilty party. Patel Laljibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1971 SC 1935 : 1971 CRLJ 1437.

[8011] ● Scope and purpose of power to dismiss complaint.—An order of dismissal of a complaint under the section has to be made on judicially sound grounds. It can only be made where the reasons given disclosed that the proceedings cannot terminate successfully in a conviction. Though the Magistrate is not debarred, at that stage, from going into the merits of the evidence, the object of such consideration of the merits of the case could only be to determine whether there are sufficient grounds for proceeding further or not. The mere existence of some grounds which would be material in deciding whether the accused should be convicted or acquitted does not generally indicate that the case must necessarily fail. Such grounds may indicate the need for proceeding further in order to discover the truth after a full and proper investigation. If, however, a bare perusal of a complaint or the evidence led in support of it shows that essential ingredients of the offence alleged are absent or that the dispute is only of a civil nature or that there are such patent absurdities in evidence produced that it would be a waste of time to proceed further, the complaint could be properly dismissed under Section 203. What has to be determined at the stage of issue of process was not the correctness or the probability or improbability of individual items of evidence on disputable grounds, but the existence or otherwise of a prima facie case on the assumption of that what was stated could be true unless the prosecution allegations were so fantastic that they could not reasonably be held to be true. Debendra Nath v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 1607 : (1972) 3 SCC 414 : 1972 CrLJ 1037 : 1972 SCD 464.

[8012] ● Prohibition against complaint by private aggrieved party.—The words "to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court" in Section 195(1) (c) mean that the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, that is, after having become a party to the proceeding. Where the accused put forward an unknown lady to personate one lady and two of the accused identified that lady as the person impersonated before the sub-registrar in the Registration Office knowing that she was not in fact that particular lady, and after thus securing a sale deed the other accused filed an application before the Tahsildar for mutation of revenue entries in his favour and in those proceedings he used the said forged sale deed as genuine knowing it to be forged. On receipt of notice, the lady impersonated resisted the application by denying having ever sold the plot in question or having ever executed and got registered the alleged sale deed. Thereafter she filed a complaint against the appellants under Sections 465, 468 and 471, IPC. They were acquitted by the Sessions Court and upon appeal the High Court convicted them under Section 465, read with Section 109, IPC. It is contended in Court that even a prosecution for an offence under Section 465, IPC, required complaint by the Revenue Court concerned as such an offence was covered by Section 195(1) (c), CrPC. The contention is not correct. The prohibition contained in Section 195 (1)(c) should be confined only to those cases in which the offences specified therein were committed by a party to the proceeding in the character as such party. Otherwise, documents forged long before the commencement of a proceeding in which they might happen to be actually used or produced in evidence, years later by some other party would also be subject to Sections 195 and 476, CrPC. Raghunath v. State Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 1100 : (1973) 1 SCC 564 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 448 : 1973 CrLJ 858.

[8013] ● High Court in revision not justified in directing filing of complaint.—It is either the Court which tried the original offences or a Court to which the trial Court was subordinate that could make a complaint under Section 211, IPC, for making a false charge. The Court of the Additional District Magistrate is not subordinate to the High Court as provided by Section 195(3), CrPC (Section 195(4) of the new Code). When two Courts below have declined in their judicial discretion to direct the prosecution of the appellant, the High Court on revision was not at all justified in itself directing the filing of the complaint. At best, if it considered that the orders of the two Courts below were tainted with a serious legal infirmity or manifest error resulting in grave miscarriage of justice. It could have after quashing these orders, sent the cases back to the trial Court for reconsideration of the matter in accordance with law. Santokh Singh v. Izhar Hussain, AIR 1973 SC 2190 : (1973) 2 SCC 406 : 1973 CrLJ 1176 : 1973 SCD 611.

[8014] ● Magistrate at stage of issuing process concerned with allegations in complaint.—It was well-settled by a long catena of decisions of the Supreme Court that at the stage of issuing process the Magistrate was mainly concerned with the allegations made in the complaint or the evidence led in support of it and he was only to be prima facie satisfied whether there were sufficient grounds for proceeding against the accused. It was not his province to enter into a detailed discussion of the merits or demerits of the case nor could the High Court go into this matter in its revisional jurisdiction which was a very limited one. In proceedings under Section 202 the accused had got absolutely no locus standi and was not entitled to be heard on the question whether process should be issued against him or not. Once the Magistrate exercised his discretion, it was not for the High Court, or even the Supreme Court, to substitute its own discretion for that of the Magistrate or to examine the case on merits with a view to find out whether or not the allegations in the complaint, if proved, would ultimately end in conviction of the accused. Those considerations were totally foreign to the scope and ambit of an inquiry under Section 202 culminating into an order under Section 204 of the Code. The Supreme Court gave four cases (as mentioned in the head note) in which an order of the Magistrate issuing process against the accused could be quashed or set aside. In the instant case the Magistrate clearly applied his mind and had analysed the evidence and was satisfied of the existence of a prima faice case and as such he did not pass the order issuing process in a mechanical manner or just by way of routine. On the other hand, the High Court had gone into the whole history of the case, examined the merits of the evidence, the contradictions and improbabilities according to it and after a detailed discussion not only of the materials produced before the Magistrate but also of the documents which had been filed by the defence and it should not have been looked into at the stage when the matter was pending under Section 202, had held that the order of the Magistrate was illegal and was fit to be quashed. The approach of the High Court was entirely wrong. The accused had no locus stndi at the stage of Section 202 or 204 and the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to go into any materials or evidence produced by the accused who could be present only to watch the proceedings and not to participate in them. The order of the High Court suffered from a serious legal infirmity and the High Court had exceeded its jurisdiction in interfering in revision by quashing the order of the Magistrate. The appeal was allowed. Magawwa v. Veeranna, AIR 1976 SC 1947 : (1976) 3 SCC 736 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 507 : 1976 CrLJ 1533.

[8015] ● Second complaint—When lies.—In the present case a complaint was filed before the Magistrate who ordered an inquiry by another Magistrate under Section 202, CrPC. As the matter was pending inquiry and as the complainant was absent and did not show any interest in the inquiry ordered by the Court, the complaint was dismissed under Section 203, CrPC. Subsequently the complainant appeared before the Magistrate and filed an application for recalling his order. But the Magistrate without passing any order on that application, sent the matter to another Magistrate who reported that the inquiry had been completed. Thereafter the magistrate on the basis of the report of the inquiry officer passed orders taking cognizance of the case and summoned the accused. The High Court confirmed the said order. The accused (appellant) appealed to the Supreme Court by special leave. There is no provision in the CrPC empowering a Magistrate to review his own order or recall the same. The subordinate criminal Court has no inherent powers like the High Court. The Magistrate has absolutely no jurisdiction to recall the order dismissing the complaint. The remedy of the respondent is to move the Sessions Judge or the High Court in revision. The Magistrate has become functus officio and has no power to review or recall that order on any ground whatsoever. The order of recall is entirely without jurisdiction. All subsequent proceedings following upon recalling the said order will fall to the ground including the order summoning the appellant which should also be treated to be a nullity and destitute of any legal effect. It is suggested by the counsel for the respondent that the application given by him for recalling the order of dismissal of the complaint would amount to a fresh complaint. This Court is unable to agree with that contention because there was no fresh complaint and that the settled position of law is that a second complaint could lie only on fresh facts or even on the previous facts only if a special case is made out. The appeal is therefore allowed setting aside the order of the High Court maintaining the order of the Magistrate and the order of the Magistrate summoning the appellant is quashed. Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Kali Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2432 : (1977) 1 SCC 57 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 33 : 1978 CrLJ 187.

[8016] ● Complaint that accused took away certified copy meant for complainant.—Where the complaint was that the accused got the copy which was meant for the complainant, by signing his name, and the complainant also got his copy a few days after eventually, such a small matter could have been resolved by the Magistrate himself if he had perused the complaint carefully and it was certainly not a matter for which a detailed inquiry under Section 202, CrPC, was called for. Bindeshwari Prasad v. Kali Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2432 : (1977) 1 SCC 57 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 33 : 1978 CrLJ 187 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 42 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 214 : (1976) 78 Pun LR (D) 295 : (1976) 12 DLT 328 : (1976) 3 CrLT 632 : 1976 MLW (Cri) 190 : (1977) 1 SCR 125 : 1977 Pat LJR 208.

[8017] ● For taking cognizance on Police report—Examination of author of report not necessary.—Investigating Officer a DSP CBI filing a report containing allegations whereon special judge acting under the West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Special Courts Act 1949 took cognizance without examining the said Investigating Officer, held it is police report and for taking cognizance, examination of the author of the report is unnecessary. State of West Bengal v. Bijoy, AIR 1978 SC 188 : (1978) 1 SCC 173 : 1978 CrLJ 138(SC).

[8018] ● Complaint in respect of offence under Section 193, IPC.—Complaint in respect of an offence under Section 193, IPC, after making an enquiry under Section 340(1), CrPC, 1973, was filed, The complaint was an offshoot of a habeas corpus application filed before the High Court of Kerala. An order of the High Court made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of Section 340 is specifically excluded for the purpose of appeal to the superior Court under Section 341(1) of the new CrPC. This, therefore, is a new restriction in the way of the appellant in approaching the Supreme Court under Article 136. Whether suo motu or on an application by a party under Section 340(1) of the Code, a Court having been already seized of a matter may be tentatively of opinion that further action against some party or witness may be necessary in the interests of justice. In a proceeding under Section 340(1), the reasons recorded in the principal case, in which a false statement has been made, have a great bearing and indeed action is taken having regard to the over-all opinion formed by the Court in the earlier proceedings. At an enquiry held by the Court under Section 340(1), irrespective of the result of the main case, the only question is whether a prima facie case is made out which, if unrebutted, may have a reasonable likelihood to establish the specified offence and whether it is also expedient in the interests of justice to take such action. The party may choose to place all its materials before the Court at that stage, but if it does not, it will not be estopped form doing so later in the trial, in case prosecution is sanctioned by the Court. An enquiry, when made, under Section 340(1), CrPC, is really in the nature of affording a locus paenitentiae to a person and if at that stage the Court chooses to take action, it does not mean that he will not have full and adequate opportunity in due course of the process of justice to establish his innocence. It is well settled that the Supreme Court under Article 136 would come to the aid of a party when any gross injustice is manifestly committed by a Court whose order gives rise to the cause for grievance before it. Even when two views are possible in the matter it will not be expedient in the interests of justice to interfere with the order of the High Court unless the Supreme Court is absolutely certain that the two pre-conditions which are necessary for laying a complaint after an enquiry under Section 340 are completely absent. There is no need to interfere with the order of the High Court to scotch the complaint against the appellant at the threshold. K. Karunakaran v. T.V. Eachara Warrier, AIR 1978 SC 290 : (1978) 1 SCC 18 : 1978 CrLJ 339 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 521.

[8019] ● Complaint—Taking of cognizance of offence by Magistrate under Section 190, CrPC.—While deciding the question of bail, therefore, a Magistrate must be held to be acting as a Court and not in any other capacity, irrespective of the stage which the case has reached by then, that is, whether it is still under investigation by the police or has progressed to the stage of an inquiry or trial by the Magistrate. It at once follows that the taking of cognizance of any offence by a Magistrate under Section 190 of the Code is not a condition precedent for him to be regarded as a Court. Kamalapati Trivedi v. The State of West Bengal, AIR 1979 SC 777 : (1980) 2 SCC 91 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 347 : 1979 CrLJ 679 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 128.

[8020] ● Complainant right to choose Court.—Something more substantial, more compelling, more imperilling, from the point of view of public justice and its attendant environment, is necessary if the Court is to exercise its power of transfer. Assurance of a fair trial is the first imperative of the dispensation of justice. Rule is that normally the complainant has the right to choose any Court having jurisdiction and the accused cannot dictate where the case against him should be tried. Even so, the process of justice should not harass the parties and from that angle the Court may weigh the circumstances. Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, AIR 1979 SC 468 : (1979) 4 SCC 167 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 934 : 1979 CrLJ 458 : (1979) 2 SCR 378 : (1979) 2 SCJ 153 : 1979 UJ (SC) 120 : 1979 MLJ (Cri) 541 : 1979 MLW (Cri) 70.

[8021] ● Complaint finding regarding exact offence committed required.—In a prosecution for an offence under Section 467/109, IPC., under Section 476, CrPC, it was incumbent on the Court filing the complaint to record a clear finding regarding the exact offence which was committed by the appellants. In the absence of such a finding the order filing the complaint cannot be supported in law. Judgment of the Addl. District Judge is quashed. Har Gobind v. State of Haryana, AIR 1979 SC 1760 : (1979) 4 SCC 482 : 1979 CrLJ 1334 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 462 : 1979 UJ (SC) 661 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 329.

[8022] ● Complaint case.—On receipt of a complaint, the Magistrate may, instead of taking cognizance of the offence, order an investigation under Section 156(3). The police will then investigate and submit a report under Section 173(1). On receiving the police report the Magistrate may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) and straightway issue process. This he may do irrespective of the view expressed by the police in their report whether an offence has been made out or not. The police report under Section 173 will contain the facts discovered or unearthed by the police and the conclusions drawn by them therefrom. The Magistrate is not bound by the conclusions drawn by the police and he may decide to issue process even if the police recommend that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding further. The Magistrate after receiving the police report, may, without issuing process or dropping the proceeding decide to take cognizance of the offence on the basis of the compliant originally submitted to him and proceed to record the statements upon oath of the compliant and the witnesses present under Section 200 of the Code and thereafter decide whether to dismiss the compliant or issue process. The mere fact that he had earlier ordered an investigation under Section 156(3) and received a report under Section 173 will not have the effect of total effacement of the complaint and therefore the Magistrate will not be barred from proceeding under Sections 200, 203 and 204. Thus, a Magistrate may, in such a case, do one of three things: (1) he may decide that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding further and drop action; (2) he may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) on the basis of the police report and issue process; this he may do without being bound in any manner by the conclusion arrived at by the police in their report; and (3) he may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(a) on the basis of the original complaint and proceed to examine upon oath the complainant and his witnesses under Section 200. If he adopts the third alternative, he may hold or direct an inquiry under Section 202 if he thinks fit. Thereafter he may dismiss the complaint or issue process, as the case may be. H.S. Bains v. State (U.T. Chandigarh), AIR 1980 SC 1883 : 1980 CrLJ 1308 : (1981) 1 SCR 935.

[8023] ● Complaint case exclusively triable by Sessions Court.—At the stage of Ss. 203 and 204, CrPC in the case exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, all that the Magistrate has to do is to see whether on a cursory perusal of the complaint and the evidence recorded during the preliminary inquiry under Ss. 200 and 202, CrPC, there is prima facie evidence in support of the charge levelled against the accused. All that he has to see is whether or not there is "sufficient ground of proceedings" against the accused. At this stage, the Magistrate is not to weigh the evidence meticulously as if he were the Trial Court. The standard to be adopted by the Magistrate in scrutining the evidence is not the same as the one which is to be kept in view at the stage of framing charges to be applied at the stage of framing charges. A fortiori at the stage of S. 202/203, if there is prima facie evidence in support of the allegation in the compliant relating to a case exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, that will be a sufficient ground for issuing process to the accused and committing them for trial to the Court of Sessions. Even at the stage of framing charges the truth, veracity and effect of the evidence which the complainant produces or proposes to adduce at the trial is not to be meticulously judged. The standard of proof and judgment which is to be applied finally before finding the accused guilty or otherwise, is not exactly to be applied at the stage of framing charges.

Although the reasons given by the Magistrate for rejecting the evidence produced by the complainant in the preliminary inquiry against Suraj Bhan in regard to the accusation that he had shot dead Banta Singh, are not devoid of merit, yet, it appears that in meticulously appreciating the evidence, the Magistrate had over-stepped the limits of his discretion. In other words, this is not a case where the Magistrate lacked inherent jurisdiction to pass the impugned order. This is only a case where the Magistrate has committed an error amounting to an irregularity, if not a clear illegality, in the exercise of his jurisdiction. But in the facts of this case the error has not resulted in gross miscarriage of justice. Kewal Krishan v. Sauraj Bhan, AIR 1980 SC 1780 : 1980 Supp SCC 499 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 438 : 1980 CrLJ 1271 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 534.

[8024] ● "In or in relation to proceeding in that Court"—Meaning of.—Bail proceedings took place before Magistrate D and subsequent proceedings before Magistrate K commencing with presentation of chalan by Police for prosecution of one DK. Both Proceedings are parts of or stages of the same integral whole. DK was released on a bail application accompanied by an affidavit purported to have been sworn by one GRT as a surety. As the accused failed to appear, NBW was issued against him and notice to the surety. Surety appeared and filed a reply in writing contending that he never stood as surety, did not make any affidavit or sign on any application, affidavit or bail bond, that he was a literate while those documents bore thumb-impressions of the surety. After enquiry, the respondent and others were committed for trial and two of the accused convicted under Sections 419, 465 and 471, IPC, etc. The bail proceedings and subsequent trial proceedings before the Magistrate were part of entire judicial process and as such the offences relating to the surety bond were committed "in or in relation to" the proceedings before Magistrate K for the purpose of taking action under Section 476 of the Code. The High Court erred that the Magistrate was not competent to hold a preliminary enquiry under Section 476, CrPC and/or to make a complaint for prosecution of the respondents in respect of the offences for which they were convicted. Appeal was allowed and case sent back to the High Court for decision afresh. State of Maharashtra v. S.K. Bannu, AIR 1981 SC 22 : (1980) 4 SCC 286 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 951 : 1980 CrLJ 1280 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 638 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 385 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 166 : (1981) 1 SCJ 244 : 1981 SCCrR 173 : (1981) 1 SCR 694.

[8025] ● Scope and object of Section 468, CrPC—State or private complainant to abide law.—Object to put a bar of limitation on prosecutions is clearly to prevent the parties form filing cases after a long time, as a result of which material evidence may disappear and also to prevent abuse of the process of the Court by filing vexatious and belated prosecutions long after the date of the offence. Object which the statute seeks to subserve is clearly in consonance with the concept of fairness of trial as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution. It is of the utmost importance that any prosecution, whether by the state or a private complainant, must abide by the letter of law or take the risk of the prosecution failing on the ground of limitation. State of Punjab v. Sarwan Singh, AIR 1981 SC 1054 : (1981) 3 SCC 34 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 625 : 1981 CrLJ 722 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 289 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 225 : 83 PunLR 457 : 1981 Chand CrC (SC) 124 : 1981 ACrC 263 : (1981) 8 CrLT 188 : (1981) 2 SCJ 50 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 394.

[8026] ● Complaint case—Magistrate directing investigation.—In a private complaint, the Magistrate directed investigation under Section 202, CrPC. Report of investigation merely stated that a prima facie case was made out against four persons. Except expressing his opinion, no details of investigation made by him were mentioned nor did it refer to any witness examined by him or any document perused by him. As there was no additional material before him except what was already there when he ordered an investigation under Section 202, Magistrate was wrong in taking cognizance of the case and ordering issue of process to the accused merely on the basis of opinion expressed by the investigating officer and without any reference to any further material. Mohammad Atullah v. Ram Saran, AIR 1981 SC 1155 : (1981) 2 SCC 266 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 419 : 1981 CrLJ 616 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 192 : 1981 BLJ 964 : 1981 Chand CrC (SC) 96 : 1981 UJ (SC) 366 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 167 : 1981 Srinagar LJ (SC) 34.

[8027] ● Complaint under Section 18(9)(vi) of Drugs and Cosmetics Act read with Rule 65(7).—A complaint under Section 18(a)(vi) of the Act read with Rule 65(7) was filed against a partnership firm along with its partners. The High Court quashed the proceedings on the death of its managing partner on the ground that the complainant did not complain against the remaining partners by making out that they were responsible for the management and conduct of the firm. Extent of their liability would be established by the evidence during trial. The Magistrate perused the partnership deed filed with the complaint petition and prima facie found that respondents as well as deceased accused were liable for the offence and proceeded for trial. Judgment of the High Court is erroneous and liable to be set aside. Drugs Inspector, Bangalore v. B.K. Krishnaiah, AIR 1981 SC 1164 : (1981) 2 SCC 454 : 1981

SCC (Cri) 487 : 1981 CrLJ 627 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 196 : 1981 UJ (SC) 368 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 218 : 1981 Chand CrC (SC) 115.

[8028] ● Abetment of forgery—Private complaint—Maintainability.—The accused was convicted under Section 467 read with Sections 114 and 193, IPC. The High Court acquitted him holding that the complaint in criminal case ending in the conviction of accused was not filed by the Civil Court. Where in the course of same transaction an offence for which no complaint by a Court is necessary under Section 195 (1)(b), CrPC, and an offence for which, such a complaint is necessary are committed, it is not possible to split up and hold that prosecution of the accused for the offences not mentioned in Section 195(1)(b) should be upheld. Forged sale deed was not produced in the suit filed by the complainant for redemption of mortgage. Abetment of forgery was complete when the forged sale deed was fabricated and registered. No offence under Section 193, IPC, falling within the scope of Section 195(1)(b) of CrPC could be said to have been committed by the accused as the forged sale deed was not at all put in evidence at any stage in the redemption suit filed by the complainant. The Magistrate who committed the accused to the Sessions, could not have taken cognizance of any offence under Section 193, IPC, but the complaint could have been taken on file only for an offence under Section 467 read with Section 114, IPC, and no complaint by the Court for prosecuting the accused for the offence under Section 467 read with Section 114, IPC, is required and he could be validly convicted for that offence on the private complaint. The High Court was not right in holding, that the private complaint was totally not maintainable and in not only acquitting the accused for the offence of forgery but also in finding that he committed an offence under Section 193, IPC. Appeal was allowed so far as the offence under Section 467 read with Section 114, IPC, is concerned and the accused was found guilty. State of Karnataka v. Hemareddy alias Vemareddy, AIR 1981 SC 1417 : (1981) 2 SCC 185 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 395 : 1981 CrLJ 1019 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 278.

[8029] ● Complaint—Prosecution for possessing unaccounted Soda Ash.—It is alleged by the prosecution that the respondent is a dealer in soda ash. Upon an inspection of his premises on April 13th, 1979 the visiting officer found an unaccounted stock of 13 bags of soda ash, in relation to which, according to the complainant, the respondent could not produce the necessary papers. A complaint was filed alleging the aforementioned fact, though of course not mentioning the order, provision of which was violated. The respondent moved the High Court for quashing the proceedings. It was alleged on his behalf that soda ash is not an essential commodity or an article in respect of which there is any statutory order compelling the dealer in the commodity either to display a list of prices or declare the stock. This submission found favour with the High Court. Surprisingly, counsel appearing on behalf of the State did not point out the order now relied upon. The whole basis of the approach of the High Court gets knocked out once the order is shown to be existing and in force. It would be unwise to ignore the existence of a subsisting order and to dispose of a proceeding as if no such order is there. State of Bihar v. Gulab Chand Prasad, AIR 1982 SC 58 : (1981) 4 SCC 248 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 827 : 1982 CrLJ 198 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 24 : 1982 CAR 243.

[8030] ● Complaint—Order in appeal under Section 341, CrPC—Remedy against Section 482 expressly over-rules bar in Section 341.—Order passed in appeal under Section 341, CrPC, is not revisable by the High Court under Section 397(2) but it is entitled to examine the matter under Section 482 which expressly overrules the bar contained in Section 341 of the Code. The High Court merely indicated that the case was not a fit case for invoking inherent power without at all applying its mind whether or not it was a fit case for filing complaint. Appeal was allowed and case remitted to the High Court to exercise its powers under Section 482. Lalit Mohan v. Benoyendra Nath, AIR 1982 SC 785 : (1982) 3 SCC 219 : 1982 CrLJ 625 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 329(2) : (1982) 1 APLJ (SC) 16 : 1982 1 SCJ 192(1).

[8031] ● Magistrate issuing summons to accused.—Where the Magistrate issued summons to the accused, it was quashed by the Sessions Judge and the same was affirmed by the High Court. The Supreme Court set aside those orders and restored the order issuing summons, and observed that if, eventually, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that no offence was made out against the accused, it was open to him to discharge or acquit the accused, as the case might be. The matter was thus remitted to the trial Court. Khacheru Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1982 SC 784 (2) : (1982) 3 SCC 218 : 1982 CrLJ 629 (2) : 1982 ALJ 285 (1) : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 329(1) : (1982) 1 SCJ 191 (2).

[8032] ● Certain Rent Control Proceedings pending—Allegation of filing forged and false rent receipt.—In the instant case, the facts were: Certain Rent Control proceedings were pending between the landlord and a school run by a society of which the appellant and her husband were the Secretary and the Joint Secretary respectively. Those proceedings were for eviction and recovery of arrears. While so, the landlord filed a complaint alleging that some rent receipts had been forged and filed in those proceedings. Whether those receipts were forged or genuine was yet to be finally decided by the Rent Controller. After registering the complaint, recording the complainant's evidence and perusing the various documents filed by the landlord, the Magistrate issued process by summoning the appellant and her husband, for offences under Sections 467/471 read with Section 34, IPC. As the appellants attempt to get it quashed under Section 482, CrPC, by the High Court, this appeal was filed. The question raised was whether the process issued against the appellant should be quashed or not. It is in evidence that the appellant is not a party to the pending proceedings and her husband conducting them on behalf of the school. In the complaint it was also not stated that the appellant took any part in bringing about the lease transaction. It was alleged that her husband filed the forged and false rent receipts and the only averment against the appellant was that as Secretary she had been benefitted from the said forgery and fraud. Such an averment is clearly inadequate and insufficient to fasten liability on her for the alleged offences. Hence no case is made out against the appellant for issuance of process and the same deserves to be quashed. Manju Gupta v. M.S. Paintal, AIR 1982 SC 1181 : (1982) 2 SCC 412 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 459 : 1982 CrLJ 1393 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 287 : 1982 BLJR 382 : 1982 ACrC 211 : 1982 UJ (SC) 471 : (1982) 22 DLT 217 : 1982 SCCrR 202 : 1982 CrAppR (SC) 180 : 1982 Rajdhani LR 592 : (1982) 2 Ren CJ 193 : 1982 BLJR 415 : 1982 Chand CrC (SC) 86 : 1982 LS (SC) 57 : 1982 (2) Chand LR (Cri) 179 : (1982) 2 SCWR 198.

[8033] ● Complaint by Court Whether pre-condition for taking cognizance of such offence by criminal Court.—Rent Control Officer is one such officer who is authorised by the District Magistrate to exercise, perform and discharge the powers, functions and duties conferred upon him by Chapter III of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction Act, 1972 Act which includes Section 15(1) and (2).

Therefore, the proceeding commencing upon the intimation of a vacancy for release or allotment of the premises will be conducted before the Rent Control Officer. Now, sub-section (2) of Section 34 extracted hereinbefore would show that the expression. 'District Magistrate' which would include any officer authorised by him to exercise, perform and discharge his power, functions and duties, shall be deemed to be a civil Court within the meaning of Sections 480 and 482 of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1898. Sections 345 and 346 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, are corresponding to Section 480 and 482 of the CrPC 1898. As a corollary it would follow that the Rent Control officer shall be deemed to be a civil Court within the meaning of Sections 345 and 346 of CrPC, 1973 and in view of sub-section (2) of Section 34 of the Rent Act, shall be a civil Court for the purpose of Section 193, IPC, Section 195(3), CrPC provides that the expression 'Court' in Section 195(1)(b)(i) will include a tribunal constituted by or under a Central, Provincial or State Act if declared by that Act to be a Court for the purposes of the section. Section 195(1)(b)(i) provides a precondition for taking cognizance of an offence under Section 193, IPC, viz. a complaint in writing of the Court. In view of the specific provision made in sub-section (2) of Section 34 of the Rent Act that for the purposes of Sections 345 and 346, CrPC., Rent Control Officer, assuming it to be a Tribunal as held by the High Court and not a Court, would be deemed to be a civil Court and, therefore, for purposes of Section 193 and 228, IPC a fortiori any proceeding before it would be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of Section 193, IPC. If, therefore, according the complainant false evidence was given in a judicial proceeding before a civil Court and the persons giving such false evidence have committed an offence under Section 193, IPC in or in relation to proceeding before a Court no Court can take cognizance of such offence except on a compliant in writing of that Court. The grievance is that a false affidavit was filed by the appellants which was receivable as evidence in the allotment proceedings before the Rent Control Officer which as a Tribunal would be as hereinabove discussed, comprehended in the expression 'Court'. If false evidence in the form of affidavits filed by the appellants was given before Rent Control Officer, a civil Court for the purpose of Section 193, IPC that being a judicial proceeding Section 195(1)(b)(i) would be attracted. For the purpose of Section 195(1)(b)(i) a complaint by the Court is a pre-condition for taking cognizance of such offence by a criminal Court. If this pre-condition is not satisfied the Court will have no jurisdiction to take cognizance. Chandrapal Singh v. Maharaj Singh, AIR 1982 SC 1238 : (1982) 1 SCC 466 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1982 CrLJ 1731 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 126.

[8034] ● Dismissal of complaints against one of person complained against.—An inquiry under Section 202 of the Code is not in the nature of a trial for there can be in law only one trial in respect of any offence and that a trial can commence only after process is issued to the accused. The said proceedings are not strictly proceedings between the complainant and the accused. A person against whom a complaint is filed does not become an accused until it is decided to issue process against him. Even if he participates in the proceedings under Section 202 of the Code, he does so not as an accused but as a member of the public. The object of the inquiry under Section 202 is the ascertainment of the fact whether the complaint has any valid foundation calling for the issue of process to the person complained against or whether it is a baseless one on which no action need be taken. The section does not require any adjudication to be made about the guilt or otherwise of the person against whom the complaint is preferred. Such a person cannot even be legally called to participate in the proceedings under Section 202 of the Code. S.S. Khanna (Dr.) v. Chief Secretary, Patna, AIR 1983 SC 595 : (1983) 3 SCC 42 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 562 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 329 : 1983 CAR 269.

[8035] ● Forgery—Absence of complaint by Court.—In this case the short question was, whether in the absence of necessary complaint by the civil Court where a money receipt alleged to have been forged was produced, prosecution for offences punishable under Sections 467 and 471 read with Section 34, IPC, would be maintainable. Once it was accepted that Section 463 defined forgery and Section 467 punished forgery of a particular category, the provisions in Section 195(1)(b)(ii), CrPC, would immediately be attracted and on that basis the prosecution would no be maintainable in the absence of a complaint by the Court. The High Court took a wrong view of the matter. As the Court was of the view that if the prosecution was allowed to continue serious prejudice would be caused to the appellants, and they would be called upon to face a trial which would not be sustainable, the appeal was allowed. The complaint case filed against him was quashed. Gopalakrishna Menon v. D. Raja Reddy, AIR 1983 SC 1053 : (1983) 4 SCC 240 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 822 : 1983 CrLJ 1599 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 449 : (1983) 2 Crimes 584 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 421 : 1983 AWC 827 : 1983 ACrR 450 : (1983) 2 CrLC 527.

[8036] ● Infringement of trade mark—Complaint.—From a combined reading of Section 4(2) with Section 190 of the CrPC, it transpires that upon a complaint filed by a person setting out facts therein which constitute the offence before a Magistrate specified in Section 190, the Magistrate will be competent to take cognizance of the offence irrespective of the qualifications or eligibility of the complainant to file the complaint. It must, however, be conceded that where a provision to the contrary is made in any statute, which may indicate the qualification or eligibility of a complainant to file the complaint, the Magistrate before taking cognizance is entitled and has power to inquire whether the complainant satisfies the eligibility criteria. Anyone can set the criminal law in motion by filing a complaint of facts constituting an offence before a Magistrate entitled to take cognizance under Section 190 and unless any statutory provision prescribes any special qualification or eligibility criteria of putting the criminal law in motion, no Court can decline to take cognizance on the sole ground that the complainant was not competent to file the complaint. Vishwa Mitter v. O.P. Poddar, AIR 1984 SC 5 : (1983) 4 SCC 701 : 1984 CrLJ 1.

[8037] ● Complaint by owner of registered trade mark.—The present complainant, who is not only a dealer in these beedies manufactured and sold by the registered owner of the trade marks, but he is also the constituted attorney of the owners of the registered trade marks. To say that the owner of the registered trade mark can alone file the complaint is contrary to the provisions of the statute and commonsense and reason. Therefore, the order of the learned Magistrate dismissing the complaint at the threshold on the ground that the present appellant has no cause of action to file the complaint is utterly unsustainable and must be quashed and set aside. Vishwa Mitter v. O.P. Poddar, AIR 1984 SC 5 : (1983) 4 SCC 701 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 29 : 1984 CrLJ 1 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 621.

[8038] ● Allegation in complaint not constituting offence—Quashing of.—One Shankar Lal Bharagava, who was officiating as Stamp Reporter in the Registry of the Allahabad High Court, with the aid of Suresh Chandra Srivastava and Bishan Swarup, who were clerks of Advocates, removed used stamps and out of them reused three Court-fee stamps of the value of Rs. 1,000/- each. When the matter was detected, an enquiry was ordered and the Judicial Department of the High Court reported to the Registrar that Court-fee stamps of the value of Rs. 23,007-50 were missing from another judicial file. The enquiry further revealed that in several other cases also Court-fee stamps had been taken out from the original file and reused in new cases. The Registrar, with the permission of the Chief Justice of the High Court, reported the matter to the I. G. of Police, U.P., who ordered the C.I.D. of U.P. to investigate into the matter and ultimately three charge-sheets were submitted for offences under Sections 262, 263, 467, 471, 420 and 120-B, IPC. The respondents filed an application before the High Court contending that as offences under Sections 467, 471 and 120-B, IPC, fell within the purview of Section 195, CrPC, no prosecution could be launched without the procedure laid down in Section 195 being followed. It was common ground that no complaint as required by the mandatory provisions of Section 195 of the Code having been made, the proceedings could not have proceeded. The High Court held that so far as the offences under Sections 467, 471 and 120-B, IPC, were concerned as they fell within the ambit of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) of the Code, no cognizance could be taken by the Magistrate without a complaint being filed. On the facts mentioned above, it was clear that in the complaint sent by the Registrar to the I.G.P., offences mentioned were offences under Sections, 262, 263, 467, 380, 420 and 471 but from a perusal of the recitals in the original memorandum which formed the basis of the complaint it seems that the only offences which have been made out would be offences under Sections 262, 263, 380 and 420 which are obviously not covered by Section 195 of the Code. The fact that some persons aided and abetted the detaching of the used stamps from the old files and reusing them in the other cases does not involve any process of forgery or use of a forged document. The law is now well settled that where an accused commits some offences which are separate and distinct from those contained in Section 195, Section 195 will affect only the offences mentioned therein unless such offences form an integral part so as to amount to offences committed as a part of the same transaction in which case the other offences also would fall within the ambit of Section 195 of the Code.

The High Court was fully justified in quashing the proceedings against the accused as far as offences under Sections 467, 471 and 120-B, IPC were concerned, not because they were covered by Section 195 of the Code but because allegations contained in the complaint did not constitute these offences. The High Court was further fully justified in directing that other offences mentioned above did not require a complaint under Section 195 and would have to be tried. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Suresh Chandra Srivastava, AIR 1984 SC 1108 : (1984) 3 SCC 92 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 415 : 1984 CrLJ 926 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 269.

[8039] ● Case on police report and on complaint—Clubbing of.—It is not permissible for the Court under S. 223 of the CrPC to club and consolidate the case on a Police challan and the case on a complaint where the prosecution versions in the Police challan case and the complaint case are materially different, contradictory and mutually exclusive.

In the facts and circumstances of this particular case, the proper course to adopt is to direct that the two cases should be tried together by the learned Additional Sessions Judge but not consolidated, i.e., the evidence should be recorded separately in both the cases one after the other except to the extent that the witnesses for the prosecution who are common to both the cases be examined in one case and their evidence be read as evidence in the other. The learned Additional Sessions Judge should after recording the evidence of the prosecution witness in one case, withhold his judgment and then proceed to record the evidence of the prosecution in the other case. Thereafter, he shall proceed to simultaneously dispose of the cases by two separate judgments taking care that the judgment is one case in not based on the evidence recorded in the other case. Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1985 SC 404 : (1985) 1 SCC 422 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 93 : 1986 CrLJ 831 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 66 : (1985) 1 SCWR 311 : (1985) 87 PunLR 103 : 1985 AWC 120 : 1985 ACrR 99 : 1985 SCCrR 178 : 1986 CrAppR (SC) 26 : (1985) 1 ACrLR 454 : 1985 CutCrJ (SC) 43 : (1985) 1 CrLC 413 : 1985 ACrC 36.

[8040] ● Warrant case on private complaint—Discharge of accused.—The CrPC contemplates discharge of the accused by the Court of Session under Section 227 in case triable by it; cases instituted upon a police report are covered by Section 239 and cases instituted otherwise than on police report are dealt with in Section 245. The three sections contain somewhat different provisions in regard to discharge of the accused. Under Section 227, the trial Judge is required to discharge the accused if he considers that there is not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. Obligation to discharge the accused under Section 239 arises when "the Magistrate considers the charge against the accused to be groundless." The power to discharge is exercisable under Section 245(1) when "the Magistrate considers, for reasons to be recorded, that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction...." It is a fact that Sections 227 and 239 provide for discharge being ordered before the recording of evidence and the consideration as to whether charge has to be framed or not is required to be made on the basis of the record of the case, including documents and oral hearing of the accused and the prosecution or the police report, the documents sent along with it and examination of the accused and after affording an opportunity to the two parties to be heard. The stage for discharge under Section 245, on the other hand, is reached only after the evidence referred to in Section 244 has been taken. Notwithstanding this difference in the position there is no scope for doubt that the stage at which the Magistrate is required to consider the question of framing of charge under Section 245(1) is a preliminary one and the test of "prima facie" case has to be applied. In spite of the difference in the language of the three sections, the legal position is that if the trial Court is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out, charge has to be framed. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, AIR 1986 SC 2045 : (1986) 2 SCC 716 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 256 : 1986 CrLJ 1922 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 266.

[8041] ● Complaint against accused for offences under Section 120-B, IPC and Section 5 of Imports and Exports (Control) Act.—In the instant case, a complaint under Section 120-B, IPC, and Section 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 was filed by the Deputy Chief Controller of Imports and Exports and the Metropolitan Magistrate, Delhi took cognizance and issued summons. Attempt to import beef tallow by virtue of transfer of license was one of the main basis of the complaint. Beef tallow was prohibited. From the complaint the part attributed to accused 2 to 9 in the commission of the offence was for their having sat in the Board of Directors meeting and approving the letters of credit and the deed of hypothecation executed by the Managing Director of J.S.V.L. (A-1). The accused filed a petition under Section 482, CrPC, for quashing the complaint. The High Court allowed the same and dismissed the complaint. The High Court Judge was of the view that there was no conspiracy and such a complaint should not have been lodged. The test of the power under Section 482 of the Code is that taking the allegations and the complaint, without adding or subtracting anything, if no offence is made out then only the High Court would be justified in quashing the proceedings and that such a power should be used very sparingly. The High Court Judge quashed the complaint on the ground that the subsequent report by the C.B.I. which had not yet been proved and considered in the background of the allegations made and secondly that some of the parties alleged to be in the conspiracy were not made parties. There are no grounds of quashing the criminal proceedings where on prima facie being satisfied the Magistrate had taken cognizance. At that stage it could not be said that no prima facie case for trial has been made out. The High Court in the instant case has exceeded that jurisdiction. The Court is not concerned with the truth or otherwise of the allegations made in the complaint that would be investigated at the time of the trial. J.P. Sharma v. Vinod Kumar Jain, AIR 1986 SC 833 : (1986) 3 SCC 67 : (1986) 2 SCC 281 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 216 : 1986 CrLJ 917 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 244 : 1986 SCCrR 127 : (1986) 2 Crimes 1 : (1986) 2 Supreme 194 : 1986 CrAppR (SC) 98 : (1986) 2 CrLC 184 : 1986 CurCrJ (SC) 199 : (1986) 30 DLT 313.

[8042] ● Complaint case—Dismissal for default.—In this case, the appellants were the accused in a complaint filed by the 1st respondent in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate, I Class, New Delhi, disclosing an offence punishable under Sections 67 and 72-C(1)(a) of the Mines Act, 1952, read with Regulation 106 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation, 1961. On the date when the accused was summoned to appear, neither the complainant nor the accused were present and so the Magistrate dismissed the complaint in default and for want of prosecution. A week later the complainant filed an application for restoration of the complaint. The Magistrate restored the said complaint and issued summons to the accused. The accused moved the Magistrate that his order restoring the complaint was without jurisdiction since he had become functus officio by his first order. The Magistrate rejected the said application as he was of the view that he had inherent powers under the CrPC to review and recall his earlier orders. The revision petition filed before the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate was dismissed. Another revision before the High Court was also dismissed relying upon an earlier decision of the same Court to the effect that a criminal Court had certain inherent powers, though not specifically mentioned in the Code. No criminal Court had any inherent jurisdiction not provided for in the CrPC. A second complaint is permissible in law if it can be brought within the limitations imposed by the Supreme Court in Pramatha Nath Taluqdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876. Filing of a second complaint is not the same thing as reviving a dismissed complaint after recalling the earlier order of dismissal. So far as the accused is concerned, dismissal of a complaint for non appearance of the complainant or his discharge or acquittal on the same ground is a final order and in the absence of any specific provision in the Code, a Magistrate cannot exercise any inherent jurisdiction. What the Court has to see is not whether the Code contained any provision prohibiting a Magistrate from entertaining an application to restore a dismissed complaint, but the task should be to find out whether the said Code contained any provision enabling a Magistrate to exercise an inherent jurisdiction which he otherwise did not have. The order of the High Court is set aside and the original order of the Magistrate dismissing the complaint was restored. A.S. Gauraya v. S.N. Thakur, AIR 1986 SC 1440 : (1986) 2 SCC 709 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1986 CrLJ 1074 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 225 : 1986 SCCrR 122 : 1986 East CrC 497.

[8043] ● Complaint—Quashing of charge by High Court in revisional or reference power.—In the instant case, the Magistrate recorded the evidence produced by the complainant against the respondent for an offence of contravention of Section 4((1) of the Sugar (Packing and Marking) Order, 1970, punishable under Section 3 r/w. Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, pursuant to the complaint instituted by the District Magistrate. Having taken into consideration the oral and the documentary evidence, the Magistrate formed the opinion that there was ground for presuming that the accused had committed an offence triable by him and framed a charge. The accused invoked the revisional jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge under Section 435 of the Code (Section 397 of the new Code) and challenged the order of framing a charge against them. The Sessions Judge rejected the same. Thereupon the accused invoked the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 439 of the Code (Section 401 of the new Code). The High Court allowed the revision application and quashed the charge framed against the accused. The State filed the present appeal by special leave. Since the Magistrate had formed the opinion that there were grounds to presume that the accused had committed the offence and since it could not be said that the prosecution was false, frivolous or vexatious or one which was an abuse of the process of law, the High Court should not have quashed the charge in exercise of the revisional and reference powers. The appeals are allowed and the case remanded to the Magistrate. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Man Mohan, AIR 1986 SC 1652 : (1986) 2 SCC 587 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 214 : 1986 CrLJ 1245 : 1986 ACrC 271 : 1986 CurCrJ 213.

[8044] ● FIR about incident registered suo motu after gap of more than three years—No private complaint filed.—Where the FIR regarding an incident was registered suo motu by the police more than 3½ years later and there was no reason why a private complaint was not made contemporaneously, the witnesses were examined for the first time 1 or 2 months later, chances of conviction were too far-fetched and bleak, allowing such a prosecution to proceed would only be harassment to the parties and wastage of public time. Order permitting withdrawal of such a case is proper. Tek Chand v. Tek Chand, AIR 1987 SC 349 : (1986) SCC (Supp) 533 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 167 : 1987 CrLJ 329 : JT 1986 SC 943 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 8 : 1987 MLW (Cri) 4 : 1987 (1) Crimes 102 : 1987 SimLC 204 : 1987 CalCrLR (SC) 53 : (1986) 2 UJ (SC) 597 : (1987) 1 Supreme 89 : 1987 Chand CrC (SC) 50 : 1987 CrAppR (SC) 45 : (1987) 1 SCJ 216.

[8045] ● Acquittal on private complaint—Interference by Supreme Court.—Normally, this Court does not interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of private complaint. Where the High Court allowed the appeal acquitting the appellants without sending for the records of the trial Court and hearing the parties on merits, the procedure adopted is not in consonance with the procedure established by law and results in flagrant miscarriage of justice. Even though the Public Prosecutor conceded that there was no evidence, the High Court had to satisfy itself upon perusal of the records that there was no reliable and credible evidence to warrant the conviction of the accused. The matter was remanded for disposal afresh. Biswanath Ghosh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1987 SC 1155 : (1987) 2 SCC 55 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 259 : 1987 CrLJ 1052 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 408 : JT 1987 SC 555 : (1987) 2 SCJ 266 : 1987 SCCrR 141 : 1987 Rajdhani LR 198 : 1987 Cal CrLR (SC) 110 : 1987 ACrR 375 : 1987 ACrC 218 : (1987) 1 CrLC 632 : (1987) 2 ACrLR 155 : 1987 AWC 843 : (1987) 2 ChandLR (Cri) 584 : (1987) 2 RecCrR 113 : 1987 MLW (Cri) 270.

[8046] ● Complaint by woman kept in illegal confinement.—Where a woman complained of having been kept in illegal confinement against her wishes before the Supreme Court but her application was placed before the Court 2½ months after its receipt in the Registry, the Supreme Court deprecated the said practice and directed the person against whom that complaint was made to produce the said woman before the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate and ordered an enquiry by him into the matter and to report to the Supreme Court. Nilima Priyadarshina v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 2021 : 1988 CrLJ 197 : JT 1987 (3) SC 6 : 1987 Pat LJR (SC) 31 : 1987 Cal CrLR (SC) 92 : 1987 East CrC 808 : 1987 BLJ 893.

[8047] ● Direction by committee for filing of complaint under Section 178, CrPC.—According to the committee's own opinion formed in the light of facts and circumstances all those persons to whom notices under S. 8-B of the Commission of Inquiry Act, 1952 are issued have to be examined at the end of the inquiry.

If three persons referred to in the judgment to whom notices under S. 8-B of the Commission of Inquiry Act, 1952 have been issued are to be examined even according to the Committee at the end of the inquiry there is no justifiable reason to deny the same treatment to the petitioners Ms. Kiran Bedi and Jinder Singh who are in the same position as those three persons. The action to the Committee in asking them to be cross-examined at the beginning of the inquiry appears to us to be discriminatory. Mere non-issue of notice to them under S. 8-B ought not to make any difference if they otherwise satisfy the conditions mentioned in S. 8-B. The issue of such a notice is not contemplated under S. 8-B of the Act. It is enough if at any stage the Commission considers it necessary to inquire into the conduct of any person. Such person would thereafter be governed by S. 8-B of the Act. The Committee should have considered whether the petitioners were entitled to be treated as persons governed by S. 8. B of the said Act before asking them to get into the witness box for being cross-examined.

If the Committee had found that the petitioners were covered under S. 8-B, then perhaps they would not have been asked to get into the witness-box for being cross-examined till the end of the inquiry. The Committee would have then asked them to give evidence alongwith others who were similarly placed at the end of the inquiry. Taking into consideration all the aspects of the case we feel that the committee should not have in the circumstances of the case directed the filing of a complaint against either of the petitioners for an offence punishable under S. 178, IPC. The complaint was quashed. Kiran Bedi v. Committee of Inquiry, AIR 1988 SC 2252 : (1988) 4 SCC 49 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 895 : 1989 CrLJ 303 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 796 : JT 1988 (3) SC 372.

[8048] ● Original of partnership deed forged not produced in Court—Absence of complaint from civil Court.—Where the accused did not file the original partnership deed but filed a copy of the forged deed in the suit in the civil Court and obtained a temporary injunction on the strength of its copy, the defendant filed a police report against the accused alleging that they had committed offences punishable under Sections 465, 468, 471, 474, 120-B and 420, IPC, and a challan was filed before the Magistrate who framing charges against the accused only under Sections 465, 468, 120-B and 420, IPC., but refrained from framing any charge under Sections 471 and 474, IPC, holding that he could not take cognizance under those sections in the absence of a complaint from the civil Court. The State preferred a revision against the Magistrate's order but the same was upheld by the Additional Sessions Judge. The de facto complainant moved the High Court under Section 482, CrPC, who reversed the decision holding that as the document was not forged during the period it was in Court custody the bar of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) of the Code was not attracted and directing the Magistrate to frame fresh charges. Thereupon the appellants challenged the order before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that Section 195 of the Code was attracted when such offence was alleged to have been committed in respect of "a document produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in any Court", and accordingly held that since the document alleged to have been forged was not in the present case produced in the Court, the provisions of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) had no application and confirmed the High Court's direction, but on a different ground as indicated. Sushil Kumar v. State of Haryana, AIR 1988 SC 419 : 1987 Supp SCC 654 : 1988 CrLJ 427 : (1988) 1 SCJ 28 : 1988 Rajdhani LR 28 : 1988 Pat LJR (SC) 1.

[8049] ● Commission of inquiry not Court.—A Commission of Inquiry is not a Court properly so called. A Commission is obviously appointed by the appropriate Government "for the information of its mind" in order for it to decide as to the course of action to be followed. It is, therefore, a fact finding body and is not required to adjudicate upon the rights of the parties and has no adjudicatory function. The Government is not bound to accept its recommendations or act upon its findings. The mere fact that the procedure adopted by it is of a legal character and it has the power to administer an oath will not impart to it the status of a Court.... It is familiar feature of modern legislation to set up bodies and tribunals, and entrust them with the work of a judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative character, but they are not Courts in the accepted sense of that term...... The least that is required of a Court is the capacity to deliver a "definitive judgment", and merely because the procedure adopted by it is of a legal character and it has power to administer an oath will not impart to it the status of a Court. That being so, it must be held that a Commission of Inquiry appointed by the appropriate Government udder S. 3(1) of the Commission of Inquiry Act is not a Court for the purposes of S. 195 of the CrPC. Baliram Waman Hiray (Dr.) v. Mr. Justice B. Lentin, AIR 1988 SC 2267 (2284, 2286) : (1988) 4 SCC 419 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 941 : 1989 CrLJ 306 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 799 : JT 1988 (4) SC 265 : 1988 (3) Crimes 655.

[8050] ● Complaint alleging offence under Section 5 of Imports and Exports (Control) Act.—The appellant who is a Deputy Chief Controller of Imports and Exports filed a complaint alleging commission of offence under Section 5 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947 by respondents No 1 and 2. To this complaint Proviso (a) of Section 200 of the CrPC is applicable. Therefore, cognizance was taken of the offence alleged without examining the appellant. An application was filed on behalf of the two accused for recall of the summonses and dismissal of the complaint. The application was dismissed by the Magistrate. His order was affirmed by the High Court and the Supreme Court. Thereafter an application was filed before the Magistrate that the Managing Director be discharged as the company was prepared to prepare its guilt. The Magistrate by a reasoned order dismissed the application and directed that the trial should proceed against both. The order was assailed by the respondents before the High Court. The criticism advanced by the learned Judge against the trying Magistrate is wholly untenable and is perhaps applicable to the learned Judge. If reference had been made to Section 200, proviso (a) of the CrPC, what has been advanced as the most impressive ground for quashing the proceedings against the respondents No. 2, could not at all have been accepted. The learned judge of the High Court did note the fact that the licensee was a company but lost sight of the fact that a company by itself could not act obviously the company has to act through same one. In the petition of the complaint there was clear allegation that the Managing Director had committed the offence acting on behalf of the licencee. The order of the High Court has got to be reversed. While we have no sympathy for the respondent No. 2 and we are clearly of the opinion that he has no equity in his favour and the delay after the complaint had been filed has been mostly on account of his mala-fide move, we do not think it would be in the interest of justice to allow a prosecution to start 20 years after the offence has been committed. T.J. Stephen v. Parle Bottling Co. (P) Ltd., AIR 1988 SC 994 (995, 996) : 1988 Supp SCC 458 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 690 : 1988 CrLJ 1095 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 231.

[8051] ● Cognizance of offence—Complained of—Power of Magistrate.—In this case, the appellant gave a report to the Commissioner of Police, Bangalore, against the 2nd respondent alleging that he had committed the offence of cheating and criminal breach of trust. A case was registered against him as Crime No. 145/ 9180 under Sections 408 and 420, IPC, and was investigated. Subsequently, the succeeding Inspector of Police at the Station sent a 'B' report to the Court stating that further investigation was not required as the case was of a civil nature. Aggrieved by that report, the appellant approached the II Addl. Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Bangalore, for the report being quashed and permission granted to him to prove the commission of the offences by the 2nd respondent. The Magistrate, after perusing the investigation records, came to the view that prima facie case was made out against R-2 and consequently he passed an order for a Calendar case being registered against him for the said offences and for summons being issued to him under Section 204, CrPC. Thereupon, R-2 filed a petition under Section 482 of the Code before the High Court seeking the quashing of the order of the Magistrate. The High Court allowed the petition and set aside the order of the Magistrate on the ground that he had not followed the procedure prescribed by the Code for taking cognizance of the case. The High Court held that on receipt of the 'B' report the Magistrate would have issued notice to the appellant to find out whether he was disputing the correctness of the 'B' report and if so, to comply with the requirements of Section 200 of the Code. The High Court further stated that only after examining the appellant on oath and his witnesses, the Magistrate should have decided whether a case should be registered and process issued to the accused. Aggrieved by the order of the High Court, the appellant preferred this appeal. The position is now well settled that upon receipt of a police report under Section 173(2) of the Code a Magistrate is entitled to take cognizance of an offence under Section 190(1)(b) of the Code even if the police report is to the effect that no case is made out against the accused. The Magistrate can take into account the statements of the witnesses examined by the police during the investigation and take cognizance of the offence complained of and order issue of process to the accused. Section 190(1)(b) does not lay down that a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence only if the investigating officer gives an opinion that the investigation has made out a case against the accused. The Magistrate can ignore the conclusion arrived at by the investigating officer and independently apply his mind to the facts emerging from the investigation and take cognizance of the case, if he thinks fit, in exercise of his powers under Section 190(1)(b) and direct the issue of process to the accused. The Magistrate is not bound in such a situation to follow the procedure laid down in Sections 200 and 202 of the Code for taking cognizance of a case under Section 190(1)(a) though it is open to him to act under Section 200 or Section 202 also. The High Court was therefore wrong in its view of the matter. The fact that in this case the investigation had not originated from a complaint preferred to the Magistrate but had been made pursuant to a report given to the police would not alter the situation in any manner. Even if the appellant had preferred a complaint before the Magistrate and the latter had ordered investigation under Section 156(3), the police would have had to submit a report under Section 173(2). The order of the High Court is therefore set aside and that of the Metropolitan Magistrate restored. India Carat (Pvt.) Ltd. v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1989 SC 885 (890) : (1989) 2 SCC 132 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 306 : 1989 CrLJ 963 : 1989 (2) Crimes 483 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 298 : JT 1989 (1) SC 308.

[8052] ● Prosecution witness preferring to write complaint on spot rather than going to Police Station.—It is also surprising that PW-1 preferred to write down the complaint on the spot rather than run down 100 paces to the Police Station to inform the Police. PW-1 was asked to explain this conduct and he stated that he preferred to write down the complaint as "I had doubt that the Police will not pay any heed and will not take down the report correctly." There was no reason for PW-1 to entertain such a doubt. He does not say that he had any such experience in the past. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Madan Mohan, AIR 1989 SC 1519 (1522) : (1989) 3 SCC 390 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 585 : 1989 CrLJ 1485.

[8053] ● Complaint—Cognizance of by Magistrate.—Section 482, CrPC empowers the High Court to exercise its inherent powers to prevent abuse of the process of Court. In proceedings instituted on complaint exercise of the inherent power to quash the proceedings is called for only in cases where the complaint does not disclose any offence or is frivolous, vexatious or oppressive. If the allegations set out in the complaint do not constitute the offence of which cognizance is taken by the Magistrate, it is open to the High Court to quash the same in exercise of the inherent powers under Section 482, CrPC. It is not, however, necessary that there should be a meticulous analysis of the case, before the trial to find out whether the case would end in conviction or not. The complaint has to be read as a whole. If it appears on a consideration of the allegations, in the light of the statement on oath of the complainant that ingredients of the offence/offences are disclosed, and there is no material to show that the complaint is mala fide, frivolous or vexatious, in that event there would be no justification for interference by the High Court.

The High Court without proper application of the principles that have been laid down by this Court in Sharada Prasad Sinha v. State of Bihar, AIR 1977 SC 1754 : (1977) 1 SCC 505 : 1977 CrLJ 1146; Trilok Singh v. Satya Deo Tripathi, AIR 1979 SC 850 and Municipal Corpn. of Delhi v. Purshotam Das, AIR 1983 SC 158 : (1983) 1 SCC 9 : 1983 CrLJ 172, proceeded to analyse the case of the complainant in the light of all the probabilities in order to determine whether a conviction would be sustainable and on such premises arrived at a conclusion that the proceedings are to be quashed against all the respondents. The High Court was clearly in error in assessing the material before it and concluding that the complaint cannot be proceeded with. In the absence of the circumstances to hold prima facie that the complaint is frivolous when the complaint does disclose the offence, there is no justification for the High Court to interfere. Dhanalakshmi v. R. Prasanna Kumar, AIR 1990 SC 494 (495) : 1991 SCC (Cri) 142 : 1990 CrLJ 320 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 25 : JT 1989 (4) SC 318 : (1990) 1 UJ (SC) 129 : (1990) 1 Crimes 26.

[8054] ● Complaint by Principal officer against Master of ship for initiation of inquiry under Section 363 of Merchant Shipping Act.—The Principal Officer, Mercantile Marine Department filed a complaint against Master of Ship for initiation of an inquiry proceeding under Section 363 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1955 in respect of a shipping casualty occurring due to sheer negligence and gross incompetence on the part of the Master of the ship. We have to examine whether the complaint was ex facie under Section 363 of the Mercantile Shipping Act, 1955. It nowhere mentions that the Central Government had such reason to believe. It nowhere mentions that it was a transmission of the statement of a case to the Court by the Central Government. It also nowhere mentions that the reason to believe had been found otherwise than in the course of a formal investigation into the shipping casualty. On the other hand, in para 2 it says that the complainant is the Principal Officer who is competent person appointed under the Act to complain about the negligence of the accused. There is no doubt that he is not empowered under Section 363. In para 6, the complaint says that the Court under Section 363 has got powers to make an inquiry into the charges of incompetency or misconduct of the accused and para 8 mentions : "The inquiry so as to cancel the certificate of the competency of the master, namely, the accused which has been granted by the Central Government may be recommended under this Act after holding the above said inquiry and thus render justice." Therefore, prima facie the complaint does not disclose the ingredients required under Section 363 and the complaint is quashed.

[8055] ● Private complaint.—If one reads carefully the provisions relating to trial of summons-cases, the power to drop proceedings against the accused cannot be denied to the Magistrate. Section 204 of the Code indicates that the proceedings before the Magistrate commences upon taking cognizance of the offence and the issue of summons to the accused. When the accused enters appearance in response to the summons, the Magistrate has to take proceedings under Chapter XX of the Code. But the need to try the accused arises when there is allegation in the complaint that the accused has committed the crime. If there is no allegation in the complaint involving the accused in the commission of the crime, it is implied that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed against the accused.

It is open to the accused to plead before the Magistrate that the process against him ought not to have been issued. The Magistrate may drop the proceedings if he is satisfied on reconsideration of the complaint that there is no offence for which the accused could be tried. It is his judicial discretion. No specific provision is required for the Magistrate to drop the proceedings or rescind the process. The order issuing the process is an interim order and not a judgment. It can be varied or recalled. The fact that the process has already been issued is no bar to drop the proceedings if the complaint on the very face of it does not disclose any offence against the accused.

It is important to state that for a Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence as against the Chief Editor, there must be positive averments in the complaint of knowledge of the objectionable character of the matter. The complaint in the instant case does not contain any such allegation. In the absence of such allegation, the Magistrate was justified in directing that the complaint so far as it relates to the Chief Editor could not be proceeded with. To ask the Chief Editor to undergo the trial of the case merely on the ground of the issue of process would be oppressive. K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, AIR 1992 SC 2206 : (1992) 1 SCC 217 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1992 CrLJ 3779 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 170.

[8056] ● Issue of process—Complaint case.—The complaint was laid, impleading the Chairman, the Managing Director of the Bank by name and a host of officers. There lies responsibility and duty on the Magistracy to find whether the concerned accused should be legally responsible for the offence charged for. Only on satisfying that the law casts liability or creates offence against the juristic person or the persons impleaded then only process would be issued. At that stage the Court would be circumspect and judicious in exercising discretion and should take all the relevant facts and circumstances into consideration before issuing process lest it would be an instrument in the hands of the private complainant as vendetta to harass the persons needlessly. Vindication of majesty of justice and maintenance of law and order in the society are the prime objects of criminal justice but it would not be the means to wreak personal vengeance. Considered from any angle we find that the respondent had abused the process and laid complaint against all the appellants without any prima facie case to harass them for vendetta. Punjab National Bank's v. Surendra Prasad Sinha, AIR 1992 SC 1815 : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 499 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 149 : 1992 CrLJ 2916.

[8057] ● Inherent Powers—Exercise of—Quashing of complaint for.—The High Court can exercise its inherent jurisdiction of quashing a criminal proceeding only when the allegations made in the complaint do not constitute an offence or that the exercise of the power is necessary either to prevent the abuse of process of the Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. When the allegations in the complaint prima facie constitute the offence against any or all of the respondents in the absence of materials on record to show that the continuance of the proceedings would be an abuse of the process of the Court or would defeat the ends of justice, the High Court would not be justified in quashing the complaint.

In the light of the allegations made in the complaint and the materials produced in support of those allegations by the appellant before the Magistrate, the issue of the process to the respondents No. 1 and 2 who are alleged to have solemnised the second marriage during the subsistence of an earlier valid marriage of the appellant is proper and when process has been issued, the proceedings have to continue in accordance with law against respondents No. 1 and 2. Chand Dhawan v. Jawahar Lal, AIR 1992 SC 1379, 1382 : (1992) 3 SCC 317 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 636 : 1992 CrLJ 1956 : JT 1992 (3) SC 618 : (1992) 2 Crimes 342 : (1992) 2 UJ (SC) 46.

[8058] ● Criminal complaint if counter version to be deployed.—Each and every suggestion of the defence at the investigation need not lead the investigator to follow it. Had there been a counter version and the suggestion was that the Investigating Officer had wrongly not recorded a cross FIR it might have been different matter. Various avenues were then open to Kirtan Bhuyan and his co-accused to approach the higher Officers in the Police hierarchy or to approach the District Magistrate for the purpose. Furthermore, a criminal complaint could have been filed if the counter version had to be deployed. The suspicion entertained by the defence could, thus, be of no consequence for that alone could not lead to discredit the eye-witnesses to the crime. It was at best a rumour. Kirtan Bhuyan v. State of Orissa, AIR 1992 SC 1579 (1580) : 1992 CrLJ 2325.

[8059] ● Complaint—Offence of bigamy.—The scope of enquiry under Section 202, CrPC is extremely restricted only to finding out the truth or otherwise of the allegations made in the complaint in order to determine whether process should issue or not under Section 204 of the CrPC or whether the complaint should be dismissed by resorting to Section 203 of the CrPC on the footing that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding on the basis of the statements of the complainant and of his witnesses, if any. But the enquiry at that stage does not partake the character of a full dress trial which can only take place after process is issued under Section 204 of the CrPC calling upon the proposed accused to answer the accusation made against him for adjudging the guilt or otherwise of the said accused person. Further, the question whether the evidence is adequate for supporting the conviction can be determined only at the trial and not at the stage of the enquiry contemplated under Section 202 of the CrPC. To say in other words, during the course of the enquiry under Section 202 of the CrPC, the Enquiry Officer has to satisfy himself simply on the evidence adduced by the prosecution whether prima facie case has been made out so as to put the proposed accused on a regular trial and that no detailed enquiry is called for during the course of such enquiry. In the present case, the High Court appears to have exceeded the scope of the enquiry contemplated under Section 202 of the CrPC and has gone into the question of sufficiency of evidence for conviction of the offence of bigamy.

The Learned Counsel for respondents submitted that in the absence of an allegation that the marriage of Darshan Singh with Jagjit Kaur was celebrated in accordance with the customs dispensing with requisite ceremonies and usage applicable to the parties, the alleged first marriage should be held to have been not proved in the eye of law. This submission is not available to him at this stage because that can be determined only at the stage of the trial of the case. Mohinder Singh v. Gulwant Singh, AIR 1992 SC 1894 (1897) : (1992) 2 SCC 213 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 3161 : 1992 CrLJ 3161 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 136 : JT 1992 (1) SC 542 : (1992) 1 Crimes 603.

[8060] ● Action of Police Officer complaint against.—In the present case, the allegation in the complaint is that while the appellant was called by service of a summons presumably to inquire into allegations of illicit distillation, the respondent had merely used it as an excuse to secure his presence but in fact his real intention was to beat him to prevent him from complaining against those who were paying him "mamool" money. Thus according to the appellant the respondent bore a grudge against him and therefore, he misused his power, issued a summons, secured his presence and then tortured him. He has charged for the commission of offences under Sections 341, 342, 363, 364, 506 (II part) and 307, IPC.

Before a prosecution is terminated as barred by Section 53 of the T.N. District Police Act, 1869, the accused must show that on the allegations made in the complaint it ex facie appears that the Act complained of was done under the provisions of the said Act or under the provisions of any other law for the time being in force whereunder the powers are conferred on the police. The prosecution launched against the respondent is in regard to the ill-treatment meted out to the appellant when the latter visited the former in response to the summons.

It was no part of the duty under the T.N. District Police Act, 1869, Criminal Procedure Code or any other law for the time being in force conferring power on the Police to beat and torture the appellant when he presented himself before the respondent in response to the summons. By no stretch of reasoning can it be said that the respondent's action of torturing the appellant was in discharge of any duty or function under the Act or under any other law. It is also difficult to say, if the allegations made are taken at their face value, that the respondent's action was incidental to or in furtherance of his duties and functions under any law. In order to avail of the benefit of Section 53 of the Act, the respondent must show that he acted under the Act or any other law. Merely because the appellant was called through a summons issued under law, the conduct of beating and torturing the appellant on the latter appearing in obedience to the summons cannot establish any nexus between the official act of issuance of summons and the action of the respondent on the appearance of the appellant. Unless a relationship is established between the provision of law under which the respondent purports to act and the misdemeanour complained of, the provisions of Section 53 of the Act will not be attracted. The High Court committed an error in quashing the complaint on the ground that it was barred by Section 53 of the T.N. District Police Act, 1869. *S.P.
